The United States is perhaps warned to consider its recourse in the event that the English Government does as the British press advises and wholly refuses to consider any solution whatever, resting stubbornly upon a blank assertion of its contractual right of veto. Could the canal never be built? The United States have observed this prohibition for fifty years, practically during the Clayton convention's life, for it was regretted almost as soon as made. There are those who think Americans have observed the obligation better than England, and that the contract is voidable for England's fault. There is no disposition to repeat here the errors charged against the English press, and the point is waived. There is distinguished English authority for the right to dissolve obligations unlimited in time and which have lost their virtue through alteration of conditions constituting the consideration upon which they were based originally. J. S. Mill recognizes a right superior to the faith of engagements. If engagements are thus lawlessly violated, "it does not entitle those who imposed the conditions to consider the lawlessness only, and to dismiss the more important consideration whether, even if it was wrong to throw off the obligation, it would not be still more wrong to persist in enforcing it. If though not fit to be perpetual, it has been imposed in perpetuity" the question when it becomes right to throw it off is but a question of time. If the disposition of the United States were, in fact, such as the British press assumes in its implacable refusal even to consider the merits of the American proposal, would there not be haste to cite these and other authorities as to when and how treaties may be annulled? But, in fact, we find that the American press chiefly confines itself to discussing annulment by mutual procedure. Only a small portion discusses annulment unilaterally, and objects to it by distinguishing the present case from cases justified by Mill. This is not a treaty imposed by force after a war, it is argued, but a free assumption of obligations, upon an exchange of considerations, and should be observed punctiliously. If the United States were to denounce the Clayton convention, as some Senators propose no free and easily, the world doubtless cease to be a law of the United States, but it would not cease to be effective in international law, and the obligation would survive to a perhaps untimely settlement. Even if the case for abrogation be as complete as the Senate thinks, it is not proper that the United States should assume to be judge and jury in its own case. A decent regard for the opinion of mankind, no less becoming new than previously, would dictate that some impartial opinion should be taken, as by arbitration before The Hague tribunal, or otherwise. In proportion as this is distasteful, it behooves all concerned to agree with the party of the other part, if, in fact, officials unlike some editors, are disposed to do business in good temper. Let the English answer be received in the same manner as we wish our own to be. If the negative be unqualified, it need not be final, and success in another attempt will be promoted by courteous acceptance for the present, and a better presentation of a stronger case next time. If the acceptance be qualified and upon terms, let their merits be weighed. It may turn out that the British Foreign Office may have more to say for itself than despondent British editors have imagined. Americans who have already supported Secretary Hay's work would not be surprised to find their arguments reinforced in manner to make dissentients thoughtful. Perhaps, after all, reversion to the Hay-Pauncefote convention, with less sweeping modifications, may satisfy all parties. The only thing which ought to be quite certain is that mutual agreement should be reached, even though England misunderstands the United States, and the London press has therefore taken up an attitude perhaps susceptible of reconsideration, despite rather uncompromising utterances. Americans are scarcely aware of how prudently they should proceed. For example, Americans are unaware that they are in the midst of another Venezuela crisis. Englishmen of another sort, for they are assured by their secular Bible that all the evil passions they then suffered by are again aroused, and her friends upon the Continent are advising her to prepare a Fashoda for the United States. Let Senators then be prudent as well as patriotic, for susceptibilities have been aroused which have nothing to do with the merits of the case.

EDWARD A. BRADFORD.

WEDDINGS OF A DAY.

Schull—Edson.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Miss Loraine Edson, daughter of Joseph R. Edsen of this city, and Lieut. Herman Walter Schull of the Second United States Artillery, now stationed in Cuba, were married this evening at St. Thomas's Episcopal Church, the Rev. Dr. Elliott officiating. The bridegroom and his best man, Lieut. Herbert W. Wigmore, and the ten ushers all wore the full uniform of their rank and corps. The ushers were Lieut. Foley, Lieut. Arnold, and Lieut. Comley, all of the cavalry, and Lieut. Gallup of the artillery, Lieut. Ansell, Lieut. Wells, Lieut. McCrew, Lieut. Johnson, and Lieut. Dorey, all of the infantry.

The bridesmaids were Miss Marion Townsend of New York, and Miss Elizabeth Edson of this city, both cousins of the bride; Miss Elizabeth Jenkins of Chicago, Miss Mabel Fry of Pittsburg, Miss Alice Clark of Orange, N. J.; Miss Clare Johnson of Cleveland, all classmates of the bride at Vassar; Miss Mary Parker Warner, Miss Sue Reed Tunstall, Miss Mary Pierce, and Miss Mary Lyman, all of Washington. The maid of honor was the schoolgirl sister of the bride, Miss Florelle Edson.

Among the relatives and friends in the specially reserved pews were Mrs. Marion Goodall, the grandmother of the bride, and Mrs. Henry C. Townsend, both of New York. The reception and supper at the home of the bride's parents on Q Street, which followed the ceremony, was confined entirely to the bridal party and immediate relatives, with some few young friends of the bride.

Lieut. and Mrs. Schull left for a short honeymoon trip, but will return to Washington for a visit before sailing for Cuba, Feb. 13.

Corey—Stevenson.

The marriage of Miss Carolyn Stevenson, only daughter of Mrs. B. and the late Benjamin F. Stevenson, to Charles H. Corey, youngest son of the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Corey of Richmond, Va., took place Wednesday at the bride's home, on One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Street. Owing to recent deaths, only near relatives were present. The marriage ceremony was performed by the Rev. A. W. H. Hodder of the Sixtesnth Baptist Church.

"UNLEAVENED BREAD."

An Ironical Comedy Made Out of the Novel Well Acted.

"Unleavened Bread," a dramatization of Robert Grant's much talked-of novel, by Leo Ditrichstein, was remarkably well acted in the Savoy Theatre last night, and is likely to be a live theatrical topic for a few weeks at least. It was received with abundant applause by an uncommonly friendly and appreciative audience.

After the spirited "scene of two" in which Selma White and Flossie Williams come to an "understanding" in Act. III., there was a prolonged demonstration, and both Judge Grant and Mr. Ditrichstein were compelled to try to make speeches. The principal actors were summoned again and again, and, in the circumstances, they deserved all the praise they got. Not a single rôle was badly acted, while both Elizabeth Tyree and Eleanor Robson achieved veritable triumphs, the former in the cruelly satirical personification of crude and vulgar feminine ambition and selfishness yclept Selma White; the latter as the gay, self-poised, well-equipped, and successful young aspirant for social distinction, Flossie Williams.

If, in this first hasty notice of the play, one is impelled to lay most stress on Miss Robson's acting it is only because she is the younger actress and the least familiar to our playgoers. The sensibility, delicacy, finish, and charm of her work are rare.

But Miss Tyree falls at no point in her denotement of the inherent selfishness, smartness, boundless ambition to be talked of, excessive love of praise, and cruelty of Selma; her purposeful nature, and her utter lack of the saving grace of humor.

Judge Grant intimated, in his brief remarks, that she represented his own idea of his character, and probably the personage of the novel could be more vividly depicted on the theartical stage.

Selma White may be a caricature, and she is certainly not, in the truest sense, a "type." She is rather a conglomerate of traits, some of them at least very familiar, which the novelist has observed in his studies of contemporary American life. The "eternal womanly" is distinguishable in her composition. She is sometimes amusing, sometimes (as when she eagerly grasps the chance to free herself from the legal companionship of the "average sensual man," her first husband,) absorbingly, almost appallingly, interesting in her deadly earnestness, her disregard for sentiment, her cruelty and her wonderful power of self-deception. As a general thing, however, she is intensely disagreeable. That fact may tell against her and the play with the multitude of playgoers.

The play is in four episodes, called acts. The action is not dramatically cumulative or logical. That would have been impossible in dramatizing the book. The same faults, too, may be found frequently in reasonably popular and profitable stage pieces.

Selma is revealed after her triumph in the Woman's Convention, in her earliest mood of aspiration and self-delusion. Then she is shown denouncing her pitiful first husband and abandoning him. In Acts II. and III. she is the wife of the foolish young architect, driving him to despair and death. In the last act she is on the eve of her third marriage with the easy-going, successful politician, who is a suitable mate for her. The representation of the traits and moods of Selma on the stage might, if prolonged, lead to a revival of the old and once tolerated domestic custom of wife beating.

For two acts the piece is light and fairly smart comedy, with an infusion of bitterness, and at least one deplorably painful scene. Thereafter the interest grows more steadily serious, but the detached scenes are all "natural" and realistic, until the stirring war of words between Selma and the fair woman she envies, which forms the penultimate climax. This is "literary," theatrical, and even (in the broader sense) "poetical." Perhaps on that very account it is the best scene in the play.

Edward Morgan deserves a word of special commendation for his careful portrayal of the fool architect. The character excites pity. But the man is, nevertheless, a fool. If he gave the female person he recklessly married a good shaking and a vigorous slap or two he might live happily.

The fellow is not typical, either. Man has not yet sunk to that estate. But, on the whole, the play is a rather notable production.

YESTERDAY AT THE OPERA.

The custom at two performances took place at the Metropolitan Opera House yesterday. Those who went in the evening with the expectation of hearing Boito's "Mefistofele" were disappointed. Miss Macintyre, who was to have sung Margherita in that version of Goethe's immortal poem, was indisposed, and so the other setting of the tale, Gounod's "Faust," was offered. The audience was a very small one, but, as is the case always on Saturday nights, it was in a receptive spirit and determined to enjoy everything. The performance was of a respectable sort, but its most distinguished merit had to be sought in the elegant representation of the arch fiend by the benevolent Mr. Plançon. It is a curious fact that this eminent basso, who is so sardonic in the Boito opera, is a mildly sarcastic and extremely polished embodiment of evil in "Faust." That he sings the music well goes without saying. Vocally he was admirable last night, and he won plenty of warm applause.

Miss Adams was the Marguerite, and her presentation of the rôle did not vary in any respect from those which have been observed heretofore. Mr. Cremonini sang Faust as if he were not deeply interested except in his most favorable numbers. Mr. Sizes sang Valentine with a plentiful exhibition of French dramatic production. Miss Bridewell was the Siebel and Miss Bauermeister the Martha, Mr. Plen conducted, and the orchestra and chorus seemed to be tired, as no doubt they were.

In the afternoon an excellent performance of "Tannhäuser" was given to an audience of very large size. The matinées at the opera are even more generously patronized this season than they were in previous Winters. These afternoon entertainments afford opportunities to suburban music lovers, who cannot easily return home after the late evening performances. It matters little what the opera is in the afternoon so long as the cast embraces several of the prominent singers. This was the case yesterday. Mme. Gadski was the Elizabeth, and she repeated an impersonation which has already won high praise for its womanly dignity and sweetness and its musical excellences. The Venus was Mme. Nordica, who was in fine voice, and sang with a glowing splendor of tone and with her unfailing intelligence.

Mr. Van Dyck, who is singing better this season than ever before, once more interpreted the title rôle with notable dramatic power. Mr. Van Dyck is a great actor, and his composition of the character of Tannhäuser is a brilliant exhibition of dramatic ability. Mr. Bertram was once more an acceptable Wolfram, and his singing won him warm applause. Mr. Blass sang the music of the Landgrave well, but there is abundant room for improvement in his acting. His bearing is not noble, his attitude is stilted, and he has no command of facial expression. Hermann of Thuringia, an enlightened and liberal patron of courtly poesy, was a large figure in his day, and he should have more nobility of appearance on the stage. The chorus sang very badly, indeed, yesterday afternoon, but these people do not always deserve censure. They are a hard-working set, and are subject, like other people, to weariness of the flesh. Mr. Damrosch conducted admirably.

Willie Edouin Sails.

Willie Edouin, who has been playing a leading rôle in "Florodora" at the Casino, sailed for Liverpool on the Cunard liner Campania yesterday. His part in the piece has been taken by W. J. Ferguson. Mr. Edouin's daughter May, who is one of the principals in the extravaganza, was at the pier to see him off.

NEWPORT SOCIETY NOTES.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Jan. 26.—De Bloia & Eldridge have rented for Bishop H. C. Potter his cottage, in Rhode Island Avenue, to Gould H. Redmond of New York for the season of 1901.

Mr. and Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, who have been visiting in New York, have returned to their cottage, in Chastellux Avenue.

The Breakers has been closed.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Frank A. Wilkinson.

Frank A. Wilkinson, Treasurer of Wilkinson, Gaddis & Co., died Friday night in Newark from pneumonia. He was born in Newark and was forty-seven years old. Mr. Wilkinson was a veteran of the civil war, having served with Battery B, First New Jersey Volunteer Artillery. Mr. Wilkinson was a Director of the Essex County National Bank and of the Security Savings Institution, President of the Orville Milling Company of Orville, Ohio; Secretary of the North Bangor Slate Company, and a Director in the Brooklyn Slate Mantel Company. He was also President of the Board of Trustees of St. Luke's Church, a member of the Board of Trade, of the Essex Club, and of the Society of the Army of the Potomac. Mr. Wilkinson leaves a wife, three daughters, and two sons. The funeral will be held at St. Luke's Church at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. Burial will be in Evergreen Cemetery.

The Rev. Eugene P. Mahony.

The Rev. Eugene P. Mahony, rector of the Church of Our Lady of Good Counsel, on Putnam Avenue near Ralph Avenue, Brooklyn, died yesterday morning at the rectory adjoining the church. His death was due to pneumonia and pleurisy. Father Mahony was a cousin of Monsignor Barrett, Bishop McDonnell's secretary, and was ordained a priest twenty-four years ago. He was rector of the Church of Our Lady of Good Counsel for fifteen years. He was born in Ireland, fifty years ago, and was brought to this country by his parents when a boy. He was educated in the public schools of New York, and subsequently studied in St. Francis Xavier's College.

Charles H. Coffin.

Charles H. Coffin died last night at his home, New Rochelle, after a brief illness. He was in the sixty-first year of his age. As a manufacturer of machinery, with his headquar

DAMAGE SUITS AGAINST THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Records Show Many Queer Causes of Litigation.

Only About 2½ Per Cent. of the Claims, on an Average, Are Ever Collected.

A man was walking along a street in Harlem attired in a full-dress suit. He fell into a muddy trench. The full-dress suit was ruined and his feelings were hurt. He is suing the city for $3,000 damages.

A Bryan banner fell down during the last campaign, a man was killed, and now his relatives want the city to pay $10,000 damages.

A woman fell over a stump in the Borough of the Bronx and the city is asked to pay $5,000 for that fall.

A horse, driven by a woman, shied at a red lantern on a pile of paving blocks and ran away. The woman lost both legs through the accident. She obtained a verdict against the city for $12,000. If the red lantern had not been on the pile of paving blocks and the woman had been hurt, the city would have also had to pay a large sum for damages.

A man was in the line of fire when a garbage can was thrown from a cart of the Street Cleaning Department. He was struck on the head, lacerated, and begrimed. He wants a big sum of money from the city.

A man walking over a bridge to Coney Island at 2 o'clock one Summer morning fell into the muddy waters of Sheepshead Bay, and he thinks that the injury to his person and feelings is worth $5,000.

As Washington Irving says, the most certain part of law is uncertainty, and so it is with the thousands of lawsuits started against the city. Lawyers by the hundred are on watch to take up cases for damages. A few hours spent in looking over the legal papers filed in the office of Corporation Counsel Whalen reveals the many-sided life of the Greater New York.

Rich and poor alike are looking to mulct the city in large sums of money. Some of the people receive only lanced injuries and want large sums of money for wounded feelings and startled nerves. The comic and the tragic are mixed up indiscriminately in the city's law business. THE TIMES has procured from the original papers in the Corporation Counsel's office a record of queer and interesting litigations.

There are hundreds of miles of streets, opened and unopened, in the City of New York, and during the year there is not a mile of them that is not the basis for a suit against the city on one allegation or another. Bicycles, automobiles, brass bands, itinerant musicians, falling trees, falling barber's poles, defective pavement, are all mixed up in the legal papers. Lawyers, in high-sounding phrases, cover hundreds of pages with affidavits about women who stub their toes on a sidewalk, and they claim big damages. Cases of this latter class were very numerous up to a short time ago. Here is the legal story of the last trial of a case of this kind:

Mrs. Gretzoff was walking along Ludlow Street and stubbed her toe against a broken flagstone. She fell and dislocated her shoulder. The flagstone which caused the accident was two or three inches above the rest of the sidewalk. The case was carried to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. The majority of the Justices held that "no one could reasonably anticipate any danger from the existence of such an irregularity, and that a prudent person could not have anticipated that an injury would happen from such a condition of the sidewalk. The defendant, as a municipal corporation, was not negligent in guarding against an accident that a prudent and careful person would not have anticipated."

This opinion sustained the contention of the Corporation Counsel's office that the city is not liable for every small crack or crevice in the flagstones, but only for those which are large enough to attract attention.

A FEW SPECIMENS.

A man is suing the city because his horse, which was standing at One Hundred and Seventy-eighth Street and Amsterdam Avenue, was, according to his allegation, frightened so that he ran away because of a blast at One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Street and Amsterdam Avenue. This man wants $5,000.

An Italian child was taken by his mother to a concert in Mulberry Park. While the mother was listening to the concert the child managed to crawl over the barricades which were put around a manhole, the cover of which was removed. The child fell into the manhole and was drowned. His father now wants the city to pay $10,000 damages.

A man who alleges that he was struck by a falling barber's pole is suing the city instead of the barber, for $10,000.

A man who was a patient in the City Hospital has filed notice of a suit for $25,000 for an alleged careless operation performed on his eyes.

One claimant in Brooklyn wants $5,000 because he was walking on the sidewalk which was turned into a bicycle path along the fence on Flatbush Avenue, Prospect Park. He was run down by a bicycle and slightly injured.

An odd case is that of Vincenzo Adamo against Patrick Regan. The city is made a party defendant in this suit, although no reasons for suing the city are stated. The plaintiff claims that he was battered by Patrick Regan at the Battery, and he wants the city to pay $1,000, supposedly because he was not protected from assault.

An exhibition of fireworks was going on at Bedford Avenue and Bean Street, Brooklyn. The fireworks were being exploded by private parties. A woman was injured and she wants the city to pay $10,000 damages, claiming that the city had no right to give permission to set off explosives, and if such permission was given the city is responsible for the injuries to people and property. A man fell in a Brooklyn Bridge car while a train was rounding the sharp curve into the Brooklyn terminal. He wants $5,000 damages for injuries received.

Harris Baratz, who lives on Allen Street, had a child. The child was left to roam in the streets. She was very young and small. The little one crawled into a sewer and was killed. The father wants $25,000 for the loss of services of his daughter. An action for $10,000 is based on a collision between a horse and cart of the Street Cleaning Department and a horse and wagon of a private party. A firm of brewers want $700 for the loss of a team of horses, which they allege fell into a trench on Morris Avenue, and were injured so that they had to be shot.

Some mischievous boys on Grand Avenue, Brooklyn, took a grocer's wagon and started it rolling down hill. It struck and knocked down a woman in its course, and the woman is now suing the city for $10,000 damages. One plaintiff claims that he was deprived of the use of the alleyway at Liberty and Nassau Streets, and he wants $5,000 for injuries to his business.

A LARGE CLAIM.

One of the largest claims against the city is for $50,000 for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by an explosion in the Litchfield mansion, in Prospect Park. A woman is suing the city for alleged assault and battery and false imprisonment by employes of the Street Cleaning Department. She does not name the sum she wants in damages.

A man was walking along a Brooklyn Street near a school building, ice and snow in an avalanche slid from the roof of the school and fell on the man. He wants $5,000 for injuries received.

A man was thrown from a wagon between Schenck and Filkins Avenues, in the Borough of Queens. The driver received personal injuries, and wants $10,000, setting up the claim that defective pavement was the cause of his being injured.

Falling into excavations, being thrown off an ice wagon, assault and battery by policemen, slander by policemen, defects in bridges, alleged trespass in tearing down fences, (three cases of this kind aggregating $65,000,) fall of awning causig death, (one suit for $20,000,) fall from a bicycle, for alleged defective pavement, for personal injuries from falling due to the alleged careless conduct of a court officer in assisting the plaintiff to take the witness stand in a court.

During the past two months, by reason of the decision of the Court of Appeals in the Forbell case, hundreds of farmers in Queens County, Long Island, have begun suits against the city, alleging that the city has drained water from their lands for the water supply of Brooklyn and injured their farms and crops. Farmer Forbell got a verdict of $5,000. Hundreds of other farmers want large sums. There are a dozen private water companies operating in the same territory, but they are never sued by the farmers, although they are obtaining water in the same manner as the city.

One of the strangest cases entered on the books of the Corporation Counsel's office is that of a young man who fell into a trench in Harlem and wants damages for the full-dress suit ruined and the shock to his system. He claims that he was on his way to a theatre, with a young lady by his side. The streets were torn up at the time, and on each side of the car tracks was a trench, which was part of the construction of the Eighth Avenue Railroad system. It had been raining all day, and in the storm he slipped into the trench, while the young lady laughed at him from the embankment.

Motor vehicles have during the past few months begun to figure in the city lawsuits. A man who was so unfortunate as to guide one into a trench at One Hundred and Twenty-first Street and Columbus Avenue wants the city to pay him $10,000 damages for what happened to him and his machine.

The accident cases against the city at the present time are numbered in the thousands, and the aggregate amount claimed is $2,500,000. The average victories against the city is now about 2½ per cent. of the claims.

CURED OF GAMBLING BY ALWAYS GAMBLING.

Young Men, Conatant Losers, Found a New Idea.

This is the story of two confirmed young gamblers who seemed beyond redemption, but who struck a system whereby they continued and yet ceased gambling and eventually acquired wealth.

They were a pair of young Southerners from the same town and friends almost from babyhood. Therefore what one did the other was almost sure to do. They made up their minds that they needed to go out and see the world and be happy, and that it was not the proper thing to live on their fathers. They came to New York to make their own way and to see things, and in order to see them better became newspaper reporters. Then they saw things good and bad and indifferent, and among them were introduced to a thing named "wheel."

Unfortunately, in the first attempt one of them won $300 and the other $200, and thereafter they devoted their young lives and hundreds of dollars trying to repeat the run.

When the "wheel" proved faithless they went to horse racing, which is more dangerous, because it includes not mere luck, but an element of personal vanity about one's knowledge of Sunshine and Spindrift and weights up and hard and soft tracks. Poker and the other diversions were added to the list, until the spirit of gambling entered their daily lives and they gambled with each other and threw dice to see who would pay the week's board and matched each other to see who paid for breakfasts.

Things went on splendidly until on pay days it was simply a matter of an hour to run from the office to a "joint" or a poolroom and to return dead broke ready and cheerful for another week's work. They owed money, restaurant bills, and money borrowed outright, which they hoped to pay some day when they made a big strike. Meanwhile they made little strikes, enough to lead them on. In time they got to the point when their faces no longer showed whether they had lost or won. Therefore they were "full-fledged" sports." Therefore, also, hard lines were digging into their faces about their mouths and eyes, and if their families down in the land of sunshine could have seen them parading arm in arm up Park Row there would have been tears or rebuffs, according to sex.

As both of the young men had the same first Christian names, it is necessary to call one of them "Bill" and the other "Billy." Bill and Billy were in for a crisis. The Summer and the greater part of Autumn had gone, when it dawned on them that in the name of decency, if not in the name of comfort, it was about time to buy overcoats. They had spent nights shivering on assignments for the want of a proper covering, but on pay days it seemed folly to invest money in clothing when there was a fortune to be made by the turn of a wheel. As both men were pretty good in their line of business, they made enough each week to have fine overcoats if they had been able to let the wheel alone. They realized this one morning, and left the office together with their salaries in their pockets bound for a tailor's shop, and they returned two hours later without a cent or an overcoat and with watches gone.

As they were game to the core they sat down in their seats in the office at desks facing each other, and like true sports began to write the stories of their assignments as if nothing had happened. Presently, without stopping his writing, Bill remarked:

"Billy, your'e a d——n fool."

"Just what I was thinking of you," Billy returned, likewise disdaining to halt in his work.

"Guess we're both It," Bill said as before.

"Maybe; but I know you are," said Billy, and then for the first time both put down their pencils.

"I'll tell you, I'll match you to see who is the biggest d—n fool; that's about all I've got left," said Bill.

"That's all right; I'll bet you a fiver if I wanted to I could save more money in a month than you could at that," the other said.

"I'll go you on that. It's five up that at the end of the month I show a fatter bank account than you do."

And that is all that was said until at the end of the month Bill produced a bank book with $80 in it, and Billy one with $120 credited to him. Therefore Bill paid Billy the $5 and said:

"I'll go you again on that."

"All right, make it every month if you like."

"Suits me, my son," said Billy; but look here, sport is sport; I don't think I ought to have taken that fiver. I borrowed fifty from the governor to add to the account and swamp you. That leaves $70 which I really saved against your $80, so here is your $5 back and $5 more which I owe."

But Bill hesitated, then he said: "Well, is this thing meant only for legitimate saving?"

"So I supposed."

"Then here is the ten back. You see I was behind and had only $40 in bank. I had everything to gain and nothing to lose, I figured, so I made the $40 and played Memorial Day even money and banked the $80."

"Then we will call the thing off for this month, but hereafter it is five a month that I show a fatter account than you do, and no more funny business about it."

Neither Bill nor Billy knew what he was doing that day—or he would not have done it—but the excitement of the chase was on, and that was four years ago. The last time Bill won with $4,200 to Billy's $4,170, and Billy swore he would get the next fiver if he had to do the Isabella act and pawn his jewels. Some day a pair of fine girls will get hold of Bill and Billy, and will put on the finishing touches of civilization, and thereafter they will confine themselves to laying odds on their wives, which is legitimate.

YALE LIBRARIAN'S REPORT.

Large Number of Books Added—Prof. Marsh's Report.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 26.—The annual report of Prof. Addison Van Name, Librarian of Yale University, became public to-day. It covers a period of nineteen months. It is announced that during that time 12,237 volumes were added to the library by purchase, and 10,275 by gift. Some of the donors were:

By the will of Prof. O. C. Marsh, 5,000 volumes and 10,000 pamphlets on scientific subjects; from the executors of the estate of Prof. J. D. Dana, 2,000 volumes from his scientific library; Charleton T. Lewis, New York, 197 volumes on classical philology; Justice Brewer of the Supreme Court of the United States, 114 volumes of British documents on the Guiana case.

Dr. Timothy Dwight, ex-President of the university has created a fund of $1,000, to be known as the James Dwight Fund, in honor of a deceased brother.

Prof. E. E. Salisbury has added $1,195 to the funds, for the famous Salisbury Oriental collection.

For a Trolley Line in the Berkshires.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Jan. 26.—A company to build a trolley line from Adams, Mass., through the entire length of Berkshire County to the Connecticut State line, passing through Lenox and Stockbridge and other Summer resorts, has been formed, with a capital of $1,000,000. Among the stockholders in Lenox are Thomas Post, William D. Curtis, Capt. John S. Barnes, David Lydig, and Mrs. Anna A. Bradford.

MAIL CLERKS' TROUBLES

Tribulations Brought by Careless Post Office Patrons.

Strange Objects That Some Senders Throw Upon the Care of Poat Office Employes.

"There is an increase each year in the Post Office of about 8 or 10 per cent. in the volume of mail matter, and there is a large increase in our foreign mail," says the man in that part of the Post Office where misdirected letters and packages are sent. "The last two years has brought larger mails from Cuba, the Philippines, and China, and the advance in our commercial interests abroad has made a vast change.

"We are just now beginning to get in loot from China, and we have coming through the mails any number of the little shoes of the Chinese women, Chinese books, and Chinese pictures. As soon as our men got to China a Post Office was opened on one of the vessels, and that Post Office has followed the men along up to Peking, and they get their mails as they would if they were at home. From the Philippines we get all sorts of things—flowers and dried leaves, giving an idea of the tropical vegetation, all sorts of things according to the special hobby of the sender; small knives, spears, and spear heads used by the natives, and quantities of photographs of our men taken in many ways, in the native huts and hammocks, sometimes with the native girls and sometimes sitting in the centre of a group of natives, who are gazing at them as if they were gods.

"We had an amusing letter from one man who had inquired for a package he had sent, and which had never reached its destination. We had written to ask him to describe the contents, and he wrote back, saying: 'In the package was a beautiful picture of myself in soldier uniform.'

"Two years ago we were receiving all sorts of things from Cuba, bullets and cartridges, pieces of guns, and gun locks from Mauser rifles, and I suppose if we should send men to the north pole they would send back little chunks of ice through the mails. These things that come to us have, most of them, been carelessly put up in thin paper wrappers, and usually have nothing about them by which they can be identified. We compare such wrappers as are found with the different packages, and if there is any way to identify them, do so. If not, we put the different articles in envelopes, and on the outside is written a description, and they are put up, ready to be handed over to the applicant who writes and identifies them. It takes some knowledge of a large variety of things to give accurate descriptions, for we have odds and ends of all kinds here, and if they are not accurately described on the outside of the pakage the owner will never get them. Those which are not called for, we send to Washington, and after being kept there unclaimed for two years they are put up in packages, two or three articles in a package, and sold at auction. There is an annual sale. There are inquiries made for about 40 per cent. of the packages and letters. If there were more inquiries, more articles would reach their destinations. When there are no addresses, the only thing we can do is to hold the goods ready for delivery. The majority of people seem to make up their minds that a package that is lost will never be found, and make no effort to trace it.

PACKAGES BADLY WRAPPED.

"Packages should be wrapped in heavy paper, and when they are tagged the package should be directed as well, and there is no harm done if the article inside is also directed. It is in many ways satisfactory to use tags. When the package is stamped the stamping is then on the tag, but occasionally these will be torn off, and if the package is not directed there is no way of identifying it. It is remarkable that with the variety of things that go into a mailbag, and the careless sending, more things are not lost. We cannot prohibit articles within certain limits, and up to four pounds, going into the mails. If any one puts a little, frail package into the Post Office box and some one comes immediately after and drops in a heavy article which weighs up to the limit, the first will likely will suffer.

"It is a strange collection of articles which comes to us. Here is a photograph of a man in a little gold frame, and in another package is one of two children. Here is a little pair of jean trousers with sand paper upon them for scratching matches, and in another package is a small pair of boy's navy blue trousers; there are some crocheted bean bags, a rubber doll, a rosary, and next a pack of cards, the things come in an incongruous lot. There are a lot of fancy pins that have come out of their papers. Those are good things to fish out of a mailbag. Brass drawer pulls are in another package, and an animal's skin in another, a vest pocket prayer book, and a lace-edged handkerchief marked 'for Lotta,' and there are two black-bordered handkerchiefs.

"At Christmas we had a large number of Christmas cards without wrappers, but nothing to the number we had a few years ago. Here are some photographs, among them one from New Zealand, the photograph giving an idea of the vegetation of the country. Here is a photograph of a man standing before an easel on which there is a picture, which looks like an excellent likeness. That an amateur photograph evidently. Then here is another unmounted photograph of the Basilica at St. Peter's, Rome, and an enamel vase that would be likely to suffer from rough neighbors.

"We get the greatest volume of mail in New York, and it is forwarded from here over a large stretch of country. Two steamers that came in one day brought us 2,000 sacks of mail. People do not realize what a vast amount that is. We average 400 tons of mail matter a year. We have already two big lots of packages that have been misdirected and came in this morning, and it is only 11 o'clock. Those that have the names of business firms on the outside may find owners, but there is not much to do with many of the others. One is directed to North Liberty Street, America; another to Elyria, America. Another, with no address, is to Mulberry Street. One is addressed to 98 Front Street, Germany, and one from Birmingham, England, is addressed to 32½ Emmet Street, United States of America.

"While there are a good many people who do not make inquiries for packages they might find, there are some people who ask assistance in ways that we cannot give it. One woman wanted us to look up her husband. He had left her about four months before, and she had an idea that he had come to New York. She said she would give a reward of $25 if he was found. She would give more than that but for one reason, she could not afford it, and for another her husband was not worth it.

MISDIRECTED LETTERS.

"The misdirected letter department has one regular correspondent. He has been sending letters for the past two years, on an average of one or two a day. He is an Italian, and sometimes there is the word "Monseignor" on the envelope, but usually it is covered with unintelligible scratches. Sometimes there are good stamps on the letters, sometimes canceled ones, but more frequently none at all. On our letters that come from Italy there are many that have the appearance at first glance of having no stamps, for if there is one it is more likely than not to be put on the wrong side of the envelope, on the flap, to answer for a seal as well. But the greater number of Italian letters come with no stamps at all. The Italians are a thrifty people and they think, evidently, that if they have relatives who are doing well over here, there is no reason why they should not pay the postage. But the Italians on this side have a different opinion, and when one is notified that there is a letter waiting for him, he promptly refuses it when he finds there are a few cents to pay. We have about 150 letters refused in this way every week.

"Much of the work in the Post Office is simplified because the men in the different departments have been here for so many years. One man in the office has been here fifty-two years. The woman who has been longest in the service has been here twenty-four years, and putting the different men together in groups of three, almost any combination of those longest in the service will cover a century. This simplifies matters greatly in misdirected letters. There must be a certain natural talent for the work as well. Some men can read bad writing easily, and though practice is a help, there are others who never do it well. Take the man who handles the misdirected letters. He has a great amount of geography in his head. When a letter is directed to a certain street in a certain State with no city address, he knows immediately that such and such a town has such a street, and turns immediately to the directory of that city, and if he finds the name sends on the letter. It would take an endless time for a man for whom it was all guess work.

"That there are so many towns and cities of the same name makes matters more confusing. There is only one name of a kind in a State, but we have many States now, and almost everyone has a Greenfield, Springfield, and a Middletown. There is a constantly increasing number of Post Office towns also. When I came into the service twenty years ago there were only 30,000 Post Offices, and now there are 70,000. Where the street is given without the town, the letters that are directed to persons living on Main Street are less likely to find their owners than are any others. Almost every town and city in the country has its Main Street. The Post Office conditions are much more difficult here than on the other side of the water, where the same old roads and streets have been in existence, some of them from the time of the Romans, while ours sprung up in a night. One method that is in use in determining the proper direction for a letter is to examine the postmark, learn the place from which the letter was sent, and it is very likely that it was intended for some one living in a town within a certain radius of that place. For instance, if a letter was mailed in Poughkeepsie and directed to a street of which there were many in the country, by looking up the name in the directory of a nearby town there is a chance of finding it.

"One of the things that we have to look out for in the mails are matches. Children sometimes throw them into the boxes, and people who have friends in prison like to send them tobacco and matches once a month. When we find them we take them out. A package of matches setting fire to a mail bag on a fast mail train could do a large amount of damage."

RELIC OF HAMILTON DUEL.

Tablet Which Marked Spot Where He Fell Presented to New York Historical Society.

A rare and interesting relic, which is the only memorial extant of the fatal duel in 1804 between Hamilton and Burr, recently has been presented to the New York Historical Society by Mrs. John King Van Rensselaer, whose novels and historical writings regarding old New York are well known. This is the marble slab bearing the inscription of Hamilton's death, which was placed upon the little monument erected a few months after the duel by the St. Andrew's Society of this city on the historic dueling ground at Weehawken. The marking of the exact spot of the duel has now been obliterated, as the tracks of the West Shore Railroad pass directly over the place, which for many years was the favorite meeting ground for combatants under the code of honor.

A peculiar and interesting history is attached to the Hamilton monument, and for a long time the marble slab now reposing in the Historical Society's rooms, at Second Avenue and Eleventh Street, was actually lost, finally was discovered in a barroom in this city. The inscription on the memorial slab reads as follows:

On this spot fell July 11, 1804, Major General Alexander Hamilton. As an expression of their affectionate regard to his memory and of their deep regret for his loss, the St. Andrew's Society of the State of New York have erected this monument.

Curious as it may seem, the monument was not favorably regarded by a large body of citizens and particularly by the inhabitants of Weehawken and the vicinity. It was looked upon as an incentive to dueling by hot-headed individuals, who took a morbid interest in fighting, and failing, if need be, on the spot hallowed by Hamilton's death. As a result of this increasing feeling the monument only stood a little over a dozen years, when it was torn down. A letter, published in The New York Columbian on July 15, 1815, by a writer signed "Hoboken," voices the hostile sentiment clearly, and it was shortly after the publication of this letter that the destruction occurred. The letter was as follows:

It is a subject of complaint to the citizens in the vicinity and a standing absurdity and outrage on the morals, manners, and feelings of society. By the pernicious effect of a conspicuous example, the young and chivalrous are invited to combat and feel a degree of vain glory in measuring ground on the spot where that great man fell from all his glory and usefulness, and furnished a bloody beacon to posterity, which should be, at least, shrouded from the light of day. Nowadays the boats arrive from your island in broad daylight, the combatants take their stand on each side of the ominous monument, and before the inhabitants can reach the spot the mischief is done, and the unfortunate survivors hurried off too soon to be arrested in the gathering neighborhood. Such is the sensation, I understand, excited by the use of this modern Acidams, that it is not to be expected the pillar will long retain its station, it being a baleful nuisance, not a vestige of which should be suffered to remain on the earth. But for the eminent cause of its origin, I should be almost as willing to have a gallows near my house.

Capt. James Deas was the owner of the property at that time. He was bitterly opposed to dueling, and is said to have rushed from his house on more than one occasion when he saw combatants appearing, and by force of argument prevailed upon them to desist from their bloodthirsty methods of satisfying honor. He is credited with having removed the monument himself, as a means of stopping the practice of visiting the spot for dueling purposes, and taking the slab bearing the inscription to his house. By some means he lost possession of it, and for a long time every vestige of the monument had disappeared. Meanwhile, James Gore King, the famous banker, purchased the property, and his country home there, known as Highwood, for many years was one of the finest suburban places in the vicinity of New York.

Hugh Maxwell, who was President of the St. Andrew's Society in this city about 1850, accidentally discovered in a saloon the marble slab that had graced the monument. He purchased it and presented it to Mr. King, and it remained in the possession of the family until its recent presentation to the New York Historical Society by Mrs. John King Van Rensselaer, who owned it as one of the heirs of the late Archibald Gracie King.

The tablet is in excellent condition, considering the various changes of fortune through which it has passed. One corner is badly chipped, but the inscription is intact, and as the only visible memorial of the duel in existence, it forms an interesting relic for an American historical museum.

THE DEWEY THEATRE LICENSE.

New York Sabbath Committee Wants It Revoked by the Police Board.

The New York Sabbath Committee, which recently got from Justice Bischoff, in the Supreme Court an order revoking the license of the Dewey Theatre, issued last May for last year, after the license had already expired, has renewed its attack on the theatre. It has sent a communication to the Police Board demanding that the present license be revoked under a charter provision which makes it illegal to issue a license to any person or corporation whose license has been revoked for cause. President York of the Police Board has sent in turn a letter to Corporation Counsel Whalen asking for an opinion as to the requirements of the law in this case.

Several circumstances have conspired to put the case in a muddle all round. Over a year ago the Sabbath Committee began proceedings in court to have the license of the theatre revoked on the ground that the Sabbath laws were being violated by the Sunday night concerts at the place. At that time the Sabbatarians were foiled by the proprietors, who averred that the Kraus served with the complaint was not the Kraus who owned a part of the existing license.

Another and a similar proceeding was then begun, in which the other Kraus was named. In the meantime the license had expired, and the Police Board granted a renewal. This was in April. A week ago Justice Bischoff decided the old case, annulling the license that expired in May last. The Sabbath Committee holds that the decision of the Court practically makes the present license illegal.

But to further muddle the case, the Police Board has been served with due notice before the Court's decision was handed down, that the license of the theatre has been transferred to other owners than the ones holding it when the violations of the law occurred. The notices were served first in September, and early in this month it was stated that Senator Timothy D. Sullivan and George J. Kraus, the former owners, had disposed of their holdings to another Sullivan and another Kraus.

The law explicitly states that the license applies to the place, and not to the owners conducting a theatre, and just as explicitly states that it is the person and not the place that loses a license after a court annulment, and who cannot get a new license. So that, even if it is decided that the original "Sullivan & Kraus" should lose their license under the court ruling, it is still a question whether the present "Sullivan & Kraus" can be deprived of a license they have acquired before the court gave its decision.

The Corporation Counsel will have to decide in the matter.

COLORED PHOTOGRAPHY IN PLANT LIFE

As Honorary Floral Photographer of the Botanical Garden Mr. Van Brunt Began the Work in 1886.

In the list of officers of the New York Botanical Garden there is one whose name attracts the attention of the outsider, from the unusual nature of the office. It is that of Honorary Floral Photographer. This title is given to Cornelius Van Brunt, whose colored photographs of flowers have become widely known within the last few years. The office is a unique one, and was created for Mr. Van Brunt. His work is educational, in line with that of the garden, and as an officer he is one of the regular lecturers of the garden. His lantern slides are also loaned to the garden at other times. Mr. Van Brunt has the privilege of the fine collections of the garden, and in his collection of slides its flowers bloom and plants grow perpetually.

Mr. Van Brunt's work is known by the public more from a popular standpoint. His photographs are beautiful in themselves, and marvelously true to nature, as they are colored by Mrs. Van Brunt, who has developed great skill with the colors. Together they have covered very thoroughly the floral kingdom of the State, showing a richness which to the uninitiated is surprising. This is what the public has seen and admired chiefly. But the more truly educational part of the work has been in the expansion of the flowers, as Mr. Van Brunt calls it, a branch of the work which he has undertaken more recently. This is to produce the plants first entire, then the blossoms, and then component parts. This is particularly in plants with composite flowers, where the real blossoms are clustered together, miniature things forming what is popularly called the blossom.

In addition to this Mr. Van Brunt is now photographing plants in their various stages of growth, a complete circle of plant life in stages from the seed as it sprouts back again to the seed as it falls from the mature plant. It is this branch of the work which is of the most real scientific value. An interesting bit of Mr. Van Brunt's photographic observations has been with the sundew, the droseras, which grows in great abundance in the marshes and feeds upon insects. Plants were transplanted from the marshes to the house and photographed at meal time, showing the process of feeding. The little plants apparently appreciated the value of the efforts to reproduce their peculiarities, and displayed healthy appetites, taking insects, pieces of meat, and other things fed to them voraciously, and were photographed in various stages of the feasts. They are seen in some plates about to take a dainty morsel, and at others when an unfortunate insect is disappearing from view, only the legs remaining to be seen.

It is a surprise to the ordinary observer to learn the great beauty of many common flowers when shown by means of Mr. Van Brunt's expansion process. There is a goldenrod show in the long stalk, the featherly blossom, and then one of the tiny blossoms which form the entire flower. There is less surprise in this than in other less beautiful flowers. Burdock burs are a revelation, the mother-wort discovers a millinery shop of pretty little flower bonnets, and the iron weed becomes a thing of beauty. No microscope is so fine but that it can magnify any part of a flower into anything but beauty. It is not possible to go beyond a stage of beauty in a plant. Only nature will bear minute inspection. Mr. Van Brunt says:

The beginning of his work in this line was almost accidental. His eyes had given out in doing microscopical work, and it was suggested that he should take up photography for a temporary amusement. Being an enthusiastic botanist, his work took the form of flower photography. That was in 1886, in a little camp in the mountains. There was no thought at first of coloring the photographs or putting them to practical use. Then the experiment of colored plates was tried, and slides were exhibited for the pleasure of friends. Then the scene became interested, explanations were demanded with the pictures, and the work has developed into a profession. The botanical department of the Brooklyn Institute had the first public lecture.

In the course of the work Mrs. Van Brunt undertook the coloring of the slides, and has developed a genuine talent for it. Her memory for colors is marvelous. In some cases she paints directly from nature, in others makes color sketches, and again with flowers with which she is familiar carries the colors in her mind. The coloring of a blossom is frequently not done until a long time after the photographic work has been completed. The aniline colors are used, and Mrs. Van Brunt has found it most satisfactory to mix her own.

It might be supposed that after a number of years of work it would be necessary to find new fields, but the reverse is the case. The more study Mr. and Mrs. Van Brunt give to the flowers the more beauties worthy of illustration they find at home.

"Why should we go away," Mr. Van Brunt asks, "when we can find so much at our very doors?"

Flowers will and do grow in most untoward places. An illustration is given of a pretty little pink wild flower, the sea pink geradia purpurea, which was found growing in the rubbish heaps back of one of the Coney Island hotels. It was not only growing, but flourishing and sending out fine, beautiful blossoms. Not only the plants and flowers are given in a collection of pictures, but the landscape and immediate surroundings of the plants, to give an idea of their habitat. This is, perhaps, omitted in cases like that of the Geradia at Coney Island.

The photographic work is done either in the fields or in the house. When possible it is done in the house. Special plates are used, and screens of different colors in photographing different blossoms. These equalize the colors and produce more satisfactory results. The photographs are taken without regard to the order of plates. To use a box of plates on a single flower is nothing. It is the satisfactory result which is the only aim, and sometimes fifty negatives are taken before one is satisfactory. Of the thousands of satisfactory negatives that have now accumulated a voluminous index has been kept, and any one plate can be found at a moment's notice. There are between 4,000 and 5,000 colored slides and 15,000 negatives. In addition to the work of securing the flowers, there is the necessary data to be obtained and put away for reference.

There are many exigencies in the work. A florist will send to the house a beautiful orchid which has already been sold, and the plant can remain only two hours. In that time all the necessary photographs are taken. Sometimes there is a beautiful cluster of blossoms on a single plant in the woods, and the camera is taken to it, and if it is a low plant it is photographed with the camera above, and as it appears in the colored negative plate it is a beautiful plant growing from a background of earth on the side of a wall. With these surrounding dun tones it is very beautiful.

The flower pictures are arranged in series. Orchids, wild and cultivated, form one group. Narcissus and early flowers of parks and gardens form another, roses and Summer flowers another, wild flowers in and about New York City, another. The range is infinite. Prof. Bickmore uses many of Mr. Van Brunt's slides in his lectures, and many have been made for the lectures of the Department of Public Instruction.

In searching for the beautiful flowers of the marshes of Long Island and New Jersey, Mr. and Mrs. Van Brunt have made a discovery. Only on still moist days are the mosquitoes unduly troublesome. This is not because they are not there, but that after the first exhilaration early in the season they cease to bite ceases to annoy, and the floral photographer works comfortably without regard to them, and without annoyance.

A Sequel to "Quo Vadis."

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 26.—Jeremiah Curtin of the Bureau of Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution, widely known as the translator of "Quo Vadis," has arrived here on his way to Washington, after a tour of the world, during which he closely studied an interesting Mongol tribe, known as the Buriats, who, to the number of 200,000, inhabit the country to the west of Lake Baikal. Mr. Curtin says Senkiewicz will soon issue in English a sequel to "Quo Vadis."

Mayor Hall of Fanwood, N. J., Resigns.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Jan. 26.—Mayor Harry Hall of Fanwood, who has been in ill-health for some time, has resigned as the Chief Executive of the town. Mr. Hall is a New York business man. Until his successor is selected Councilman John Stevens will act as Mayor.

Deputy Thierry's Plan for Improving the Merchant Marine.

Finds American Naval Success in the Spanish War Due to the Organization of an Auxiliary Fleet.

The résumé of a report dealing with the problems of bettering the condition of the French merchant marine, made by M. Thierry, Deputy from Marseilles, in the name of the Budget Committee of 1900 of the French Chamber of Deputies, has been sent to Washington by A. M. Thackard, United States Consul at Havre. A copy of Mr. Thierry's report has been recently furnished to each Deputy, and it will form the basis of the discussion which is about to take place in the lower chamber of the French Legislature.

M. Thierry advocates the diminution of the advantages enjoyed by the sailing fleet under the law of 1893, the increase of bounties granted to steamers, and the rejuvenation of the material composing the merchant fleet. "When the commercial fleet will

$40,000 Worth of the Finest Furs for $16,000

So many similar announcements have recently been made that upon investigation proved disappointing that there is much justice in the public's skepticism. Patrons of this establishment, however, are familiar with our careful and exacting methods and know from experience and close observation that we never make a statement which an examination does not fully verify.

This sale comprises $40,000.00 worth of the newest and finest Furs in existence to-day, every garment manufactured for this season's wear, every garment made of the choicest skins and finished in the best possible manner. The maker found himself with a large stock on hand owing to the open Winter and we took the entire amount from him at forty cents on the dollar. The garments go to you in the same way—

At a Saving of Sixty Per Cent. on Every Garment.

There are Jackets of seal, baby lamb, Persian lamb, broadtail and moire astrachan; Capes, Wraps, Paletots, Collarettes and a very large assortment of Neckpieces of Russian and Hudson Bay sables, chinchilla, mink and Alaska sable and other fine furs, as well as Muffs of all the furs mentioned. Many of the pieces are gems of the furriers' art and all are up to date and commendable in every way. It is an opportunity that every wise woman will turn to her advantage, for February and March promise to bring the severest weather of the year and one doesn't buy furs for a single season, anyway. Now some hint of the prices—a hint merely—the sale is too vast for a full telling. Rare fur Sets of cross fox, Russian sable, Hudson Bay sable, chinchilla and ermine, not spoken of to-day, will go on sale Tuesday and Wednesday.

100,000 Yards of New Carpets and Rugs.

A Quarter to a Third Below Usual Pricing.

The January opening in the Carpet Store, the event toward which every effort has been bent for months, the greatest sale of Carpetings ever attempted in this vicinity, begins to-morrow. All roads should lead to Abraham & Straus. No one with present or prospective Carpet need can afford to stay away. In the first place:

It Isn't a Clear-up---There Are 307 New Patterns in Carpets Alone.

The clear-up sale is over and done with to make room for these very Carpets. Every yard is fresh, new patterned, well made—nobody but the best makers can make Carpets for us. We ordered months ago when prices were lower than they are now. Contracts were so large that makers were willing to take a slice off usual profits to get them. Finally we have taken a big slice out of the usual profits here to make this opening sale of the season the biggest and best in our history.

Buy now and you save a quarter to a third. When these stocks are gone you must pay regular prices. Choose.

80,000 Yds. New Embroideries---Half.

In many cases three yards for the price of one.

The crowning achievement of a wonderful January—best the Embroidery Store has ever been able to do.

The importer to whom these Embroideries were consigned is most particular, chose them with the utmost care from the best of foreign productions. The ship that brought them had a stormy passage and they were wet. It is impossible to see any evidence of the wetting now, but the importer recovered his insurance, and took that, his profit and a little more off the price of the Embroideries on condition that we relieve him of the entire quantity.

It is a splendid collection, neat baby patterns in edgings, insertions and beadings and showy patterns in open work, Carrick-ma-Cross, Irish Point and Guipure effects.

Values are 5c. to $1.50 a yard—Prices 2c. to 49c.

Other offerings of Embroideries are quite as exceptional:

Flouncings, hemstitched and scalloped edges, values 50c. to $1.98, at 25c. to 98c. a yard.
Allovers, suitable for dresses, waists, sleeves and guimpes, tucked, embroidered, lace, hemstitched and combination effects; values 50c. to $1.98 a yard, at 29c. to 98c. a yard.

SOLDIERS' CYCLE RACES

RUNNERS IN FOUR CONTESTS

Finals in the Competitions of Company E Decided Before a Great Crowd in Regimental Armory.

W. G. Frank, the champion indoor bicycle rider of the Eighth Regiment, won the two-mile bicycle handicap race last night, but lost the one-mile event at the conclusion of the bicycle races held in the Eighth Regiment Armory, Park Avenue and Ninety-fourth Street. The events were held under the auspices of Company E of the regiment and the Associated Cycling Clubs of New York. The trial heats in the bicycle races were decided on the previous Saturday night, and only the finals were left for last evening, while in addition there were four running events, at 60 yards, 300 yards, half a mile, and one mile.

Six men started in the one-mile bicycle race, Frank being the only man on the scratch line. The handicaps which he had to give to his opponents proved too great to cut down, and, although he sported desperately at the finish, the best he could do was to get fourth place. T. A. McCahill of the Seventy-first Regiment won in 2:28 2-5. H. R. Brown, Jr., of the King's County Wheelmen, fell near the finish while sure of third place.

In the two-mile bicycle event, Frank took the lead shortly after the first mile was passed. H. Kaskella led at the mile, but he fell among the rear guard toward the finish. H. R. Brown gave Frank a hot finish. The latter won by about twelve feet, Brown second, and Charles Martin third.

In the final of the 300-yard run, handicap, F. J. Walsh of the New York Athletic Club was disqualified from third place for cutting across a corner on the last lap. It was a spirited race, the runners setting a lively pace from the start. Harry Hillman of Battery E won by about two feet, with H. Arnold of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association second. The winner's time was announced as 0:32 1-5.

Charles McCarthy of the Pastime Athletic Club beat his club mate, E. J. Fagan, after a pretty race in the half-mile novice run. McCarthy led by ten yards, and finished in the very good time of 2:17 1-5 for a twelve-lap track.

The sixty-yard dash was run off in six heats, and won by H. Arnold, with thirteen feet handicap. W. Delgado, one of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association crack runners, was the only scratch competitor. He won one heat in 0:06 3-5, but the handicaps were too much for him in the quarter-mile run for finals. The mile run brought out a big field. James J. Lynch and Peter Sautor, both of the Pastime Athletic Club, had a hard fight on the last lap, with honors falling to Lynch by four feet. His time was 4:35 4-5. Fred W. Burns was the announcer, and the games were run off in excellent order. Summaries:

K. A. C. SWIMMING RACES.

Secret Handicaps Kept Contestants Moving at the Finishes.

The trial heats of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club's swimming races were decided last night in the swimming tank in the clubhouse, Madison Avenue and Forty-fifth Street. A large number of spectators witnessed the competitions. The closest race of the night was the 400-foot handicap, in which L. A. Goodwin barely succeeded in winning from W. C. Miller.

A new method of equalizing the chances of the men, by secret handicapping, was adopted for these races, thus preventing any loafing at the finish. The contestants were divided into three classes; those who were able to swim the length of the tank (100 feet in 22 seconds, were put in Class A; those who could swim the same distance in 20 seconds in Class B, and those of average ability in Class C. The finals will be decided next Saturday night. Summaries:

Class A, 400-Feet Handicap.—First heat won by L. A. Goodman, (0:03;) W. C. Miller second, (scratch.) Time—1:43 3-5. Second heat won by L. de Handley, (0:09;) C. A. Callahan, (0:10.) Time—1:50 3-5.

Class B, 100-Yards, Handicap.—First heat won by J. H. Bracken, (scratch;) J. S. Snope, (0:04,) second; R. W. Bunton, (0:10,) third. Time—1:38 3-5. Second heat won by J. A. Patterson, (scratch;) Dr. A. Altschure, (0:10,) second; E. E. Larendon, (0:12,) third. Time—1:31 1-5. Third heat won by C. A. Isenhorn, (scratch;) A. G. Sivori, (0:03,) second. Time—1:27.

Class C, 100-Yards, Handicap.—First heat won by W. G. Higgins, (scratch;) A. G. Gaugler, (0:06,) second. Time—0:48 3-5. Second heat won by R. Walker, (scratch;) C. C. Osborne, (scratch,) second. Time—1:07.

SPEEDWAY HORSES OUT AGAIN.

Road Was In Good Condition After Two Weeks' Disuse.

The upper stretch of the Harlem River Speedway, between Washington Bridge and Dyckman Street, was in good condition yesterday afternoon for the first time in two weeks, and the frequenters of the road and their fast steppers made good use of it. The brushing was of an unusually good order, close finishes marking the majority of the events, which were witnessed by a large crowd. There were several new animals on the stretch, whose trials were watched with much interest. Among them were a handsome bay trotter, driven by Charles Reilly, and a gray pacer that won several very creditable brushes, driven by F. C. Harrington.

About the first to arrive on the stretch was George Coleman, driving the mare Hattie Walters, (2:22¼.) The mare was turned to a good start with the pacer Red Echo, (2:25¼,) driven by E. C. Kirkland. The first quarter was covered nose and nose at a furious gait. Then Red Echo gained a half length with a spurt, but was not able to hold the advantage, and nearing the finish post Hattie Walters passed her opponent and won by almost a length. Freeland, (2:17¾,) driven by D. Goodman, had a pretty trial with the gelding Harry Davis, and won by an open length, gained within 300 yards of the finish. One of the pretty races of the afternoon was between Johnny Agan, (2:05¾,) driven by A. C. Bostwick, and Crystal Chimes, driven by her trainer, M. Cleary. First one horse led and then the other. Johnny Agan, within a short distance of the post, made a spurt and was first by an open length. Harry Davis led Anheuser, driven by George Huber, in a lively half-mile go, and Johnny Agan beat Freelnnd, (2:17¼,) after a sharp contest. Among the many who witnessed the sport was H. O. Armour, driving his team of trotters; J. W. Cornish, driving the trotter David B., (2:09½;) Louis Kahn, driving the famous pacer George Wallace, (2:17½;) Dr. Moore, driving the brown trotter Querist, (2:12½;) Hugh Reilly, driving Commodore Porter, (2:13;) M. Fluchinger, driving Barney Kirkland, (2:23¼;) A. B. Gwathmay, driving his favorite team, Sallent and Louise Mac, and A. L. Newton, driving the pacer Hamilton.

There is every prospect of several hours' fine sport on the stretch this morning, as the roadbed, which was good yesterday, should be perfection to-day.

CHAPMAN WON C. A. C. CUP.

Trap Shooters in Close Contests at Clay Birds.

H. C. Chapman received the congratulations of his clubmates on the Owl's Head grounds of the Crescent Athletic Club, at the conclusion of the trap-shooting tournament of the club last night, when computation of the highest scores of the month showed that he had won the January Cup. Capt. J. N. Borland led the shooters for the day, with a total of 50. Dr. J. J. Keyes was second, and Frank B. Stephenson was third. The shooting conditions yesterday were good. Chapman captured the fifteen-bird sweepstake event, in addition to getting the cup, and after a tie with Dr. Keyes, in a sweepstakes at fifteen birds, won the shoot-off. The summaries:

MACKEY AND HUNTINGDON WON

Racquet and Tennis Club Team, Le Montague and Paton, Beaten in Four of Seven Games.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Jan. 26.—In a series of racquet matches brimful of brilliant play at the Philadelphia Racquet Club to-day, a quartet of local crack players met four of the experts of the Racquet and Tennis Club of New York, and after some remarkable skill, volleying, strategic playing, and general all-round good work, honors were even at the end. Barclay H. Warburton and Edgar G. Scott of the home club defeated Maurice Le Montague and M. G. Paton, the visitors, in the first match, after six most exciting games, the conditions being best four in seven. Clarence H. Mackey and F. Huntingdon of the Gotham organization turned the tables on George H. Brooke and Hugh Scott, the Quaker City players, in the second match, winning four of the seven games, by the scores of 15—5, 15—4, 11—15, 12—15, 10—15, 15—8, and 17—15.

Interest centred in the first match, for the reason that the four contestants represented the best skill of both clubs. The outcome was not only a great surprise to the visitors, but also to the home talent, as little did the clubmen who crowded the gallery dream that Warburton and Scott would beat all previous records of inter-city racquet matches here and come out victorious. Each game was a study to the initiated spectator, and the rapidity of the play and the incessant volleying before an ace was scored seemed to bewilder the crowd, and as each coveted point was made it was greeted with unstinted applause. Good work was quickly noticed and received the approbation it deserved.

The sixth and deciding game was one of the finest displays of racquets ever witnessed in the local court. "Eight all" was called by the marker after five attempts by each team. The spell was then soon broken by the local players, who scored five aces before the Gotham cracks had their inning. This resulted four aces when Warburton and Scott added the necessary two and won the game and match.

Paton and Le Montague gave a wonderful exhibition in the fifth game, when they piled up 12 points. They fought hard against the skill of Scott and Warburton and ran the score up, the game being won by 18 to 13. The summary follows:

First Game.—Warburton and Scott—1, 3, 7, 1, 3—15. Le Montague and Paton—1, 2, 1, 0, 0—4.

Second Game.—Warburton and Scott—0, 2, 0, 13—15. Le Montague and Paton—0, 6, 2, x—8.

Third Game.—Warburton and Scott—2, 0, 0, 2, 1, 2, 2, 3—12. Le Montague and Paton—1, 4, 2, 0, 3, 4, 0, 1—15.

Fourth Game.—Warburton and Scott—5, 0, 4, 4, 2—15. Le Montague and Paton—0, 3, 1, 1, 0—5.

Fifth Game.—Warburton and Scott—0, 1, 0, 0, 1, 4, 0, 2, 1—13. Le Montague and Paton—2, 3, 0, 3, 2, 2, 1, 0, 5—18.

Sixth Game.—Warburton and Scott—2, 2, 1, 1, 2, 0, 2—15. Le Montague and Paton—2, 1, 1, 2, 2, 4, 0—12.

George Standing did not come over with the New York team, and the game between him and Alfred Ellis was declared off.

Skater Woods Won Three Races.

Special to The New York Times.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Jan. 26.—Mott Woods proved his title as the champion skater of Monmouth County at the annual skating races on the South Shrewsbury River this afternoon by winning the one-mile county championship race, and finishing first in three of the four events in which he contested. The ice was rough and of a most miserable quality. A crowd of 500 saw the contests, and in the course of the afternoon several persons broke through the ice. One of these, Harry Coleman, was rescued after three others broke through in their efforts to save him. Miss Elsie Mitchell was among these. Summary of the races:

One Mile, Monmouth County Championship.—Won by Mott Woods, Long Branch; Ollie Slocum, Loyalton, second; Charles Woods, Long Branch, third. Time—3:24.

Half-Mile Race for Boys under Sixteen Years.—Won by Woodward Sutphen, Loyalton; Charles Allaire, Red Bank, second. Time—2:54.

One-half-Mile Handicap.—Won by Mott Woods, (scratch;) Ollie Slocum, (50 yards,) second; Charles Woods, (75 yards,) third. Time—2:48 2-5.

One-Mile Handicap.—Won by Mott Woods, (scratch;) Slocum, (150 yards,) second; Charles Woods, (165 yards,) third. Time—3:59.

Ice Palace Ready for Carnival.

SARANAC LAKE, N. Y., Jan. 26.—The fourth annual Winter ice carnival takes place here the last three days and evenings of this month, Jan. 29, 30, and 31. The ice palace, which was designed by a New York architect, and built under his supervision, is now completed, and is much larger and handsomer than any of the ice palaces built here in previous years.

At 1:30 o'clock on the afternoon of the first day will take place the grand parade of floats and decorated sleighs, headed by the Saranac Lake cornet band. Hockey matches, skating races for local championships, fancy skating by John F. Nilsson of Minneapolis, Minn., and a fancy dress ball will be some of the features of the carnival.

Race Track Results.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 26.—There was a general shifting of jockeys in the steeplechase to-day. The Stewards canceled Lawless's engagement to ride Don Clarencio, and put Adams, who had been engaged to ride Isen, up. Finnegan was selected to ride Isen, and her race showed marked improvement. Haydon met a lot of newcomers in the second race, but disposed easily of their pretensions despite the fact that he turned wide into the stretch, and lost ground, while Aretas saved it but weakened at the end. Tom Kingsley was always favorite in the stake, the Cotton Selling, being backed from evens to four to five. He made his own running, won as he pleased, and after the race was run up $400 and bought in. Haydon, Tom Kingsley, and Sir Gatlan were the winning favorites. Summaries: One mile—Hardly, 90 pounds, (Line,) 1; Blitbeful, 96, 2; Faith Wand, 90, 3. Time—1:41¼. Two-year-olds, three furlongs—Haydon, 113, (Dale,) 1; Endita, 108, 2; Bacci, 113, 3. Time—0:36¾. Steeplechase Handicap, short course—Miss Hannam, 142, (Porter, 1; Isen, 159, 2; Harve B., 154, 3. Time—3:09. Cotton Stakes, $1,000, seven furlongs—Tom Kingsley, 104, (Dale,) 1; Shut Up, 90, 2; Kohnwreath, 82, 3. Time—1:27⅘. One mile and an eighth; handicap—Sir Gatlan, 105, (Dale,) 1; Hood's Brigade, 97, 2; Major Mansor, 103, 3. Time—1:54½. One mile—Elsmore, 106, (Walsh,) 1; Pat Garrett, 103, 2; General Magruder, 103, 3. Time—1:41.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 26.—The $5,000 Winter Handicap at Tanforan Park to-day resulted in the best contest of the season. Eddie Jones, with Jenkins up, won the race by a head from The Lady, ridden by Tod Sloan, in the fast time of 2:04¾, breaking the coast record. Results: Seven furlongs—Loneliness, 102 pounds, (Coburn,) 1; Darlene, 102, 2; King Stella, 105, 3. Time—1:28½. Mile and seventy yards—Tuthill, 100, (Burns,) 1; MacGyle, 105, 2; Torsios, 119, 3. Time—1:45¾. San Francisco Champion Hurdle, two miles—Lothian, 163, (Sutherland,) 1; Credo, 160, 2; Can't Dance, 144, 3. Time—3:49⅘. Winter Handicap, mile and a quarter—Eddie Jones, 118, (Jenkins,) 1; The Lady, 111, 2; Advance Guard, 121, 3. Time—2:04¾. Six and a half furlongs—Dollie Weithoff, 105, (Jenkins,) 1; Dandy Jim, 92, and Grand Sachem, 103, dead heat for place. Time—1:21¼. One mile—Scotch Plaid, 111, (Jenkins,) 1; Joe Ripley, 114, 2; Faunette, 109, 3. Time—1:43.

Amateur Athlete Maguire Dead.

Charles J. Maguire, Chairman of the Athletic Commitee of the Crescent Athletic Club, and one of the best known amateur athletes in America in his prime, died at St. Mary's Hospital, Brooklyn, at an early hour yesterday morning. Mr. Maguire was thirty-seven years of age, and remained at his desk in his office up to Monday evening. On that day he complained of feeling ill, and on Tuesday decided to remain at his home. He was scheduled to play on the Crescent Athletic Club team in the interclub bowling series that night, but had to send word that he would be unable to get down to the Clinton Street house through illness. It was determined by the doctor later that he was suffering from appendicitis, and was accordingly taken to St. Mary's Hospital and passed through the operation successfully. He was convalescing nicely when pneumonia stepped in and developed so rapidly that on Friday night all hope for his recovery was gone. He sank calmly away early the next morning.

It was in amateur baseball that Charles J. Maguire made his mark, and he was noted as an all-round player.

Changes in Standing as a Result of the Week's Games.

ORIENTS SCORED AGAINST

New York Underwriters' Agency Leads in Fire Insurance League Series—Standing of the Clubs.

Several important changes in the standing of the clubs in some of the local bowling leagues were made during the past week. In the tournament of the Associated Cycling Clubs of Long Island the Orient Wheelmen met their first defeat, but still retain first place, and the Brooklyn Bicycle Club, by winning two games, advanced from seventh to second place, making at the same time a new high team score of 997 for the tournament.

In the North Side League tournament the Morris Wheelmen lost two games, in consequence of which the Knickerbockers now tie them for first place. In the Fire Insurance League the Underwriters' Agency took the lead during the week.

The Greater New York series is now completed, except for the ties, and these will be decided this afternoon on the Palace alleys, Brooklyn. Several postponed games are yet to be rolled in the North Side, American National, Columbia, and Harlem tournaments.

The New York Inter-Club Bowling League made a good start during the week, the New York Athletic Club winning three games and taking the lead. The standing of the clubs in the principal local tournaments follows:

REGATTA STEWARDS MEET.

At a meeting of the Stewards of the Intercollegiate Regatta, held in this city last night, it was decided to hold the regatta this year on July 2. A single sculls race, for which entries have been received from Georgetown, Syracuse, and Cornell, will be rowed in the morning, and in the afternoon the races for freshmen eights, 'Varsity fours, and 'Varsity eights will be decided.

It was authoritatively stated after the meeting that no negotiations to secure the entry in the regatta of any foreign 'Varsity crew had been or would be entered into and that no invitation to any such crew to compete would be sent. As one of the Stewards stated last night: "We hold this regatta for the crews of Columbia, Cornell, and Pennsylvania, and we invite certain others, such as Wisconsin and Georgetown, to take part, and that is all there is to it."

The date of the regatta this year is later than usual, on account of the tidal conditions. The Stewards select a day when the races can be rowed in the afternoon with a strong ebb tide. They have found that the official tide tables for Poughkeepsie are about two hours behind the actual time of the tides, and the hour set for the races is figured accordingly.

One of the stewards stated last night that it was unlikely that invitations to compete in the regatta will be sent to any colleges but Wisconsin and Georgetown. These will be notified of the date chosen and informed that their entries will be welcomed.

CURLERS OUT IN FORCE.

Edwards Family Defeats Thistles for Gordon Medal—Final Match To-morrow.

Eight clubs of curlers were represented at Van Cortlandt Lake yesterday in the annual competition for the Gordon Medal, offered for the rink championship. The clubs were paired off in four-rink matches, the victors being Jersey City, St. Andrews, Manhattan, and Van Cortlandt. The Manhattan and Yonkers clubs had the closest contest, the game finishing in a tie, but Manhattan got the play-off.

Jersey City and the Thistle Club curlers had a hot game, and the victory of Jersey City was somewhat of a surprise, as the Thistle curlers won the championship last year. The Jersey City rink, however, was composed of the famous Edwards family of curlers, and was skipped by W. D. Edwards, a former State Senator. They won by 23 to 19.

When winners met winners in the semi-final round Jersey City beat the Manhattans, and Van Cortlandt fairly swamped the St. Andrews curlers by the unusually high score of 25 to 3. Jersey City and Van Cortlandt will meet to-morrow in the final match for the Gordon Medal, which has been in competition since 1884. The clubs and players were:

Vassar College's Ice Carnival.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Jan. 26.—The annual ice carnival at Vassar College was held by the students to-night on Vassar Lake. It was an impromptu affair, but about 300 young women took part. The skaters wore fancy costumes and the festivities opened with a grand march to the music of an orchestra stationed on the bank. Over the lake were suspended hundreds of Chinese and Japanese lanterns, and a number of large flags. A large crowd of spectators viewed the spectacle. The ice was in perfect condition.

PRINCETON WON AT HOCKEY.

Columbia Seven Completely Outclassed in Intercollegiate Championship Contest.

With a team of former substitutes and a valueless goal keeper, Columbia, though contesting bravely to the end, could accomplish nothing against the Princeton hockey seven in a championship game at the St. Nicholas Rink last evening. It was the Blue and White's opening contest, and many supporters and well wishers turned out, only to see Columbia finally go down in defeat by a score of 8—1. The only alleviation Columbia had was that the team was not representative of the best hockey material at the university, for the former 'Varsity seven was debarred from playing for violating the Faculty Committee's rules. The reorganized seven was composed of substitutes, who, with the exception of Eyer and De Witt, were inexperienced. Columbia's defeat by so large a score was due to the incapacity of the goal keeper, who was unable to stop even the easiest shoots. He was by all odds the weakest member of the seven. Columbia had little team work, but the forward line often did well, and would have scored but for Princeton's splendid defense.

On the attack Princeton was a bit faster than Columbia, but she had very little team play, and gained the greater part of her goals through the poor work of Von Bernuth.

McKee and McAlpin faced off, Princeton rushed the puck down the ice, but Benedict sent it back on a return. Princeton showed superiority over Columbia from the start, for the puck hovered around the blue and white goal almost continually, and during the opening part of the contest Paull had no chance to stop any shots. Duden at point, although he was clumsy, did some effective work in lifting the puck toward the Tiger goal. Play was getting very rough, as Columbia was obeying her Captain's orders to rush the game. The eight forwards, with a cover point or so thrown in, were constantly tumbling and sent sprawling on the ice by the tripping tactics of all the players. Hockey sticks were flying in the air, and some speedy blows were directed at ankles and shins. The game at this period was not scientific, and resolved itself into a question of who could best swing his stick and knock down the other players. De Witt carried the puck near the Princeton goal, but Ogden and Alexander recaptured it safely. The puck went skimming back to Little, who, by a well-directed and speedy lift, sent the disk sailing through the air. Von Bernuth stood nonchalantly between the Columbia goal posts, with his thoughts on anything but the game, when he was suddenly awakened by the puck landing at his feet. It slid slowly into the net, bringing Princeton's first score on an unusually easy shot.

Eyer and De Witt, the only two members of the seven who had played against a college team before, were doing the greater part of the work. They were in every play and accomplished much on the defense. McAlpin apparently became annoyed at Eyer's clever work and rapped him smartly over the shins, for which Referee Callender ruled him off the ice temporarily. Alexander by a mighty drive sent the rubber into the net for the second score. Columbia after Nassan's second score got her first shot for goal on Akin's pretty lift. Sheffield neatly turned it inside.

Just a little while before time was up Poe went down the ice, and smashed the puck to Benedict. It struck his skate, and again slid slowly by the unconscious goalkeeper, who was interested in something going on at the other end of the rink.

Alexander scored twice in quick succession during the fore part of the second half. Columbia was striving desperately to keep from being shut out, and after Ogden got the sixth point for his team, rallied desperately. Akin gained the puck down in a corner by the Blue and White goal, and, dodging cleverly, carried it down the ice where from the centre of the rink he made a long clean lift straight to Paull, who at first stopped the disk, but could not keep it quite out of the net. Columbia tallied, and short sharp cheers echoed forth from every part of the rink. Columbia was grateful for even this meagre score. Play grew very rough again, and Eyer and McAlpin were ruled off. Ogden gained the seventh goal on an easy shoot past Von Bernuth. The last score came through Alexander's shoot after a spectacular scurry down the rink by Ogden. Line up:

Princeton, 8.	Position.	Columbia, 1.
Paull	Goal	Von Bernuth
Sheffield	Point	Benedict
Little	Cover point	Duden
McAlpin	Forward	McKee
Alexander	Forward	Akin
Ogden	Forward	Eyer
Poe	Forward	De Witt

Goals scored—Alexander, (4,) Ogden, (2,) Little, Poe, Akin. Referee—F. W. Callender, St. Nicholas Skating Club. Time of game—Twenty-minute halves.

Columbia's defeat by Princeton last night showed decisively that her reorganized seven cannot figure very well in the race for the intercollegiate championship this week. It appears as if Yale, having already defeated Princeton, would repeat her performance of the last two years by again winning first honors.

Each of the five teams have now played a game and the sevens rank as follows:

	Won.	Lost.
Yale	1	0
Brown	1	0
Princeton	1	1
Columbia	0	1
Pennsylvania	0	1

GOOD SKATING AT VERONA LAKE.

McDonald, Wray, and Sinniarud Carry Off the Honors.

Skaters flocked to Verona Lake, near Montclair, N. J., yesterday, not only for the excellent sport which the crisp weather allowed, but to see some of the fastest local skaters in competition for medals and honor. Harry McDonald, the speedy young racer, who beat Leroy See at the same place three weeks ago, had things all his own way in the half-mile scratch event, winning with a splendid spurt in 1:28 2-5. He was going so fast that, as he crossed the line, he continued at top speed for over thirty yards, and ran pell-mell into a photographer who was engaged in the pleasant pastime of snapping his camera at McDonald as the latter finished. The skater, photographer, and camera went down in a bunch, and that picture will never be seen.

Peter Sinniarud, the young Swedish skater, competed in three of the four events, and got first from the scratch mark in the one-mile handicap in the good time of 3:03 3-5. Sinniarud is now a student in Heffley School, Brooklyn, from which McDonald also enters. James Wray, the West Farms skater, made an excellent showing in the three-mile race from 50 yards handicap. Sinniarud gave him a tight finish, but the latter could not get the lead. Wray's time was 6:29 2-5. A. Y. Sarony was third.

The summaries are:

Half-Mile Race, Scratch.—Won by Harry McDonald, Heffley School, Brooklyn; James Wray, West Farms, second; Peter Sinniarud, Heffley School, third. Time—1:28 2-5.

One-Mile Race, Novice.—Won by Warren Lyon, Montclair, N. J.; John Barry, New York, second; W. E. Mosher, Harlem Wheelmen, third. Time—3:36 4-5.

One-Mile Race, Handicap.—Won by Peter Sinnarud, Heffley School, (scratch;) Barrett Smith, New York, (60 yards,) second; James Wray, West Farms, (25 yards,) third. Time—3:03 3-5.

Three-Mile Race, Handicap.—Won by James Wray, West Farms, 50 yards; Peter Sinnarud, Heffley School, (scratch,) second; A. Y. Sarony, New York A. C., (130 yards,) third. Time—6:29 2-5.

The next races at Verona Lake will be on Feb. 12.

Valiant Sails for Florida.

The Valiant, William K. Vanderbilt's steam yacht, left for Palm Beach, Fla., yesterday. Mr. Vanderbilt left New York last Thursday, and will board the yacht when she arrives at Palm Beach. He will cruise in West Indian waters, returning to this city some time in February.

Orange Lake Ice Yacht Regatta.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Jan. 26.—The first regatta of the season of the Orange Lake Ice Yacht Club was sailed this afternoon over the club course of ten miles. The ice was

VACANT PROPERTY IN DEMAND

Sales by Brokers—Several Attractive Auction Offerings Ahead—Complete Schedule for the Week.

Last week was hardly to be compared with the one immediately preceding it in the matter of large deals, but it may be confidently asserted that published reports, as is not infrequently the case, have afforded during the last few days a far from adequate idea of the amount of business that is being transacted. Much of the present activity is of a purely speculative character; deals are made with perhaps other deals of greater magnitude depending upon them, and it is for this reason that the facts regarding them are so carefully guarded by the interested parties.

But in spite of this condition, those transactions which have become public, although none can be said to be of the first magnitude, make in the aggregate a showing that is far from discreditable. Vacant property continues to command the larger share of attention. The Schieffelin estate's lots at West End Avenue and Ninety-second Street were sold to Henry Oppenheimer. Isaac H. Clothier of Philadelphia, who has been a heavy buyer in the upper Fifth Avenue section, and more recently on Washington Heights, bought last week five West End Avenue lots, just north of One Hundred and Sixth Street, from Jacob D. Butler. Plots were acquired for apartment house sites on the north side of Ninetieth Street, east of Columbus Avenue, and on One Hundred and First Street, east of Broadway, the former by Thomas J. McLaughlin and the latter by William Hennessey.

The purchase of the Home for the Friendless property, on East Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth Streets, by the Woman's Hotel Company was in many ways the most significant of the week's deals, meaning that the carrying forward of that enterprise is assured. The selection of a site has been a troublesome problem, made so by the facts that it had been decided to locate the hotel between Madison Square and Thirty-fourth Street, Broadway, and Fourth Avenue, and that in this territory there were few available plots the prices of which were not prohibitive.

The Hotel Virginia property, at Eighth Avenue and the Circle, manages to keep itself in the public eye through the sudden introduction in the Legislature of a bill affecting it, and its equally sudden withdrawal. The resale of the property last week to Mrs. Mary A. Fitzgerald of Litchfield, Conn., seems to leave its future as much a matter of doubt as ever.

Latest Sales by Brokers.

Plummer & Shurman have sold for Flake & Dowling the plot on the north side of One Hundred and First Street, 100 feet east of Broadway, 54.9 by 100.11. The buyer will erect a seven-story apartment house on the lots.

Henry L. Feit has bought from the Watts estate, for improvement, the block front on Morningside Avenue East, between One Hundred and Twenty-second and One Hundred and Twenty-third Streets, 201.10 by 100.

Alexander McDowell has sold to Justice Henry Bischoff, through Jesse C. Bennett & Co., the new apartment house at the northwest corner of Seventh Avenue and One Hundred and Sixth Street.

A. L. Mordecai & Son have sold for V. Everit Macy the five-story flat, 58 West One Hundred and Sixth Street, 27.6 by 100; also, for the same seller, the five-story flat 2,207 Fifth Avenue, 25 by 100.

W. P. Maugam has sold for the Association for the Relief of Respectable Aged and Indigent Females the plot on the south side of One Hundred and Fourth Street, 170 feet east of Amsterdam Avenue, 100 by 100, together with an abutting plot on the north side of One Hundred and Third Street, 87.6 by 100. The purchaser, S. Whitehausen, will improve the property.

D. D. Benson has sold for Edward Meagher, for $42,000, the five-story flat with stores, 173 and 175 East One Hundred and Twenty-third Street, 34.1 by 100.11.

J. Edgar Leaycraft & Co. have sold for the Franklin Savings Bank to Charles W. Hoffman the five-story brick factory, 223 West Twenty-eighth Street, 23 by 98.9.

D. Phoenix Ingraham & Co. have sold for Helen S. Ogilvie to Louis Lese the plot on the west side of Park Avenue, 50 feet north of One Hundred and Seventeenth Street, 100 by 90.

S. Greenfield has sold, through A. Satzman, to Henry Krengel, for $26,000, the two four-story buildings, 48 and 50 Pitt Street, 40 by 76 and irregular.

I. N. Natkins & Co. report that they have sold for George Stepney a plot on the west side of Stebbins Avenue, 129 feet south of Chisholm Street.

Charles E. Duross has leased to the Street Cleaning Department the lots 408 and 410 West Fifteenth Street, upon which a stable will be erected.

The second floor of the building at Sixteenth Street and Union Square East has been leased, through Alexander J. Roux, to the Citizens' Union for their offices and headquarters.

The Auction Room.

This week brings the first large offering of the season in the shape of the holdings of the estate of Philip Herrman, to be sold on Tuesday by Auctioneer Bryan L. Kennelly. A glance at the schedule printed below shows that the majority of the properties are flats and dwellings on West Fourteenth Street, near Eighth and Ninth Avenues. There are also parcels on West Fifteenth and Seventeenth Streets, while the Bronx is represented by the two tenements 531 and 533 East One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Street and two lots on the south side of One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street, just east of Lincoln Avenue. Twenty-six lots in Hoboken—the entire block bounded by Thirteenth and Fourteenth Streets, Park and Willow Avenues—are also included in the offering.

Although the sale will not take place until Feb. 14, an announcement by Auctioneer Sherman that is already attracting attention has to do with properties belonging to the estate of Joel Wolfe and including 805 Fifth Avenue, adjoining the northeast corner of Thirty-first Street, 28 by 150.

The house and lot—with the exception of the conventional sort, although the sale of 4 West Twenty-second Street for $71,600 and of several smaller parcels, offered voluntarily, indicate that properties the character of which warrants attention will not have to wait long for bidders. The sale of the block bounded by Third and Lincoln Avenues, the Southern Boulevard, and the Harlem River, owner by the estate of Bryan Lawrence, developed a surprise in that the price did not approach expectations, of course, the appraisal of such a property is made extremely difficult in that its waterfront rights give to it a special utility so that it would be either extremely valuable to the right owner, or, on the other hand, the worst sort of an "elephant" in another's possession. But with due regard for these conditions, last Tuesday's price, $181,000, seemed low, when it was remembered that less than two years ago Flake & Dowling bid $213,000 for the property.

There were recorded last week 281 mortgages, for $4,634,694; of which 90, for $1,410,515, were at 5 per cent.; 121, for $1,751,190, were at more, and 70, for $1,473,000, were at less. In the corresponding week last year there were recorded 251 mortgages, for $3,283,809; of which 80, for $939,400, were at 5 per cent.; 112, for $744,767, were at more, and 59, for $1,599,642, were at less.

MR. CARNEGIE'S ALLEGED PURCHASE

The report that Andrew Carnegie has bought the apartment house at the southwest corner of Madison Avenue and Ninety-first Street was revived yesterday. Title to the property stands in the name of Wolf Kroenthal, and rumors of its sale to Mr. Carnegie have been frequent ever since the latter began to acquire the land on the north side of Ninety-first Street, at the rear of his mansion on the Fifth Avenue front of that block.

The broker who has represented Mr. Carnegie in all of his real estate purchases in that neighborhood said yesterday that he had not heard of the acquisition of the Madison Avenue corner referred to, and from what he knew of Mr. Carnegie's intentions he did not believe that the property had been bought.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS.

In the following list "mtg" stands for mortgage and "R S" for revenue stamps. The war revenue law provides that stamps shall be placed on all conveyances at the rate of 50 cents for each $500 of consideration. This "consideration" has been held to mean only the equity above the mortgage, except in the rare cases where the purchaser assumes payment of the mortgage. The amount of the mortgage plus 1,000 times the value of the revenue stamps on the conveyances should therefore show the true consideration:

Says Lien Is Unjust.

Thomas P. Sinnott has written to THE TIMES to say that the mechanics' liens for $725, filed on Friday against his property on Fifth Avenue, just south of One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street, are unjust. He says that he is not indebted to the lienor, Thomas R. Calder, and that he shall take the necessary steps to have the lien removed at once.

COTTON.—January had precedence in yesterday's trading in cotton, and alons showed a net gain for the day. The rest of the list was sluggishly influenced by legitimate conditions which were of bearish average. On the opening call prices were 5 points higher on January, but 2@6 points lower on the rest of the list. A hurried drive for cover soon carried January to 10.25, or 19 points above the closing figure of yesterday. Thereafter that contract kept within a range of 5 points, with shorts badly frightened by stories that next week would see 11 cents in force. The better minds in the trade predicted continued slack speculation so long as the market was dominated by a strong clique, as was now the case. The commission houses declared their constituents were flatly refusing to take hold, and were fearful of an extension of the manipulation to March, May, and even July, made possible by the relatively lower prices in New York than in any other market. Conservative estimates placed the amount to be brought into sight this week at 200,000 to 205,000 bales, as compared with 209,000 last week, 229,000 this week last year, 257,000 bales in 1899, and 272,000 bales in 1898. Spot cotton closed dull, with quotations 1/16c advance on basis of middling Gulf; middling land and 10⅝c for middling Gulf; no sales. Southern spot markets were telegraphed as follows: New Orleans steady, unchanged, at 9¾c; Mobile dull and nominal, unchanged at 9 5-16c. Savannah steady, unchanged at 9 7-16c; Charleston firm, unchanged at 9¾c; Wilmington firm, ⅛c up, at 9¾c; Norfolk steady, unchanged at 9¾c; Baltimore steady, unchanged at 9¾c; Memphis quiet, unchanged at 9¼c; Augusta steady, unchanged to 1-16c off, at 9⅝c; St. Louis quiet, unchanged at 9¼c. Estimated receipts Monday at New Orleans are 11,000 to 13,000 bales, against 12,316 bales a week ago, and 4,968 bales last year. At Houston, 5,000 to 9,000 bales, as compared with 4,779 bales last week and 7,063 bales last year.

$50,000 WORTH OF FINE CANDY BURNED

Ode & Gerbereux's Factory in West Broadway Destroyed.

STREET CAR LINES BLOCKED

Tenements Filled with People Emptied by Orders of the Police—Many Exciting Scenes.

Carefully prepared and dainty bonbons and chocolates resolved themselves into smoke and dissolved altogether last night in the seven-story brick building at 419 West Broadway, after three hours of fire. A stock of $50,000 worth of fine candies was burned up, and a $25,000 building was badly damaged. The total loss was about $75,000.

The fire caused much trouble. People riding up town in the elevated cars to theatres were detained an hour by the blocking of the train, and down-town cars with people bound home were stalled for the same time. Tenements filled with people were emptied by order of the police and Building Department officials and firemen, electric cars were stalled for about two hours, and minor incidents made the fire an exciting one. Only one person was hurt, a fireman, William J. Flynn of Engine No. 30, who was overcome by smoke, but returned to work. The building was occupied and owned by Ode & Gerbereux, one of the largest candy making firms in the country.

No one knows the cause of the fire, which was discovered on the third floor by Policeman Crosby. He sent in an alarm, and notified Mr. Gerbereux, who was in a nearby café with a friend. Mr. Gerbereux ran out and became so excited that he tried to rush into the burning building, but was restrained. The 200 employes of the firm had left at 5 o'clock, and at 6 o'clock, when the fire started, no one was in the place.

Another alarm, and then a third were quickly sent in by the firemen. The fire burned hotly, broke through the great iron shutters in front, and was roaring madly in a few minutes, while a crowd of firemen were vainly trying to raise Water Tower No. 3, in spite of the elevated structure. They had to give it up after wasting some twenty minutes. They were then sent to the rear, where the terrible flames which had broken through the iron shutters on all floors above the third, of which it had taken complete possession, were threatening the five-story factory of D. Sichter & Co., underwear manufacturers at 105, 107, 109, and 111 Wooster Street, separated from the burning building by only a five-foot alley. Very hard work there by the firemen for two hours saved the building.

Firemen of Engines Nos. 30, 13, and 27 were working on the front fire-escape of the building, suffering not a little from the intense heat, spattering water, and showers of broken glass. Flynn was overcome re and had to be carried down. A St. Vincent's Hospital ambulance was summoned and Drs. Ren, Hughes, and Levy came along with it. Flynn had been revived by the time it arrived and he insisted on going back to work.

To take the place of the loss of the water tower's hoisting powers the firemen ran hose lines up the elevated road structure and "Siamesed" lines, a term for running two hose lines together, to send water through one nozzle. This made several effective streams to pour water into the upper floors. The fire stopped the elevated trains, to the disgust of the crowds of passengers bound up town for theatres, who had to sit in the cars, as there was no way for them to walk back or forward to the station. The people in down-town trains were in a similar state, and no passengers on these trains cared much about the fire. They were detained over an hour, and when the trains started on the engineers in the cabs blew their whistles in defiance.

The people in the electric cars stood the block for some minutes and then got out and went on in other ways. The surface cars were blocked twice as long as the "L" trains.

No. 421 West Broadway, next to the burning building, is a two-story frame structure, formerly owned by Frank Brunner, who is dead, and whose estate is in litigation of some kind, so that the building has not been occupied for several years. It is boarded up. That was in danger, but the firemen saved it. There are four tenements in the rear, and the families in these were frightened when the big fire started. They rushed out with their children and such of their effects as they could gather. No. 417, a five-story tenement, had to be cleared of its inmates on account of the danger, and No. 421, another tenement, was ordered cleared by Superintendent John Dooner of the Building Department, who feared the side wall of the big candy factory might fall on it. This did not happen, however.

While the fire was at its height a single-horse United States mail wagon was driven past the fire lines by the driver, who drove over some hose lines and worked his way up in front of the burning building, to the annoyance of firemen and police.

Chief Croker jumped out and grasped the horse by the bridle. He turned him around and made the driver go back. He and the driver had a hot argument. Chief Croker said the man had no right to go past as he did, and that such drivers must go around the block at fires. He said he would report the driver, who had Wagon No. 65.

Superintendent of the Building Department Dooner wears a gold badge and tried to get past the fire lines with it, but was refused admittance and pushed out by a policeman. Another policeman who knew him escorted him in.

The fire started at 6 o'clock and was declared under control at 8:45. Mr. Gerbereux said they had made up a large stock in anticipation of shutting down as they wished to put in new boilers.

FIRE ON EAST EIGHTH STREET.

$10,000 Damage Done to Building Occupied by Several Firms.

While the fire on West Broadway was burning, another blaze started at 38 East Eighth Street. All engines but one for that call were at the West Broadway fire, and when the firemen got to the Eighth Street fire, they had to send in a second alarm to bring out the requisite engines for a one-alarm. They could not extinguish the flames before $10,000 damage was done, much of it by water.

The top floor is occupied by Weiner Brothers & Miller, clothiers. H. Gottfried, neckwear, is on the fourth floor; G. Wyner, ostrich feathers, on the third floor; the Standard Embroidery Works on the second floor, and Scherer Brothers, restaurant, on the first floor.

During the excitement of these fires an alarm was sent in from the box at Congress and Houston Streets. It was found to be a false alarm. This box has the record of having had more false alarms rung in from it than any other box in the city. The work is not mischievous, the firemen say, but people there get scared easily, and sometimes get so frightened as to send in needless alarms of fire at this box

WANTS SING SING PRISON PULLED DOWN

Prison Association Committee Calls It a Hotbed of Disease.

Walls Drip with Moisture, Cells Are Dark and Dirty, and Plumbing Arrangements Are Inadequate.

Old Sing Sing Prison, whose name for sixty-seven years has been linked with the punishment of violators, big and little, of the criminal statutes of the State, has been pronounced an altogether inadequate and unfit abode, even for convicts, principally on account of its dangerously unsanitary condition, by a committee of the Prison Association, who will recommend to the State Health Board its condemnation and demolition.

Should this be done the destruction of the Tombs and the abandonment of Sing Sing would effect the passing of the two most famous penal institutions of the country and those which have sheltered the greatest number of the notorious criminals.

The Prison Association of New York, moved by the recent typhoid epidemic and the alarming increase of tuberculosis among the convicts, delegated J. G. Phelps Stokes, Alexander M. Hadden, Henry E. Gregory, J. Seely Ward, Jr., Charleton T. Lewis, Eugene Smith, and Samuel J. Barrows, to make a thorough investigation of the conditions at Sing Sing from a sanitary standpoint. This committee, with Charles F. Wingate, a sanitary engineer, thoroughly inspected the prison on Jan. 19. The committee's report will be submitted to the Legislature at an early date and will condemn the inadequacy and insufficiency of proper drainage, ventilation, and absence of sunlight of the old institution.

Mr. Wingate found that the location of the prison, only five feet above tidewater, near the Hudson River, caused the frowning stone walls to drip with moisture at all times. Sunlight, he says, never penetrates to the prisoners' cells and fresh air strays in through miniature windows. The interior atmosphere, he says, is polluted by improper drainage and plumbing, combined with the exhalations from the 1,350 convicts "doubled up" in 1,200 cells.

Deeming the need of urgent action imperative, the committee will appear before the State Board of Health Wednesday and make the following recommendations:

"In view of all the facts, there is but one conclusion open to the committee, and that is to recommend the immediate condemnation and abolition of Sing Sing Prison. An entirely new prison, built on modern principles in a more favorable locality, should be constructed as soon as possible. For this purpose convict labor can be profitably employed.

"As an immediate palliative of bad ventilation, we recommend the installation of an electric fan for changing the air and the improvements in plumbing suggested by Mr. Wingate. These changes can only mitigate bad conditions growing out of the structure and location of the prison. They ought not to be made any excuse for delaying the only thorough and absolute remedy—the removal of the prison itself."

The present prison was erected in 1838. Owing to the damp and moist conditions of the cells, the lack of fresh air, and the inadequate and out-of-date plumbing facilities, typhoid, grip, and consumption have attacked large numbers of prisoners soon after their incarceration.

"No one," says Mr. Wingate, "would deny a prisoner sufficient food and drink, yet it is no less inhuman to refuse him an ample supply of sunlight and fresh air. Public sentiment would rebel at the thought of condemning a convict to half rations, yet the space provided for each convict at Sing Sing is less than one-third the normal amount. The cell structure is simply a huge box of masonry set on a polluted soil, and containing an inner box of 1,200 cells, occupied for sixteen hours as sleeping places. Each cell has a capacity of 145 cubic feet of air, while in some cells where there are two men the air supply amounts to 71½ cubic feet per head. This doubling up is necessitated by the constant scraping and whitewashing of all the cells to destroy vermin. This is very much like lung starvation, and the consequences are and will continue to be serious. One can readily imagine the effect of confining men, not naturally, in such a cramped space, with straw beds that rapidly absorb impurities; blankets that are seldom washed, and with no possible escape for the products of respiration and exhalations from their persons."

The twelve hundred cells in the six tiers of the prison, says Mr. Wingate, measure 6 feet 3 inches in height, are 7 feet long, while the entrance is only 28 inches wide, with a heavy iron grating, set on the outside of a two-foot wall, like the neck of a bottle. Narrow slits some 10 feet distant admit a modicum of light. Even in the brightest sunshine it is difficult to read in any of the cells, and a twilight gloom constantly prevails.

The site of the prison, says the expert, is most unfortunate from a sanitary point of view, and its selection was a gross error of judgment. Lying in a hollow, on made ground, between a sloping hillside and the Hudson, it receives the surface drainage of the land above, and the sewage of the village discharges into the river only a short distance above the prison, tending to pollute the stream and the entire surroundings. The condition of the interior of the prison, built only with a regard for strength and security, is most severely condemned by Mr. Wingate.

"The prevalence of grip, which has affected nearly every prisoner," says Mr. Wingate, "the constant complaints of headache, pains, and constipation, together with the recent epidemic of typhoid and consumption, the latter attacking the younger and most robust convicts, point unmistakably to the presence of conditions not conducive to health. Where vermin breed so abundantly as to defy whitewash, sulphur fumes, and other destructive agencies, disease germs will flourish, and no better laboratory for their propagation and diffusion could be devised. There is no fresh air in the cells except that entering by small windows closed in inclement weather. The area of the building is such that nothing but forced ventilation would serve any practical purpose.

"The plumbing in the cell building is limited to one closet on the ground floor and a sink for draining water on each tier above. The waste pipe does not extend through the roof to the outer air, and foul odors from the slime-coated interiors have free vent into the building, and are one more source of pollution. The air ducts being inaccessible form admirable nesting places for vermin and germs, and should be sealed up rather than retained in the present condition.

"I must, therefore, condemn the entire sanitary arrangements in the most unqualified manner, and urge their radical renovation, or, better still, that the prison buildings be condemned and new ones constructed in their place."

PRINTERS IN A PANIC.

Jones Fired at Two Fellow-Employes and Severely Wounded One.

Arthur Glenn, employed by the American Press Association, at 45 Park Place, was shot and severely wounded yesterday afternoon by William Jones, also employed there. Forty printers were at work in the rooms at the time, and Glenn was wounded after Jones had shot at Henry Hawkins, another employe. Jones escaped to Brooklyn, where he lives, but was caught last night by Detectives Mooney and Connor of the Church Street Station and locked up there.

According to the story of the police and some of the printers, Jones had a grudge against the men he tried to shoot, believing they were trying to bring about his discharge. Yesterday morning at about 11 o'clock he struck Hawkins in the eye after a dispute with him and Glenn, and then left the place. At 3 o'clock he returned, intoxicated, and, after renewing the dispute, pulled a revolver and fired at Hawkins. Foreman Pollard knocked the revolver upward and the second shot struck the ceiling. In the meantime Glenn had tried to hide behind a form, and the printers fled in every direction. Jones, however, fired a third shot, aiming at Glenn, and the bullet struck him in the leg, near the thigh. After this Jones fled. Glenn is in Hudson Street Hospital.

Jones, the printers say, was once a policeman, serving touring Theodore Roosevelt's administration. One night he went to his precinct station and laying his club, badge, and belt on the Sergeant's desk, said he was through with the force for all time. He then went back to the printing trade, which he had deserted to become a policeman.

Adelphi College Endowment Fund.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Adelphi College, in Brooklyn, held recently, it was decided that all founders and benefactors who contribute the sum of $50,000 or upward toward the support of the college may endow a professorship, which will be designated by the name of the benefactor. The sum of $3,000 will be accepted as a founding for a scholarship. This decision is only part of a plan in operation for raising a fund for the endowment of the college. Dr. William W. Shoare, Professor of Chemistry in the college, has given up charge of his department for a year in order to give his whole time to the work of raising the fund.

PROF. PUPIN'S ODD CAREER

From a Turkish Bath Attendant to a Columbia Professorship.

WAS A SERVIAN IMMIGRANT

Discoverer of Ocean Telephony Landed in This Country Almost Penniless —Now a Millionaire.

College professors who are incidentally millionaires are the exception, even in these roseate days of the twentieth century. Learning and wealth never were the best of friends, and it is not many days ago that a prominent light of the Faculty of Princeton publicly lamented that so many of his professorial brethren had to endure the slings and arrows of knowing that they were more impecunious than most of those whom they had to teach.

Prof. Michael J. Pupin of Columbia University, discoverer of ocean telephony, to use a popular phrase, is one of the few professor-millionaires, or millionaire-professors, who has succeeded in making his studies and his lectures in the classroom lead the way to wealth. Prof. Pupin twenty years ago was an employe at a very small salary in Dr. Shepard's Turkish baths establishment at 81 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn. Between that time and the present, and before it, lies a very interesting story of his life.

It was in 1874 that Prof. Pupin—he was not "Prof." then—came to this country. He was born in 1858 on that portion of the military frontier of Austria which is the most southern part of Hungary, extending from the Iron Gate of the Danube to the Adriatic. The dwellers of that district are of pure Serb race, who took up their habitation there about 250 years ago, at the special invitation of the Emperor of Austria. There were 500 families all told, and they came over from old Servia with their venerable patriarch, whose name was spelled Csarnoyebich and pronounced something else.

These Servians were granted absolute autonomy, in return for which concession they undertook to defend the frontier against the Turks. It thus happened that most of the population became devoted to military pursuits, and many of the best Austrian commanders were furnished by the little band in the southern frontier.

The Pupins were among the most distinguished of these settlers, and the future inventor of the ocean telephone was educated with a view to fitting him for military service. Young Pupin, however, found the discipline of the parade ground irksome, and his remonstrances on the subject not meeting the sympathetic consideration of the elder Pupin, he took matters into his own hands and came to America.

LANDS IN NEW YORK.

At the age of fifteen years he landed in New York and started out to make his way in the world as best he might. His education had been by no means neglected in the home land, and he combined a quick intelligence with a keen disposition to succeed. He had also a good knowledge of several languages.

Still, even with these desirable qualities, fortune seemed to hold aloof. Young Pupin even found difficulty in getting enough work to keep him from sometimes being hungry, and finally one day, after spending a night without shelter and partaking of a very light supper and a still more modest breakfast, he presented himself at Dr. Shepard's Turkish baths and asked for employment as a shampooer. There was a vacancy, and Pupin was engaged.

He remained there for three years, and it was the beginning which led to his ultimate success. At the baths the intellectual young Servian met many distinguished people, and his intelligent conversation and evident powers of original thought made an impression on more than one who frequented the establishment at that time.

Among the latter was the Rev. Dr. Homor, pastor of a Protestant Episcopal church of Brooklyn, who was so taken with him and impressed with the fact that something different from the work at which he was then engaged should occupy his energies that he got the young shampooer a scholarship at the Adelphi Academy, now Adelphi College. Pupin then gave up his situation at the baths as a regular employe, but still worked on Saturdays and Sundays, thus providing himself with a little money to pay his board for the rest of the week. At the end of two years he was graduated with honors, and was soon afterward made the recipient of a scholarship at Columbia University, which institution he entered in 1879.

In Columbia he distinguished himself by capturing a number of prizes, which added a few hundred dollars to his cash in hand. He also became a sort of leader of his class in a physical as well as intellectual sense, his fine physique and muscular development giving him the same prowess on the campus that his mental capacity yielded him in the classroom. In 1883 he graduated at the head of his class, and delivered the Greek salutatory. Among his most admiring friends who attended the commencement exercises on that occasion was his former patron, Dr. Shepard.

Pupin was next accorded a Fellowship in Columbia, and this enabled him to take a post-graduate course at Cambridge University, England, and at the University of Berlin, Germany. At the latter institution he studied under Prof. Bunsen and Prof. Kirchoff, the latter the discoverer of spectrum analysis. He received the degree of Ph. D., his course having been marked by high honors. In 1889 Prof. Pupin returned to Columbia and was appointed instructor of mathematical physics in the department of electrical engineering, which was then for the first time established.

RESEARCHES IN ELECTRICITY.

While Prof. Pupin's lectures have dealt with mathematics and physics in general, his researches have been chiefly in the domain of electricity, particularly in the matter of electrical wave propagation. The invention which has been so widely discussed during the past few days, and which will have its commercial application in ocean and long-distance telephony, is a practical application of a general theory of wave propagation on which he has been working for more than six years, and on which he intends to continue study for some time to come. The ultimate object of this theory is the investigation of the laws of the propagation of light through molecular complexes.

The method by which Prof. Pupin has solved the problem of long-distance telephony has already been described and is generally known to newspaper readers. In brief, it overcomes the natural dissipation of the electrical current by the insertion at regular intervals of induction coils, by which the current is renewed and strengthened and the volume of energy transmitted unimpaired over distances which, without such coils, it would be impossible to traverse by wire or cable.

The problem thus solved is one which has occupied electricians for a long time. As far back as 1854, when the first Atlantic cable was laid, it was found that signaling through cables must be conducted very slowly, otherwise the current sent in at one end was dissipated before it had reached the other end. Twenty words a minute was the best that could be done, and to telephone over a cable or a distance exceeding thirty miles was out of the question.

A large number of mathematicians and electrical engineers have since devoted time and study to this subject, but, until Prof. Pupin's recent discovery, without success. The sams difficulty which existed in the case of the Atlantic cable existed equally in ordinary telephone cables and in long-distance air lines, though with regard to the latter, of course, the difficulty was not quite so serious. Still, it was found by experience that telephony over air lines for a distance beyong 1,000 miles was a commercial impossibility.

The results of Prof. Pupin's investigations have given a complete mathematical solution of the problem, and also considerable elaborate and careful scientific experimental investigations demonstrating that the methods suggested by the mathematical theory can be easily carried out in practice. This certainty has been further proved by the series of careful tests to which the theory was subjected by the Bell Telephone Company before its purchase of the United States patents.

Prof. Pupin is receiving applications from all over Europe and from Canada for the purchase of his patents in various foreign countries. He received $500,000 and a handsome royalty for the rights to the use of his appliances in the United States. He expects to receive several hundred thousand more for the rights elsewhere. A few years ago Prof. Pupin married the sister of his old classmate and now fellow-Professor at Columbia, Prof. A. D. W. Jackson. She was then a widow, and it is understood that when she died, recently, she left Prof. Pupin a fortune of $1,000,000. Prof. Pupin is an enthusiastic golfer, and has a country preserve of several acres of rather stony land near Yonkers.

CHANGES IN GRACE CHURCH

The Property to Have Several New Buildings and Alterations.

Dr. Huntington, in Outlining Parish Plans, Says the Cost Will Be $118,000—Transformation of Fourth Avenue Front.

In his "Intorductory Notes" to the Year Book of Grace Parish for 1901, which was distributed among its parishioners yesterday, the Rev. Dr. William R. Huntington, rector of the church, dwells at considerable length upon proposed changes in the edifice itself and in adjacent property which it owns. These changes, if carried out in detail as described by Dr. Huntington, will result in a complete transformation of the Fourth Avenue frontage of the church and in a substantial enlargement at the chancel end of the main building. The rector believes that if the suggested alterations are prosecuted to their completion Grace Church will be the best-equipped parish church anywhere to be found.

In discussing the details of the proposed improvement, Dr. Huntington first refers to the enlargement of the chancel, and says that if made the change will give fifteen feet of additional length, and will also provide for two more clere-story windows, one on each side.

"Years ago," he adds, "at the same time when the present chancel window was put in place, the late Miss Wolfe presented to Grace Church lot No. 90 Fourth Avenue, having it in mind to safeguard the window from possible obscuration. The lot thus acquired was, however, just too narrow to allow the deepening of the chancel, and it was not until last year, when, through the public spirit of a few parishioners, lots No. 88 and No. 92 were acquired, that such plans as we have now matured became feasible."

Dr. Huntington explains that the new scheme on the Fourth Avenue side calls for a building on No. 88, to be known as the Choir House, intended as a home for the boys of the choir, most of whose homes are out of the city. On No. 90 is to be erected a stone structure of one story, to serve the purpose of a choir vestry and music room, connecting with the choir house and the church. On No. 92 the architect has drawn plans for a clergy house, with accommodations for three assistant ministers. For the work thus described the architect's figures are as follows:

Choir house	$42,000
Clergy house	27,000
Choir, vestry, and music room	16,000
Chancel	12,000
Heating, lighting, &c.	10,000
Architect's fees and contingencies	10,000
Total	$118,000

"Of these items two, namely, the chancel extension and the choir vestry," Dr. Huntington adds, "are already provided for; the former by the fund contributed for the purpose a year ago last Easter and the latter by a memorial contribution from one of our Grace Church families."

The rector then makes an appeal for the increase of the Sustentation Fund, which was begun last Easter with contributions of $20,000, to the sum of $200,000.

"This, humanly speaking," he continues, "would insure that Grace Church, as at present administered, should stand where it does, at the turn of Broadway—that is to say, almost exactly at the centre of Greater New York, for an indefinite period, independently of the accident of the wealth or poverty of its frequenters."

NEGRO BURGLAR CAPTURED.

Policeman Flath of the Vernon Avenue Station, Williamsburg, had an exciting chase and encounter with a burglar early yesterday afternoon. Flath was joined in the chase by over 200 persons. The fugitive, who was a negro, was finally captured, and fought the officer before he would submit to arrest. He described himself as Louis Scott, eighteen years old, and said his home was at 19 Fleet Place.

Scott was discovered in the apartments of Mrs. Margaret Smythe, on the third floor of 53 Nostrand Avenue, ransacking a bureau drawer. Mrs. Smythe at the time was cleaning the front room of her apartments, while her husband was sitting in the kitchen. A noise made by the negro attracted Mrs. Smythe's attention and when she hastened to the bedroom Scott tried to escape. Mrs. Smythe saw this movement and sprang in the doorway, barring his exit, while she screamed for help. The negro aimed a blow with his fist at Mrs. Smythe's head, but the woman dodged it and seized the man by the neck.

After a brief struggle the negro freed himself and darted down the stairs to the street. The screams of Mrs. Smythe were heard by her husband, and he started after the fugitive. The negro turned from Nostrand Avenue into Myrtle Avenue and ran in the direction of Marcy Avenue. Smythe's cries of "Stop, thief!" attracted a crowd of people, who joined in the chase. Among them was Policeman Flath. In his anxiety to escape the negro threw away a bunch of brass keys, which were picked up and turned over to the police.

After an exciting chase for several blocks the negro was captured. The prisoner was taken back to the Smythes' apartments, followed by several hundred people, and later to the Vernon Avenue Police Station, where he was locked up on a charge of burglary. He refused to answer any questions. The police believe that in the arrest of the negro they have cleared up many flat robberies of late. An entrance to the Smythe flat was secured by false keys.

GARRETT A. HOBART'S ESTATE.

When Vice President Garrett A. Hobart died in November, 1899, leaving an estate worth in the neighborhood of $2,000,000, a considerable part of his property consisted of personal estate in this State. Surrogate Fitzgerald appointed Charles S. Page an appraiser of this latter part of the estate to assess its value for the purpose of levying the inheritance tax.

The report of Mr. Page, which has been filed in the Controller's office, shows that the value of the personal property left by Mr. Hobart in this State amount to $397,963, chiefly in stocks and securities.

Advance Display of Imported Models in Silk Waists---A Prelude to Spring

PARIS, maker of Fashions, rests high claims to authority upon Silk Waists. In early January artists plan and produce exquisite styles that six weeks later the smart world hastens to endorse. We do not wait for later verdicts. Our Paris House secures and forwards these masterpieces at once. So, to-morrow, gems of beauty, smartest novelties and richest creations may be seen, admired and enjoyed, simultaneously with their appearance in the Capital City of France.

Fulness of bust, wide shoulders, unusual waist length will at once be noted--much simple severity of line in Tailored Waists—a strong tendency to blend many colors and elaborate with Laces in the very ornate Reception types. We especially feature new high neck Models for demi-dress (Carriage and Tailor Gowns), and introduce a Special Paquin design, almost Oriental in fulness, giving greatest freedom to the arms, gored, embroidered all round, opening over a smart little Vest.

NEW YORK'S GROWING RESTAURANT LIFE

Calls for a compromise between ultra-ornate and simply plain. These Tailored effects meet that need and will receive instant welcome.

Soft Finished Silks Predominate—Alencon, Brabant, Guipure Laces, Persian effects, faint flashes and touches of color are characteristics' Louis XV. effects suggest the glories of the Empire period, and Embroidering takes new forms that no writing can depict.

Postscript.—Advantage of Separate Waists—All the colors of Cloths now hinge upon these garments. Ladies can combine a rich, smart Silk Waist with plain Skirt, and be gowned at all hours with perfect propriety. They allow many variations of attire—are always correct, indoors and out, morning, noon and night.

TIMELY TOPICS IN CHICAGO

Politicians Active as Municipal Election Day Approaches.

MONEY FOR NEW SCHOOLS

Town of Lake Becomes an Object of Ridicule—The Clergy's Crusade Against Vice.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—The new redistricting ordinance is causing a great deal of embarrassment, to both Republicans and Democrats. A conference was held, in which it was decided that, if possible, the primary elections and city conventions of both parties will be held under the old ward divisions. Should it be found that the new ward lines must be followed, the Spring campaign will be the shortest ever known in municipal politics. The Republican leaders have planned to hold their primaries on Feb. 15, and the Democrats expect to fix a date later in the month. But at the conference it was found that unless the new ward lines can be disregarded the primary elections cannot be held till March 10, or even later.

The trouble arises over the fact that the Board of Election Commissioners will be unable to transfer the names of voters and rearrange the polling lists according to the new division of the wards before March 10.

Alderman Frank T. Fowler, Republican, is to make a determined fight for the Mayoralty. John M. Harlan has made no motion, but may give a dramatic surprise to his friends and enemies. Fred E. Coyne has gone to Washington to consult with friends, and may set his candidacy formally under way on his return. Sixty leading Republicans are propagating a boom for John R. Thompson, and Lorin C. Collins has been mentioned.

Urgent demands for the immediate construction of the proposed deep waterway from Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico by connecting the drainage canal with the Illinois River, and with the Mississippi, have been made to the Sanitary Board. J. L. Matthews, who presented the report upon which the proposal was based, made the trip from the lakes to the Gulf by houseboat, and his statistics are based on a careful survey of conditions. He submits that a channel fourteen feet deep from Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico would be a giant impetus to every manufacturing and farming industry of Illinois, the Mississippi Valley, and the Southwest. Such a channel, he believes, would mean a saving of from one-half to two-thirds over current transportation rates. He points out that the Illinois grain crop last year, valued at $129,718,250—five times the cost of providing such a waterway—would pass through this channel to the Eastern seaboard and the consumers of the East. It also contends that such a waterway would develop the Illinois coal fields until they would supply the big iron manufacturing plants of the South, which now draw their fuel from Pennsylvania. The annual saving in freight rates on the cotton crop of the Southwest is placed at $230,000. Plants on the Mississippi would be able to dominate the sheet zinc markets of the world.

Mr. Matthews points out that there has been an unbroken line of water communication between Chicago and the Gulf for more than half a century. In the old Illinois and Michigan Canal, which extends from Bridgeport to La Salle, 288 boats plied in 1865, and carried 616,140 tons of merchandise to Mississippi River points. During 1869, however, only one packet plied the Illinois River owing to the fact that it was possible for vessels drawing only four feet eight inches of water to sail the canal, and that the water was no deeper than this at certain points on the Mississippi.

MONEY FOR NEW SCHOOLS.

A resolution providing for the issuance of $2,500,000 of twenty-year 4 per cent. bonds was introduced at the last meeting of the Board of Education, and referred to the Committee on Finance with prospects that it would fail of adoption. The money is needed for new school buildings, there being 33,000 children unprovided with school accommodations. A brief outline of estimated appropriations for 1902 was submitted as follows:

New buildings, $2,500,000; educational purposes, $7,200,000; to pay bonded indebtedness, $134,000. The plan of borrowing the $2,500,000 was based upon these figures.

An injunction has been granted by Judge Dunne, on petition of August Tridbolm, acting for the Citizens' Association, which prohibits the officials of the town of Lake—the southern township of this city—from drawing or paying their official salaries. The town of Lake offices are never opened. It is said, except to pay salaries, although $300 annual rental is paid for them. Several months ago the township officials met and appropriated $900 for rent, $1,800 for attorney's salary, $11,500 for collectors' hire, Supervisor and clerks' salaries. The township clerk, named Smolka, who expected to get $2,000 for his year's salary can neither read nor write English, it is said, and is a cigarmaker. The town of Lake government has been the laughing stock of that section of the city for years. Few residents know where its offices are situated. There was a rumor in circulation a few months ago that the officials had a meeting, opened the safe, found it empty, and adjourned. If there are any records, no one has seen them.

The ministers of the city have invited a large number of business and professional men to co-operate with them in an anti-vice crusade, but the gentlemen so honored are somewhat timid about entering upon work which may be impracticable or ineffective, and add greatly to their responsibilities. They wish to understand definitely what is expected of them before entering upon such a crusade, and are inclined to think that at this time it would be apt to take to itself the complexion of a political move. They urge that they pay officials to see that the law is inforced, that the laws are good, and that private or public detective work is hardly in their line. But they have not refused to co-operate—they have not gone beyond stating their diffidence in acting as active watchdogs for the city. It appears to be the opinion of some of them that if the people want honest officials they will elect them. A persecution of women—which form the crusade is likely to take—leaving dishonest men strongly intrenched behind their political barricades, does not seem to appeal to their sense of justice or chivalry.

SCHEME FOR SMOKE PREVENTION.

A comprehensive scheme for smoke prevention, carrying with it the abolition of the Smoke Inspector's office, and the reorganization of the Board of Examining Engineers, is under consideration by a self-constituted committee on the abatement of smoke nuisances. The self-elected committee consists of Alderman Walter Nelson, Peter B. Wight of the Municipal Art League, Engineer Charles Naylor of Marshall Field & Co., Prof. Carr of the Armour Institute, and Assistant Corporation Counsel Arthur. Whatever results the committee reaches will be incorporated in an ordinance to be introduced in the council as a new method of the abatement of the smoke nuisance. It is proposed that the heating plant of a building shall be examined as well as its building plans when a permit is sought by a builder.

If it be apparent that the proposed plan is one which could not prevent smoke, on account of its faulty construction, the permit will be refused. For buildings now up, authority will be granted to condemn plants which produce smoke, and to demand the substitution of proper equipment. It would be proved that the boiler inspector and all his assistants should be graduates of technical schools and expert mechanical engineers.

PAN-HELLENIC CLUB SCHEME.

Greek Letter Fraternity Men Interested in a New Movement Among College Alumni in This City.

Greek letter fraternity men throughout the city are interested in the movement set on foot last night at the monthly smoker of the New York alumni of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity, at the Arena, looking toward the formation among the college men of the city of a Pan Hellenic Club.

The formulated plans contemplate a club for the graduate fraternity men in New York on the same lines as the University Club, but which is not intended as a rival organization. The former club has a waiting list several years' long at present and the number of Greek letter graduates without club affiliations is increasing in the city each year.

Promotion of social intercourse among the college men, unconnected with alumni associations, with those graduates of their Alma Maters who have preceded them to the metropolis and the resident graduates is hoped for.

The new club will be an innovation in the college club life of New York. Among the proposed features of the clubhouse, besides the grillroom, restaurant, billiard and smoking rooms, are a large ballroom, a common meeting room, gymnasium, and swimming pool. Membership will in all probability be restricted to a certain contingent representing each fraternity according to its numbers in New York. Entrance into the secret organizations at the various colleges is attained only by candidates acceptable to all members, and the standard of membership is kept very high.

The Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity, with whose local alumni association the idea was broached last night, is one of the strongest in the country, standing third in point of active chapters and membership.

President McKinley, ex-Secretary John G. Carlisle, the late William L. Wilson, Samuel Spenser, many Governors, Congressmen, and other prominent men are on its roll.

Champe S. Andrews of 52 William Street, President of the local alumni association, heads a committee to confer with representatives of other fraternities interested in the movement, with a view to successfully accomplishing the organization of the Pan-Hellenic Club.

No Pardon for Wife Murderer Hill.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 26.—The Board of Pardons to-day unanimously refused to commute the sentence of Robert Hill, who is to be hanged at Camden Feb. 5 for the murder of his wife. Affidavits were presented to show that Hill's wife had been unfaithful to him. It was argued that this had worked on his mind and rendered him in a measure irresponsible for his act. The court considered the alleged wrongdoing of Hill's wife had nothing to do with the question of his guilt. Gov. Voorhees has issued a death warrant for Hill's execution on the date mentioned.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT CHANGES.

Deputy Controller M. F. Daly announced the following appointments to positions in the Department of Finance yesterday:

Richard M. Chapman, 150 Nassau Street, expert accountant, with compensation at the rate of $15 per diem.

Arthur F. Curtis, 228 Sixty-seventh Street, Brooklyn, assistant to expert accountant, at $5 per diem.

Edwin E. Grapes, 72 Rodney Street, Brooklyn, bookkeeper, fourth grade, Bureau of Collection of Assessments and Arrears, Brooklyn, $1,200 per annum.

John J. Kelly, 16 Third Place, Brooklyn, bookkeeper, fifth grade, Controller's Office, $1,800 per annum.

William Sauer, assistant chief clerk in the Department of Buildings, has had his salary increased by Commissioner Brady from $1,800 to $2,000 per annum.

Commodore Henderson's Will.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Jan. 26.—The will of Commodore Alexander Henderson, United States Navy, of Yonkers, was filed to-day in the Surrogate's Court for probate. He left $60,000 in personal property to his widow, Kate, whom he makes his executrix.

Fatal Explosion in Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 26.—Charles Murkey, Patrick Downey, Timothy Chisham, and Frank Martin were fatally and William Peters and George Kirkwood seriously injured to-day by an explosion at the works of the Baltimore Copper Smelting and Rolling Company. The men were pouring molten copper into molds, when the contents of one of the large ladles was accidentally poured into the water trough beneath, causing the explosion.

LONG CHASE AFTER THIEVES.

They Fled Across the Passaic River Bridge, but Were Caught.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 26.—Judson Parliament of 18 Clay Street and Michael Hobart of Ogden Street were held in $500 bail each to-day in the Second Criminal Court on a charge of having broken into the paint shop of Cawley, Clark & Co., on Ogden Street, early this morning, and stolen some gold leaf. Joseph Garrison, who saw the men leave the place notified Policeman Delaney. He rapped for assistance, and several other officers joined him. They chased the thieves to the Fourth Avenue Bridge of the Passaic River, and across it the burglars fled to Kearny.

The officers were too much out of breath to follow on the narrow plank used as a footpath, but they made so much noise that they attracted the attention of several Kearny policemen, who caught sight of the burglars as they were leaving the bridge. The chase then continued through Kearny for some time until the thieves doubled and reached the bridge again.

The Newark officers had gone from the bridge entrance and were over a block away when the thieves returned. They caught sight of them, however, and after a short chase captured them. They were badly used up by the chase.

H. G. WEIL MUST APPEAR.

Much against his will, Henry Goodman Weil, the millionaire stock broker, whose wife Mary Evangeline Weil in December last secured a verdict in the Supreme Court, finding him guilty of marital infidelity, will have to appear and submit to an examination as to his personal and real property. The jury in Mrs. Weil's suit found that Weil had been guilty of misconduct with Gerome Edwardy and Clarisse Agnew, two actresses, a month after his marriage.

Justice Blanchard yesterday denied a motion made by Mrs. Weil's counsel to vacate an order granted by himself directing Weil to appear and submit to examination as to his income and its sources, prior to an application to the Court to confirm the findings of the jury, and grant Mrs. Weil an absolute divorce and permanent alimony.

Miss Agnew, one of the co-respondents in the case, is now the wife of Daniel B. Reed, the millionaire President of the American Tin Plate Company.

Mrs. Weil, in her affidavit asking for her husband's examination, said her husband was a rich man, a member of the Stock Exchange, and that after their marriage their household expenses averaged about $25,000 a year. Weil, in asking that the order for his examination be vacated, said it would be a great hardship and injustice to him, as it would make public his financial transactions, and would seriously embarrass him in many ways. A. H. Hummel, Weil's counsel, said he would appeal from Justice Blanchard's decision.

MOURNING IN WASHINGTON

The President's Dispatch on the Queen's Death Not a Hasty One.

PRINCE OF WALES'S VISIT

Oddities of the Naval Register—The New "Cliff Dwellers' Park"—The Inauguration Preparations.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Queen Victoria's death, although it had been anticipated, made a profound impression upon Washington, official and social. The impulse to express regret over it, and to convey to the English people some idea of the sorrow that was felt in the United States found expression without remonstrance from anybody, so far as known. The readiness with which the Senate deplored the death of the Queen, immediately upon the receipt of the announcement by telegraph, without waiting for any official information, and by agreement between the leading Senators on both sides, fairly represented the general feeling of sympathy with the bereaved nation.

The reports from London of the reception of the President's dispatch to the King, with the explanation that it was the first received from any ruler, may have given the impression that there was haste in its sending. There was none. But it was known at the Department of State that the Queen was not expected to recover. It was also known that when she died it would be proper for the President to send an expression of sorrow for the nation upon the receipt of such sad news. Some attention was given to the drafting of a dispatch, in order that it should be free from the defects that might result from hurried preparation. The message was not extemporized, but studied. Not until an interval of about two hours had elapsed after the arrival of the news was the President's dispatch sent to London. It should have reached Cowes, with fair dispatch, before 9 o'clock. It had gone before the President knew from Minister Choate that the Queen was dead, but he had no doubt of the absolute correctness of the press dispatches.

So about the half-masting of the flags. There was very little consideration of the question whether it was proper to do it or not, or any search for a precedent. There was really no perceptible interval between the receipt of the news of the Queen's death and the half-masting of the White House flag. The other buildings followed the example of the White House. The official flags were only half-masted for the day; upon the foreign legations they are still displayed in mourning, and over many hotels and private houses they have been kept at half-mast since Tuesday. The British Embassy, almost smothered in mourning, with the Ambassador and his family in strict retirement, will keep alive the memory of the good Queen for many days among neighbors who share with Lord Pauncefote a sense of personal bereavement.

Forty-one years ago, when James Buchanan was President, and occupying just the rooms, and no more, that are now at the service of President McKinley, King Edward of England, then the Prince of Wales, on a tour of the United States with a suite of distinguished gentlemen, made a visit to Washington and was the guest of President Buchanan. Tradition gives some account of the difficulty that Mr. Buchanan had in providing for his guests in a manner befitting their estate. There were not rooms enough to give each gentleman of the party a bedchamber to himself, even after all persons who usually lived at the White House had been sent out to find quarters elsewhere. Mr. Buchanan is said to have been a good host, and he personally had known many of the Prince's suite while he was Minister to Great Britain. No one at the White House can tell of his own knowledge just how President Buchanan entertained the Prince for five days, for none of the persons then employed remains in service. He arrived in October, in the midst of an exciting political campaign, and when there was no Congress here to be studied.

The incident of his visit that is best remembered is his trip to Mount Vernon, his placing of a wreath on the tomb of the first President, and his planting of a chestnut tree. To a young gentleman disposed to favor a lively community, Washington must have seemed a very dull place in those days, for there were no fine hotels then, no "Northwest" section crowded with fine houses, only bad pavements, or no pavements, and facilities for getting here and getting away were comparatively wretched. From Washington he went to Richmond, later to Philadelphia, and to New York on Oct. 11. Old residents of Washington, or those who will admit that they can remember back as far as 1860, say that the people here were so much more concerned about the imminence of a civil war that the visit of England's future King made a slighter impression than it would have made if he had come when the country was not feeling so strong a political strain. There has been much speculation, on the part of those who have known of the difficulties met with by successive Presidential families in getting along in the White House, to knew how President Buchanan ever entertained a Prince and his suite in that mansion for five days.

There are some interesting features in the new Naval Register. The first notable change that the editor has tried to effect, and which the person who is acquainted with former registers will detect at once, is the presentation of the full name of every officer whose full name could be obtained. Last year the list of Rear Admirals gave Farquhar as Norman H. Farquhar. In the new register he is Norman Von Heldreich Farquhar—a curious compounding of Scotch and German. Then there is William Thomas Sampson and Charles Stanhope Cotton, who has jumped from the next lower grade with three others. There has been a great increase of the list of retired Rear Admirals. Last year there were of all sorts thirty-seven Rear Admirals on the retired list. Now there are sixty-seven. This came about through the personnel law, which invited Captains to accept retirement with the next grade above that held by them at retirement.

The Marine Corps Register invites remark for some odd reasons that suggest themselves after a reading of the pages given up to that body. Brig. Gen. Heywood and ten of his staff are without sea service to their record since they received their present commissions. The commandant has eight years and seven months of sea service to his credit and thirty-three years and two months of shore duty. Each of the ten staff officers has served an average of four years at sea. Assistant Quartermaster McCauley has been four months at sea since he entered the service, in August, 1898. Capt. Eaunt Le Roy has not yet found out whether he has any "sea legs," for he has never been to sea as an officer of marines. Capt. Lemly has had two months of sea service. This aggregation of "sea dogs" includes three Colonels, four Majors, and three Captains. That marines do go to sea, if they are not on the "general staff," is discovered by looking at the list of Colonels and other officers not on staff duty and showing sea service of from seven to fifteen years. One of the officers of the "general staff" is a most accomplished introducer of guests at the White House on great occasions. The book is only two pages shorter than it was a year ago.

Every Congress has its quota of members who make some mark, not fully enjoyed here, but presumably acceptable at home, by attempting to deprive the District of Columbia of some of the advantages it enjoys by sharing its tax bill with the United States. Missouri has monopolized this distinction recently, and since Mr. De Armond has chosen to rest his weapons a Missouri member named Rucker has taken up a club against the District, and particularly its bathing beach. The bathing beach is not a luxurious affair, like the bathing facilities afforded at the House for Representatives from Missouri and other States, but a margin of the Potomac River rescued from mud and kept in good condition, with bathing houses and watchmen for the people who do not have bathtubs in their houses, and for some who desire to get that knowledge of swimming that cannot be acquired in bathtubs. But the bathing beach was only used as a convenient landing place.

The object of all attacks upon the method of divided expense is to lift the whole District tax over upon the District. That this would be unjust, as well as unlawful, is admitted by those who look into the history of the District, which for three-quarters of a century carried the whole load of taxation, contrary to the understanding when the Government established the District. Washington is an attractive place because its tax burdens seem light, but few cities in the country tax themselves more heavily than does this one. While the per capita tax levy, a few years ago, was $10.69, being greater than Omaha, Allegheny, or Indianapolis, and only slightly less than Cleveland, Newark and Milwaukee, the per capita of indebtedness was $35.86, or many times as large as that of any of the cities named except Newark. The tax levy, per capita, in the same year, in St. Louis was $11.84, with a per capita indebtedness of $47.87, while with a per capita tax levy of $12.80 Chicago's per capita indebtedness was $11.98. The assessed value of Washington, which, of course, does not include the Government's exempt half, is $123,110,219, while Rochester and Syracuse have, having at the time 30,000 more population than this city, only reported $124,000,600 of real estate taxables.

The demand upon Congress for new public parks, National in character, has been increased by one that will strike many persons as possessing peculiar attractiveness. Mr. Lacey has reported a bill to provide for the setting aside of a "Cliff Dwellers' National Park," in New Mexico. The nearest railroad station to this proposed park is at Espanola, on the Rio Grande Railway, 34 miles north of the city of Santa Fé. Here, on a plateau raised from 6,000 to 9,000 feet above the sea, are the cave dwellings or lodges, in the faces of the cliffs, 2,000 entrances being visible from a single eminence on the Pajarito Mesa, and the number in the district will reach to tens of thousands. There is much variety of dwellings, some being large communal houses evidently constructed to have from one to two thousand rooms each.

It is estimated by the students who have explored these dwellings that they furnish shelter for from 100,000 to 200,000 people. Investigation of some of them has disclosed articles in stone, clay, wood; human figures, animal designs, conventional designs, and many evidences of taste and skill. Hitherto the fact of inaccessibility has saved these ancient relics from the vandal, but reports are now coming in of instances of reckless vandalism, and the bill, having the approval of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, is intended to set aside and mark the boundaries of a park that shall inclose the cave dwellings and provide persons to protect them from despoilers. Few of the graves have as yet been disturbed, but it is learned that already unauthorized parties have been organized to conduct explorations of them. The land is not barren in the section where the cave dwellings are found, and one argument submitted to induce the Congress to assent to the setting aside of the lands, mostly owned by the Government, is that the reservation of 240 square miles would conserve the water supply of the tributaries of the Rio Grande del Norte.

A victory has been won over the enterprising speculators, usually the rough youths of all colors in the city who have been in the habit of squatting on the curbs when there is any parade of importance about to move, and to sell these preferred places and the boxes or barrels that go with them, for the whole length of Pennsylvania Avenue, on inauguration day, is to be free from this annoyance. The District Commissioners have given authority to the police to confiscate every box found on the curb or near it on the great day, and to see that the spectators have an uninterrupted view of all that passes. Hitherto it has been customary for anybody who could get permits to erect stands for spectators and to put them up irregularly on both sides of the avenue. That practice is to be changed. All the viewing stands are to be on the south side of the avenue, and no public or private stands are to be allowed except those erected along the north side of Pennsylvania Avenue, opposite the White House, and within the Court of Honor. That regulation will afford opportunity to a much larger crowd to move along Pennsylvania Avenue between the Treasury and the Capitol, and will keep the stands on the side that is not preferred by pedestrians.

All the plans of the committees are not yet completed, but the activity of the people having the inauguration in charge has plainly stimulated interest in Mr. McKinley's second installation in office, for the proprietors of two leading hotels said to-day that they could have taken twice the number of guests their houses will hold if they could have given favorable responses to all applications for rooms during the 4th of March ceremonies. Many visitors are securing quarters in private houses through friends in Washington, and will by this put to trouble about getting their meals, for which demand there is plenty of preparation by houses that furnish food to transient visitors.

An explanation of the decision of the House of Representatives not to take up the question of apportioning Southern representation in the Fifty-eighth Congress has been given by a Republican member of the Census Committee. It seems that discussion brought out the fact that if an attempt was made to show that Southern Democrats were to be punished for depriving black people of their votes, the Republicans would be called upon to explain how it was that in order to get rid of black voters in the District of Columbia, where they had come to be an intolerable burden, the entire population had to be deprived of the right of suffrage. That was way back in 1873, but there has been no demand from the taxpaying population of Washington for the restoration of the voting privilege, if it must be enjoyed by everybody. Champ Clark made a speech on this subject while the Apportionment bill was before the House, and he touched very closely upon the proposed line of Democratic opposition to reduce Southern representation when he asked whether a black vote in Washington for a Representative in Congress was any more objectionable than a black vote against him in the State of Missouri.

MR. OTTENDORFER'S GIFT.

He Privately Presented $100,000 in Railroad Bonds to the Isabella Heimath.

The Isabella Heimath, for the care of aged persons, chronic invalids, and convalescents, to which the late Oswald Ottendorfer bequeathed the sum of $100,000 in his will, received another gift of $100,000 in railroad bonds bearing 4 per cent. interest from Mr. Ottendorfer about a fortnight before he died. Nothing was known of this handsome gift until yesterday, when Edward Uhl, President of the institution, and stepson of the deceased, made the fact public. In speaking of the matter Mr. Uhl said:

"Mr. Ottendorfer was not in the habit of proclaiming his charities from the housetops. The gift of $100,000 in railroad bonds to the Isabella Heimath was made secretly by Mr. Ottendorfer about two weeks before he died, and the bonds were turned over to the Treasurer of the home by Mr. Ottendorfer in person. Neither I nor my sister knew that Mr. Ottendorfer had made this gift to the home until several days after, although we were both aware that he intended to leave $100,000 to it in his will. Mr. Ottendorfer liked to surprise us with his charities, and he was always averse to having any publicity made of them."

The Isabella Heimath was organized in 1875, and was incorporated in 1889. The present site of the home, at One Hundred and Ninetith Street and Amsterdam Avenue, was the gift of Mr. Ottendorfer. The institution was established in memory of a daughter of Mrs. Ottendorfer. In addition to being a home for the care of the aged of both sexes there is a hospital for chronic invalids and a temporary home for convalescent patients. As yet it has not been decided how the money recently given by Mr. Ottendorfer to the home will be used. The gifts were made without any conditions attached, and the Trustees are at liberty to use them as they choose. Mr. Uhl believes that the work that the home is doing, in caring for convalescent patients who are discharged from public hospitals before they are able to go to work, is of great value, and it is likely that some of the money will be used to increase the accommodations for this class of patients.

August Belmont Goes South.

August Belmont, who has been seriously ill at his country place at Hempstead, L. I., for some weeks, left for Palm Beach, Fla., yesterday afternoon in his private car.

THE LATE QUEEN.

For a good many years I was in the habit of seeing the Queen very often. Secretaries of Legation, it is hardly necessary to say, did not ordinarily get an opportunity of talking with her. For that matter, the conversation with which she favored chiefs, and other important persons, was usually limited, I fancy, to the barest commonplaces. But it is the custom for diplomats to remain in the audience room in which she holds her courts during the ceremony, and, of course, one got one's impressions of her. There was great dignity and even grace in her curtsey, and her walk was dignified, this in spite of her stout figure and short stature. Her expression of countenance was sometimes, when things did not please her, cross, if I may use the word. There must have been much in the circumstances of her situation to try the temper, but it has not been said, even by those who saw her intimately, that she was not a good-tempered person. Her dignity has been a universal subject of comment. The English were very proud of it. I have often heard them compare her with the Empress Eugénie in this respect. They said that when the Empress at the time of her visit to London, during the Second Empire, sat at the opera in the same box with the Queen, the Empress was very beautifully dressed, and the Queen not at all so, but that the latter was "every inch a Queen." They remarked that when the Empress sat down she first looked to see if the chair was there. The Queen, however, did not do this, knowing that the chair would be there, of course.

She had in truth every element of dignity. She shared with the German royalties, to which she belonged, the feeling they are said to have that they are made of different clay from other people. She had become the head of the greatest modern empire at a time when England had a sense of greatness such as she never had before. Her name itself was significant of that sentiment of victory so strong in England after the battle of Waterloo. She became to Englishmen the image and embodiment of their national pride, and the symbol was all the more attractive and lovable because it existed in the person of a young girl. Thus, when in a review of troops in Windsor Park, she rode between the lines in the Windsor uniform riding habit, with the blue ribbon of the Garter and a smart chacot trimmed with gold lace, "returning the salutes of her troops by raising her hand to her cap in true military fashion," old officers declared that it was the most fascinating thing ever seen.

Her exalted personal character was, I suppose, her chief element of dignity. There is universal testimony upon this point from all who have known her. Much of this talk has indeed an exaggerated sound, and the air of being written for royal ears. But there is other testimony that does not impress one so. There is a little sketch by a lady who was one of her bridesmaids, and who was still living at the time of the jubilee of 1897, the simplicity and sincerity of which are very evident. She had had, of course, the best opportunities of knowing the Queen. Their acquaintance began at six years of age, when, on the occasion of their first meeting, the young Princess said to her, referring to some of her toys scattered around: "You must not touch those—they are mine; and I may call you Jane, but you must not call me Victoria." This lady's account of the wedding gives one an interesting glimpse of that far-away world. When she was appointed to be one of the Queen's twelve bridesmaids, and she went with her mother from Berkshire to London to take her part in the ceremony, they had their first experience of railroad travel. After posting to Reading "we joined," she says, "the Great Western line, not, however, entering the public carriage." To have done this would have startled their friends. "On this occasion our own carriage was placed on a truck; in this we sat, and so steamed to town." The little sketch shows the contrast, in point of simplicity, of the manners of those days to those of our own. After the ceremony the bridesmaids found themselves in a room alone with Queen and Prince, who were standing by a table. An attendant brought in a cloth bag and gave it to the Queen, who drew out of it one at a time little dark blue velvet cases, giving one to each of them. The cases contained brooches. The bridesmaids afterward received permission to wear them in a white rosette on the shoulder as a kind of bridesmaids' order, a privilege the use of which gradually died out. The writer hazards the suggestion that under similar circumstances in these days the gifts would have been brought in with much more state and ceremony.

But what is particularly interesting in this sketch is the sincerity of the writer's admiration for the character of her illustrious friend. Of the marriage ceremony she says: "Like our attire, all was simple and plain in the chapel. There were no ballroomlike decorations, no glitter or pomp, ecclesiastical or otherwise; no light but that from heaven. But there were calm seriousness, deep, tender love, and a reverent hush, save the reading of the Prayer Book service. The great lady—the very great lady—knelt, visibly trembling, before the communion rail."

In the Queen's old age she had not, of course, the attractive and winning qualities which she had as a girl, but she had claims upon the love of the people of different and of a more substantial kind. She had the reverence due to age. From long experience, the people had come to have a profound confidence in her goodness. They had become so accustomed to a sense of her exalted character as to consider that character as almost a part of the British Constitution. There is no quality that people love and admire so much in a ruler as goodness. George III., for instance, was a King who made a great many mistakes, and these mistakes were very harmful to the country, because, unlike Victoria, he had real kingly power and not the shadow of it, which was all she had. And yet he was very much loved by the English people, and the chief reason of this popularity was that the people believed him to be a good man.

But the old Queen had still other grounds of popularity. Victoria, when she grew old, besides being the symbol of the nation, had become also a symbol of the individual English life. That she was a symbol of their youth, and such she will remain to the young of this generation when they grow old. Men love these great public symbols of their youth. Some of the literary expressions of this truth have passed into proverbs. "In my hot youth, when George the Third was King," exclaimed Byron. And we know from Horace what a smart fellow he was "when Plancus was Consul."

The recent political circumstances of England are also a part of the unprecedented position obtained by the aged Queen. As has been said, England was very great when she was young, and had pride in that greatness, and she herself was the charming symbol of the victorious nation. England is not less great now, but has a different kind of greatness. London is now in a social, if not in a political, sense, the capital of the world, and England the central country of the world. When the Queen's reign began, if any city was the world's capital, it was Paris. If there was a central country, it was France. It is to the rise of the United States more than to any other one cause that this change has been due. Slowly but surely social and commercial ties are strengthening and increasing between England and America, and, as a result, there is growing up a solidarity, a moral unification between the two peoples. There is thus assured to England the protection of this country, unless she should herself do some rash thing to postpone this increasing unification or unless some exaction of our own or an overweening sense of our own strength should have this result. Now the world knows that this unification is in progress, and this knowledge is the chief cause of the greatness that England has now. If there is to be a great moral confederation of the English-speaking peoples, (of course it is needless hardly be said that this unification can only be a moral one, and must in the nature of things be vague and general rather than explicit,) England and London must be the centre of this community. Into this position we have ourselves pushed the English. The social leadership of the world which London society enjoys is thus due largely to ourselves. The Queen's exalted position was in part due to the fact that she was the most illustrious personage of the English-speaking world.

But to the strength of that support which she received from this great democratic community, she added elements of dignity that were more picturesque, the ancient throne that had known the duration of a thousand years, and her lordship over the remote millions of India and other vast and populous lands. A certain Indian tribe worshipped her as a goddess. A certain Sergeant Atkinson, an Inspector of roads or police officer, reported to The Indian Spectator, a native paper published in English, that a tribe in Orissa has adopted Queen Victoria as a deity. According to the Brahminical theory, the Universal may express himself in any form he chooses; in Queen Victoria, for instance, as well as in any other. And the belief of the Orissa tribe was that it had done so. In the same way a silver dish she had presented to a regiment came to be worshipped. It is the Indian belief that God may take any object, such as a stone or silver dish, for a symbol. The silver dish in question was an épergne, presented to a Ghurka regiment by Queen Victoria, which was accepted as an object of worship. It had a voluntary guard, and officers dismounted as it was carried before them. This is one of the many examples of the splendor of that position which the Queen had throughout the world.

The fact that the Queen was not a person of genius or of marked originality was no doubt one cause of her great success. To this cause it may be in part due that she has always spoken with such uniform good taste and moderation. She has spoken very often, but has never, so far as we know, said anything she ought not to have said. It is quite evident, of course, that she could not have been a person of marked originality, for it would have been impossible for her to have written as much as she has done without giving some indication of it. Besides being probably by nature of a plain cast of mind, she has had a great deal of schooling in self-effacement, in subjection, one might say. There have been so few things in which she could have her way. She was early inured to giving up her own will. Devoted as she was to her first mentor, Melbourne, she had to give him up and accept Peel, whom at first she seems not to have liked. Later, in the same way, against her own preference and that of Prince Albert, she had to take Palmerston, and she grew to like him. Palmerston was a type of man antipathetic to the Prince Consort, who was in character the sort of man we should now describe as a mugwump. The Prince detested Disraeli, and the Queen may be supposed to have had a wifely sympathy with his views, but she became ultimately very fond of him. Gladstone, however, it is well understood, she never liked.

The unoriginal character of the Queen's mind had this further advantage. It assisted the mystery of the Queen's personality, mystery being always a source of dignity. Clever people are, as a rule, not mysterious; we see them too clearly. Her energetic and clever young grandson of Germany, for instance, everybody knows. The world at large has that familiarity with him which breeds disrespect. But the Queen's mind was very hard to get hold of. She herself seemed to wish to maintain this remoteness, which was no doubt one of the reasons of the greatness of her position. She was one of the few personalities out of the reach of a yellow journal's interviewer. Perhaps I am wrong to speak of the Queen as "unoriginal," for she may have had, and probably did have, a strength of mind and will very remote from the commonplace.

There was something no doubt trying to the temper in the Queen's position. She was the representative of monarchy in the midst of a society growing daily more democratic. These two ideas are as remote from one another and as irreconcilable as can be. She may have thought that the observance of a rigorous etiquette was necessary to maintain the dignity of royalty. Hence the compelling of ladies who read to her to stand up. When Carlyle was introduced to her, she did not ask him to sit down, and Carlyle, saying that he was an old man, asked permission to do so. He had already violated usage by inquiring after her health. Queens not being supposed to have any health. It may be that she considered it necessary to insist upon this etiquette as a protection to royalty in a democracy. In other countries, in which monarchy is strong, royalty can perhaps afford to be more indulgent. In Russia, where the Crown is absolute, it is said to be not uncommon at Court to see young officers sitting about a room when the Czar is standing. It is possible that the Queen felt it to be difficult to maintain the dignity of royalty in the world of to-day, and it was on that account perhaps that her bearing seemed to express the sense of a right to greatness. One might have been reminded of Shakespeare's Queen Katharine. Some of us will remember how well that characteristic was represented by Charlotte Cushman. We might fancy Gladstone in the place of Wolsey.

> Sir,
> I am about to weep; but thinking that
> We are a Queen—or long have dreamed so—certain
> The daughter of a King, my drops of tears
> I'll burn to sparks of fire.

In her old age the Queen may perhaps have missed the peculiar sort of devotion which she inspired as a young woman, for, even with Queens, I dare say, it is still true that life does not grow pleasanter as it progresses. And the men and the society which in her youthful days made an idol of her were different from those of the present time. In 1870, when I first made acquaintance with London, there were still living persons who had been contemporaneous with those men and with that society. At the risk of being considered a laudator temporis acti, I will say that they had a different look from the men of the present day. In modern England everything has become more splendid except the men, and they have become less so. That is no doubt a condition of democratic advance. If the many gain, the few must lose. Some of those men, the survivors of an earlier period, had besides that beauty which is never rare among Englishmen, a look of station that is now scarcely possible and a gayety and sprightliness altogether inconsistent with the duller and colder and more practical character of our time. From them I could guess the type of the men who surrounded the Queen in her young days. Such was Melbourne, who to his great ability, knowledge, and wisdom added wit, a majestic presence, and every grace that could please a woman. I sometimes wondered what she thought of our latter-day world. No doubt she had her views, but was too prudent to express them.

E. S. NADAL.

MOTOR-DRIVEN AMBULANCES.

They Cannot Get the Right of Way Over Other Vehicles in the Streets.

Automobile ambulances, of which there are several already in use by the large hospitals in the city, have met with a drawback which was not considered before they were introduced, and which detracts greatly from their efficiency, particularly when traversing busy thoroughfares.

They cannot get the right of way over other vehicles which the law allows them because drivers fail to recognize them for what they are. All automobiles, or almost all, carry gongs, and therefore the ambulance bells do not inspire the respect which a bell on any horse-drawn vehicle does. Self-propelling business wagons are multiplying at a great rate, too, and most of them are built on lines similar to those of an ambulance, and the average truck driver, hearing a gong ringing furiously behind him, glances over his shoulder, and, seeing no horses attached to the square, boxlike vehicle bearing down upon him, jumps to the conclusion that it is the delivery wagon of some department store with an impatient motorman in charge, and calmly reverts to his meditations, but if he sees a plunging horse before the wagon on which the bell is ringing, he knows that it belongs to the ambulance service or Fire or Police Department, and as such has rights which he must respect or go to the nearest police station.

Compressed-air whistles or larger gongs have been suggested as a remedy, but with these the advantage to patients of the smoother and quicker progress of the electric ambulance would in a large measure disappear. The trouble does not exist at night, and in going through the empty streets the horseless ambulance has demonstrated its superiority over and over again, but the hospital authorities would welcome any suggestion by which they could make the same speed as the old style ambulances in the broad light of day.

KRUEGER'S REAL APPEARANCE.

Correspondent Says His Photographs Libel Him.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 15.—It has been often said that photographs lie, and since I have had the honor of being introduced to President Krüger I am at least convinced that attractive individuals are often made the opposite in a photograph.

The photographs taken in South Africa make Mr. Krüger look almost a "wild man" dressed in the clothes of the present day. In reality he is much like other gentlemen, has quite the same manners, and to my mind is much better looking than Lord Salisbury.

The people of The Hague are rejoicing over the recovery of Mr. Krüger from the severe attack of bronchitis. The cold weather has been hard on the old man, as strong and rugged as he appears. For his years I have never seen a more vigorous man, though his countenance expresses great sadness, and one sees he is in deep and continued thought.

THE SHOOTING GALLERY MYSTERY

No One Can Be Found to Tell Who Fired the Fatal Shot.

Walter J. Kelly, who is employed in the shooting gallery at 21 Bowery, in which George Dressel, a scenery artist, was mysteriously shot and killed on Friday night, was arraigned in the Essex Market Police Court yesterday morning and held to await the action of the Coroner. Dressel was painting a sign in the rear of the gallery when he was shot, the bullet entering the base of the brain and causing death in a few minutes.

Although there were thirty or forty persons in the place at the time of the shooting, no one can be found who is positive as to who fired the fatal shot. Many declared that Kelly did not. Kelly says the shot was fired by some one who rushed from the place as soon as it was done. Yesterday's examination before the Magistrate was merely formal, no new evidence being adduced.

LAWS TO GOVERN INDUSTRIAL CONCERNS

Bills Affecting Corporations to be Introduced at Albany.

They Will Be Modeled Upon the English Act to Enforce the Duties of Directors.

The indications are that the session of the Legislature this year will see introduced many measures which will directly concern the industrial corporations doing business in this State. The message of the Governor and the recommendations of the State Controller contain many suggestions, which, if they find expression in bills introduced into the Senate and the Assembly, will need careful watching from several standpoints.

One of the suggestions for an important reform originated in what is called the "New English Companies act," a law recently enacted in England to govern corporations and compel the compliance of Directors' duties to their stockholders. The principal feature of the new law has to do with the appointment of an auditor by the stockholders instead of the Directors. Under the present system an auditor appointed by Directors was practically the servant of the very persons he was supposed to prevent from committing irregularities. If he refused to do as ordered by the Directors his position was endangered, and if he sanctioned a misrepresentation of a report no penalty was there to punish the fraud.

The new law, however, provides that the auditor be appointed by the stockholders, and that he is not removable by the Directors. The auditor's report is final. He signs it and submits it to his employers, the stockholders, and if he fails in his duties a heavy penalty is provided and he loses the right to pursue his line of business.

The English law provides that every company shall, at the annual meeting of shareholders, elect auditors for the ensuing year. If any company fails to do this, the Board of Trade may, on application of any member of the company, appoint an auditor and fix his remuneration. No Director or officer of a company can be its auditor. The auditors shall at all times have access to the books and accounts, and the right to call for any information or explanation. They shall append to their certificate as to the accounts a statement whether, in their opinion, the balance sheet exhibits a true and correct view of the condition of the company. If any person, in any report, balance sheet, or statement to shareholders, wilfully makes a statement false in any material particular, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years.

With regard to companies already in existence, where auditors have already been appointed, these continue in office under the new act until the next ordinary general meeting; but in future every company will be obliged to have auditors, whether or not any have been appointed up to the present time.

This English law has interested expert accountants throughout the country in view of the fact that the auditor of a corporation should be a duly qualified official. According to one of the most noted expert accountants in this city, one whose name for evident reasons may not be mentioned, were a law passed compelling an honest audit of accounts, the financial condition of hundreds of well-known and supposedly safe investments would be appalling. Such a condition of affairs as led to the wrecking of several companies would, under the English act, have been impossible.

"The misrepresentations which Directors demand of expert accountants in order to hush up their dealings are in many cases equivalent to insults," said the expert. "I had one case where, as auditor, I was told to certify that a 6 per cent. dividend was to be paid.

"'But how can you pay your dividend when you have not earned anything?' I asked.

"I was informed that the reserve would help out of the difficulty. I declined to certify to any such report and was discharged as auditor. The unearned dividend was paid in due time and the stocks were kept properly up."

In general, the law as it is in operation in England, according to this same authority, is widely open to improvement.

"The compulsory audit is undoubtedly a step in the right direction," he said. "but, as no provision whatever is made for qualified persons being appointed auditors, or for receiving anything like an adequate remuneration, the improvement is more apparent than real. The more so, as Directors have in all cases the power to fill any vacancy caused by the resignation of an auditor. Besides, the fact that the appointment is still an annual one, makes the continuance of the auditor in office very largely depending upon his continuing to please the Directors—the very ones he is expected to supervise."

WHEAT CROP OF THE WORLD.

Yield for 1900 Below That of 1899—Source of Germany's Breadstuff Supplies.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Consul Henry W. Diederich, writing from Berlin to the State Department, under date of Dec. 14, says:

"According to the various authorities, the crop of wheat for the year 1900, when compared with that of 1899, shows a decrease ranging between 1,300,000 and 1,900,000 bushels. As to the different countries, the estimates for the year's crops are reported as follows:

"From the foregoing it will be seen that Russia and the United States are the two countries from which Germany draws her main supplies of breadstuffs. It is also interesting to note that, while Russia took the lead in 1898 in selling grain to Germany, the importations from the United States during the year 1899 exceeded those of Russia by about 19,861,600 bushels."

MR. BRYAN'S ALARMING JOB.

Mr. William J. Bryan of Nebraska is now "in front of a big job"—a trying, terrifying, and dangerous job—as editor of The Commoner. At first, he will certainly be pleased to see the piles of letters in his publication office, each of them containing a dollar bill for a year's subscription to his paper, and some of them bearing words of flattery for the editor himself. It would not be possible for him to get too many such letters, even though the whole of the more than six million men who voted for him last November and all of the women who favored his election were to send them to him, thus giving The Commoner a bigger circulation than any other paper on earth—bigger even than that of any of those New York papers which boast of their weekly millions. Where is the editor who would not be made cheerful, or even jolly, by seeing a long line of letter carriers bending under their burdens while tramping toward his business office?

It is not the rush of subscribers that is alarming to Mr. Bryan. It is—if our latest advices from Nebraska are correct—the sight of the loads of manuscript for print that have already been unloaded in his sanctum. It is reported that a Nebraska copy sharp looked at some of the manuscripts as they came in, but he was overcome in less than two days, and the doctor said it was a case of St. Vitus's dance. In the piles there were "articles" about sixteen to one, the money question, the true key to finance, the silver policy, the circulating medium, the redemption of the greenbacks, the best monetary system, a new method of banking, the private use of public funds, bimetallism, paper as currency, the Sub-Treasury evils, the plain fiscal law, the mathematics of finance, the money of account, and the crime of 1873.

The copy sharp had long been aware that every member of

THE EASY LIFE OF THE FOREIGNERS IN CHINA

Absence of Worry and Abundance of Comfort at Small Price.

HOME TRIPS UNSATISFACTORY

Few Americans Care to Come Back to This Country More than Once—Social Life in Chinese Cities.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

SHANGHAI, Dec. 8.—Foreigners in China may not have had the best time in their lives in the last year, but it is not noticed that they have gone away in large numbers, or that they have the slightest wish to go. There are many worse places in which to live, and few better according to the experience of the majority who have settled here. Longing for home naturally possesses every newcomer, and it stands until he has a chance to gratify it. Then he almost wishes he had not done it, and is more than content to return where he can get nearly everything worth having without very hard work or much worry. The visit home has the effect of looking in upon childhood scenes after a long absence, and it seems a pity to spoil anticipations by contact with things that might better have remained a pleasure of memory; and it is a rude, cold, heart-shutting ordeal otherwise. Few care to try a second home trip.

Fleming D. Cheshire, the interpreter at the American Legation at Peking, comes under the category of those of whom it is said that they have been twenty years in China, learned the language, and gone mad. When insanity takes the form exemplified in Mr. Cheshire, one might wish the world full of lunatics. He has the quiet manners and gentle voice of one given to study, and the kindly greeting that beams through his spectacles shows how well he regards his kind. All Peking reciprocates this feeling. For a long time Mr. Cheshire wished to go home, but something seemed always to interfere until he had been here twenty-nine years. He tells the story of his visit, first among his relatives and then among the friends of his youth. He soon felt that they belonged to different worlds, for they knew nothing of China, and he knew less of current affairs in America than perhaps he ought, and all they could find to talk about was of people who had died, or married, or had children, or moved away. As these things had happened years before, they made stale gossip, and Mr. Cheshire felt like one resurrected, to the evident annoyance of his friends.

He decided on a trip to New York, confident that there he would encounter stirring American life, meet people who were posted on things he knew, and with abundant leisure to give him a congenial visit. Having lived for twenty-nine years in an unchanging city, he was somewhat startled on arrival to find that New York in that time had undergone a transformation, and for the worse, in his opinion.

"I had the hardest work," he says, "to hunt up people that I knew, and when I found them they were not half as glad to see me as I was to see them. Whenever I tried to cross Broadway a policeman would rush at me and seize me by the coat collar, and while he was yanking me in one direction a second one would come up and begin to pull me the opposite way, until I was lifted off my feet, and was in mortal terror every instant that a cable car or truck or carriage or something would run me down. I can never remember how I got across.

"One day, at about 4 o'clock, when I usually have a cup of tea, I was near the office of a friend and I thought if I dropped in I would find him at leisure and he would offer me a cup and we could then sit and have a quiet and congenial chat. I found him buried in papers. He greeted me pleasantly enough, but as I settled back to talk with him I noticed that he kept looking toward his papers as if he wished to return to them. In a little while he offered me a cigar, which would have been very nice after tea, but for which I had no taste then; and he said he was sorry that he had no time to go out for a drink. Then I saw that no tea was coming and that I was in the way. I had a good visit, but I must say that the place that I call home and myself had drifted far apart, and that I was not sorry to return where life is simpler and less hurried, and where one may have rational enjoyment without risk to life or limb or peace of mind."

John Dickinson came here young as a junior clerk and worked himself up to a senior partnership in one of the best firms in Tien-Tsin. His residence, the finest in the foreign settlement, was destroyed in last Summer's bombardment, and as business came to a standstill in that region, he decided that at last he had time to pay a visit to his home and friends in England. He came here and took passage, but when he reached home, life there had undergone such changes in his absence and he was so much disappointed with what he found, that he re-engaged the stateroom that he occupied in the outward voyage and came back by the same steamer. He is quite content now with rooms over his office in the dismantled town, and will occupy them happily until he can rebuild his residence.

Experiences are common of those who have gone home and found conditions unsatisfying. No one feels satisfied until he has had one of them. As five years' contracts here provide for a vacation of four months, men usually go home at first leave, and thrift not being common, they often have to pawn or sell their possessions in order to go and cut a swell at the best hotels, to encourage the delusion that they have become nabobs out here; and when funds run out, including the vacation advance, they come back, hire a hall room, and do their own cooking.

COMFORTS IN EASTERN LIFE.

One need not be here long to get a fair insight into the attractions of China for foreign residents. The aptitude of the natives for service of all kinds leaves the outsider no occasion to fret over the drudgeries and petty cares that wear down the nerves in Western lands. Natives attend to every detail of business, they look thoroughly after household affairs, and they perform those services not only to the pecuniary advantage of the foreigners, but with the most cheerful disposition. It may be that they consider themselves inferior to those whom they serve; if so, it is a superiority so exalted that it can put up with the whims and vagaries of the employers, and, in many instances, in this part of China and northward, with habitual abuse, making no complaint and seldom a sign of resentment. In Japan, a servant shows that he thinks himself better than his master by insolence. A Chinese servant obeys implicitly without a murmur, and this applies to service of all kinds. In business relations the foreigner, having acquired a footing, need give himself little concern beyond keeping his home lines in order. He may oversee and supervise and guide and suggest, but the Chinese part of his trade is done for him by the Chinese. Every business house has a comprador, who is the buyer and seller for the house and pushes its connections. He is under bonds, and if customers go wrong his sureties make good the loss without fuss or question. If the merchant can keep home lines taut, the compradore will bring trade at this end.

The merchant who reaches his office by 10 o'clock in the morning does as well as may be expected of him. His compradore and clerks have been engaged for an hour or so before that time. From noon until 2 o'clock business rests, enabling everybody to indulge in a full-course dinner, known as tiffin, and to enjoy, if so inclined, a short nap afterward. In the North, where Winter cold is as extreme as is Summer heat, every one who can afford a horse goes driving at noon at this time of year, a high sun being essential to outdoor comfort there for several months. If business is not ready to close at 4 o'clock, all hands lay by for a cup of tea, with toast and cake and a little leisurely chat. By 5 o'clock there is an end to the day's labors. No one works on Saturday after midday at any time of the year and there are holidays for race meetings and other affairs of general interest.

A merchant and his chief assistants may afford large, comfortable residences, built of gray stone and as well appointed as may be found in the small cities at home. Boarding house or mess life for those of humbler station is much better than they could afford if similarly employed in the large cities of America or Europe. A large business concern likes to have in its employ several men trained in Western business methods. Those who come are usually brought from positions yielding them at home $25 or $30 per week, under engagement at $200 per month. The two sums are about the same in bank exchange but $200 in silver here will go much further than $100 in gold at home and it is used to buy comfortable living.

In the lowlier walks of business life, Portuguese and natives are employed in great numbers, and at low rates of pay, $50 per month being probably a high average. The Portuguese are excellent bookkeepers and junior clerks, and a Chinaman with an abacus can compute figures more rapidly than a European with a pen and seemingly never make a mistake. Where notes and drafts are streaming into an office in pounds, dollars, marks, rubles and yens, and provincial discounts and exchange must be reckoned several times a day for all kinds of currency in every market, computers save the foreigners many a headache. Then as messengers, handlers of cargoes, warehouse overseers, and for minor functions about an office, the Chinese are perfectly trustworthy, and their services cost little money.

CLUB AND SOCIETY LIFE.

Life in the East being mainly social, with no regular evening entertainment to engage public interest, the usual dinner hour is 8 o'clock. Between the close of business and that hour walking, driving, and calling occupy the time. Five o'clock is not an unusual hour for entertainments to be advertised, although 9 o'clock seems to be preferred. There are enough affairs of this kind, including dancing, to diversify social life. Indeed, Shanghai is dancing mad. There was no suitable place for it until last year, when the Municipal Council voted to relay the floor of the Town Hall. The resolution provided that a fine, polished floor be laid, in order to provide a drillroom for the Shanghai Volunteers, an organization that sprang into being when it was feared that there might be an uprising in this region, and has since been moribund. After the floor had been laid, care was taken that it should be covered with heavy cocoa matting whenever the volunteers assembled there. So there are no stratches or bruises, and the floor takes a beautiful polish at every dance.

Social life follows English customs, which means that one may stay in Shanghai until doomsday without making desirable acquaintances unless he or she takes the initiative. Hence it is permissible for a stranger to call anywhere. If a card is returned, with an invitation to dinner, the acquaintance may be improved; otherwise, that ends it.

Every foreign settlement has at least one club, where there is a general assembly of the male population twice daily—at noon and after the offices close. There one may hear all that is happening and do the other things that a club permits. The main club is so English that one engaged in a retail business cannot hope to become a member. His bookkeepers or clerks may join, not having degraded themselves by putting shop signs bearing their names on street exhibition, and from that connection they are socially entitled to look down on their employer.

The custom that keeps a retailer out of a club, however well-to-do or desirable he may be as an acquaintance, also closes the doors of society to him. He is never invited to any of the high-caste dinners, although at functions of that kind one may usually find an auctioneer and horse doctor among the guests.

The part that a club plays in Eastern life is illustrated in the Hankow correspondence of one of the newspapers here, which began a recent letter as follows: "No one talks any more of politics in Hankow; even the training for the coming races ceases to interest. All minor interests are temporarily in abeyance; the great event of the week is the opening of the new bar at the Hankow Club." At the club bar affairs of the settlement take shape. There is no better place to get acquainted and to arrange plans for business or pleasure. Race lotteries are sold there. One may as well be out of the world as to absent himself from the Spring and Fall races that occur at all the important settlements. Hunting and fishing parties fix their programmes at the club. There is a general exodus by houseboat at the holiday season on this kind of pleasure. It is the place to organize cross-country riding, paper chases, polo, and other varieties of sport, of which there is great abundance. With a climate like that of Washington, Shanghai and the ports southward admit of outdoor recreation well into the Winter. Business houses are most indulgent in allowing their employes to get away for that purpose.

Here is a life without hurry or worry, and with enough money in it to enable it to be said that no poor Europeans, meaning also Americans, are ever seen in China. If one is reasonably busy for about seven hours a day, he does as much as is expected of him, and he can live well, enjoy frequent holidays, and escape most of the drudgeries of life at home by having nearly everything done for him by willing helpers. As elsewhere, great fortune favors only the few, but those who are content to be merely comfortable find that in spite of distance from home, of separation from kindred, and of instinctive longing for other scenes and faces and associations, they are more than compensated, on the whole, for the disadvantages of expatriation.

FREDERICK W. EDDY.

MAY SAVE CITY MILLIONS.

Contractors Not Authorized to Abandon Work and Sue for Profits.

An important decision affecting the interests of the city was made public yesterday. According to Controller Coler, between two and three million dollars are involved.

Charles Jones sued the city for $86,000 because, when the Greater New York was formed by the consolidation of the different municipalities, Controller Coler ordered work stopped on many city contracts so that he could inquire into the financial condition of the city. Controller Coler was afraid that the debt limit would be exceeded. Contractor Jones claimed that the delay in the work and the payments made by the Controller caused him a loss of $86,000, and he claimed that the delay authorized the abandonment of the contract and damages not only for work done, but for profits which the contract would have made if the work had been completed.

The Appellate Division, by a unanimous vote, decided that the action of the city in temporarily suspending payments pending an examination as to the finances of the city was not such a breach of the contract as authorized contractors to abandon work and recover future profits.

There were hundreds of contracts on which work was ordered stopped by the city officials soon after consolidation. The saving to the city by this decision will amount up in the millions.

TENEMENT REFORM MOVEMENT.

Public Meeting Announced—Bill to be Sent to the Legislature.

The first public meeting in connection with a new tenement reform movement started by the Social Reform Club, it was announced yesterday, will be held in the rooms of the Social Reform Club, 45 University Place, on Feb. 19. The principal speaker will be Lawrence Veiller, Secretary of the Tenement House Commission, who will exhibit stereopticon views of the results of his investigation of the tenements.

Charles F. Wingate, Chairman of a special committee appointed by the Social Reform Club to carry on the movement, made a statement yesterday as to the work of the committee, in which he said:

"We are getting experts to investigate the tenements in a list we have prepared, with a view to submitting a bill before the Legislature providing for more light and air space in tenements. We also want to limit the height of buildings, so as to conserve as much of the light as possible. Wider air shafts are needed. I may remark that, bad as some of the old tenements are, the rents charged for apartments in them are absurdly high. There is no district in the city where rents are so high as in the tenement districts. We cannot, of course, fix the rents by law, but we can bring about legislation by which the owners of tenements must give better accommodations for the money."

NEW LONGSHOREMEN'S UNION.

Planned by Socialists—How Man Who Differed from Them Was Treated.

The Socialist Trade and Labor Alliance, composed of the trades unions in the Socialist-Labor Party, organized a union of 'longshoremen at a rather exciting meeting in 407 Canal Street, beginning on Friday night and ending after midnight yesterday morning.

Some time ago the 'longshoremen in New York and several other large cities were organized by Edward McHugh, who was sent here from London by the National Association of Dock Laborers of Great Britain and Ireland, for the purpose. After he returned to London, his union went to pieces and another union was formed, which is also beginning to break up.

A member of the latter attended the meeting in 407 Canal Street and began to debate matters with the Socialists. The union man did not have a pleasant time, as all his remarks were hissed and all the remarks of the Socialists vigorously applauded. The union man tried to get a chance of making an argument, but the meeting became uproarious, and he finally left in disgust.

In a statement made yesterday, their leaders say they are going to rescue the 'longshoremen "from the political leeches that have long fattened on their misery and woe."

"CIVILIZATION" OF CHINA

The Allies' Way Makes the Horrors of War Seem Merciful.

RAVAGES OF FIRE AND SWORD

Thirst for Blood Gives License to Murder, Pillage, and Attacks Upon Women.

In The Contemporary Review for this month, under the title of "The Chinese Wolf and the European Lamb," Mr. E. J. Dillon presents in harrowing details an account of the massacres of the Chinese by the so-called allied European soldiery. For want of humanity the writer accuses the Russians, the French, and the Germans. "The doings of some of these apostles of culture," writes Mr. Dillon, "were so heinous that even the plea of their having been perpetrated upon wild savages would not rid them from the nature of crimes." This is the description of a scene at the bar of the Taku, toward the mouth of the Pei-ho.

"Dead bodies of Chinamen were floating seaward, some with eyes agape and aghast, others with brainless skulls and eyeless sockets, and nearly all of them wearing their blue blouses, baggy trousers, and black glossy pigtails. Many of them looked as if they were merely swimming on their backs. Hovering over each was a dense cloud of flies, and higher still, in the hot, heavy air, unclean birds of prey wheeling round and round, but never once descending. They had long been battening on shore, and had grown squeamish. The sky was stagnate with heat; the air quickened to fire, and quivered till its vibrations were visible to the eye; there was not a breath of wind to stir the leafage of the willows on the distant banks. Away out in the offing one could descry the heads of men swaying from side to side with a motion very different from drifting. On drawing nearer and looking through the glasses, I became aware that scores of Chinamen scattered over the space of many miles were up to their necks in water. Each and every one of these tollers of the sea was standing upon stilts fishing for soles, and holding a net which he worked with both hands. Their heads were imperfectly shielded from the sun's blistering rays by the coils of their plaited hair, and their bodies, up to their necks, had been soaking thus in brine since early morning. These men were working for the surviving members of their families. Far as they were from each other, they were still more distant from the shore, the nearest stretch of which was some three miles off. Now, none of these busy fishermen ever moved away from the bodies of their townsmen, which kept floating slowly past, each accompanied by its black cloud of flies, and infecting the air for many a rood around. Those wretched helots who thus left the dead to bury their dead had little of the magic power that excites fellow feeling. And it would have stood them in poor stead if they had possessed it. Yet they sorely needed solace; for their souls were as completely steeped in misery as their bodies were in water. 'Funny fellows, the Chinese,' heartless brutes,' was the only comment I heard as we sailed past and other scenes gradually unrolled themselves to our eager gaze."

RAVAGES OF FIRE AND SWORD.

"Fire and sword had put their marks upon this entire country. The untrampled corn was rotting in the fields, the pastures were herdless, roofless the ruins of houses, the hamlets devoid of inhabitants. In all the villages we passed the desolation was the same. Day after day, hour after hour, sometimes minute after minute, bloated corpses, pillowed on the crass ooze, drifted down the current, now getting entangled in the ropes, now caught by an obstacle near the shore. Three livid corpses were thus held fast on a shelf in the islet in midstream, and the shallows around kept me a few yards to the lea of them for not less than six hours of a scorchingly hot day. Hard by a spot named Koh So, I saw two bodies on a low-lying ledge of the shore. Accustomed by this time to behold in this broad light of day some of the horrors which the soil of the graveyard hides from all living things but the worm, I should have glided carelessly past them but for the pathos of their story, which needed no articulate voice to tell. A father and his boy of eight had been shot down in the name of civilization while holding each other's hands and praying for mercy. And there they lay, hand still holding hand, while a brown dog was slowly eating one of the arms of the father. To Europeans at home such a sight would appeal with force; to Chinamen it is the embodiment of spiritual as well as physical misery, for the son who should have kept his father's memory alive in this world, and been helped to him in the world to come, had been cut down as well as himself. It was like killing a man in his sins so as to insure his eternal damnation, which was one of the many forms of assassination in mediaeval Italy. I looked at the faces of the little boy and his father, and I can see them still, as clearly and almost as concretely as I saw them on the day. Truly it is not 'sickly sentimentality' that marks the attitude of European culture-bearers toward China."

The terrible conditions in Tung-Tschau are thus described:

"I speak as an eye witness when I say, for example, that over and over again the gutters of the City of Tung-Tschau ran red with blood, and I sometimes found it impossible to go my way without getting my boots bespattered with human gore. There were few shops, private houses, and courtyards without dead bodies and pools of dark blood. Amid a native population whose very souls quaked with fear at sight of a rifle, revolver, or military uniform, a reign of red terror was inaugurated for which there seems no adequate motive. Even if all the Chinese within the city walls had risen in revolt against the foreigners, the latter would have quelled it almost without an effort. Yet they were kept with a Damocles' sword continually falling on their heads. No native's life or property was safe for an hour. Men I had been speaking to before lunch were in their graves by sundown, and no mortal will ever know the reason why. The thirst of blood had made men mad. The pettiest and most despicable whipper-snapper who happened to have seen the light of day in Europe or Japan had uncontrolled power over the life and limbs, the body and soul, of the most highly-cultivated Chinaman in the city. From his decision there was no appeal. A Chinaman never knew what might befide him an hour hence, if the European lost his temper. He might lie down to rest after having worked like a beast of burden for twelve or fourteen hours only to be suddenly awakened out of his sleep, marched a few paces from his hard couch, and shot dead. He was never told, and probably seldom guessed, the reason why. I saw an old man and woman who were thus hurriedly hustled out of existence. Their day's work done they were walking home, when a fire broke out on a little barge on the river. They were the only living beings found out of bed at the time, and in the pockets of the woman a candle and some matches were stowed away. Nobody, not even the boat watchman, had been seen on near the boat. They were pounced upon, taken to the river's edge, shot and buried. It was the work of fifteen minutes or less. Short shrift was given to any native. Europeans had their own business to attend to, and adjudicating matters of this kind could be but an interlude. Executions were too frequent to have much precious time wasted on the preliminaries. No fire ever broke out to my knowledge without a number of Chinamen being immolated next day on the altar of justice or vengeance. The Chinese were treated as Christians were in the reign of Nero."

TREATMENT OF WOMEN.

If at the beginning there may have been some isolated cases of Japanese cruelty, Mr. Dillon writes, "the Japanese Generals very sternly set their faces against this species of devilry, visiting the offenders brought before them with such terrible punishment that among their troops the practice died suddenly out, and the Japs succeeded in setting an example of political wisdom to all the foreign allies." A further compliment is paid to the Japanese:

"'In battle fearless and fierce, they were wont to spare the lives of harmless people in all towns and cities, and to post up notices on the doors within which such protected citizens dwelt, calling upon all their allies to spare and 'not to molest the inmates, who are good, loyal people.' In worldly wisdom, as in their commissariat and hospital organization, the Japs were considerably ahead of the best of the Christian allies."

To the lust for blood was added the horrible treatment of the women. Mr. Dillon writes:

"So far as I have been able to make out, and I have been at some pains to investigate the subject, no officers or soldiers of English or German-speaking nationalities have been guilty of these abominations against defenseless women. And the crimes of this nature which were committed in the cities, towns, and villages in which I was staying were numerous. It cannot be gainsaid, and should be openly affirmed, that after a time severe measures were proclaimed against offenders, and I remember that on the 1st of September a Russian soldier was arrested by some Indian troops in the act of violating a woman, and was duly handed over to his military superiors for punishment. But it would be unfair to pass over in silence the fact that only two days previously a Sikh had been pounced upon by the Russians and delivered up to the British for condign punishment for a similar offense; and, two days earlier still, two other Indians had been shot dead by American soldiers for violating a Chinawoman. To compare nationalities in respect of the guilt of their representatives would be at once misleading to the historian and prejudicial to the cause of humanity. It is enough to know that outrages against female honor were heinous and many; together with the taking of unprotected lives and property, they were the crimes most frequently commited by the allied troops."

As to the Boxers, at first utter extermination seems to have been the rule of action.

"Down to the beginning of November the British were the only troops which, to my knowledge, gave quarter to Boxers, taking the wounded members into hospital and caring for them as for their own men. They also refused, more than once, to shoot in cold blood Chinamen who had fought against them in battle, but were taken weeks later without arms in their hands. On the other hand, the Japanese, who, throughout this invasion of China, have been on their Sunday behavior, were the only power among the allies who understood the natives, gained their confidence, restored perfect order, and re-established the reign of law. The Japanese districts of Tien-Tsin and Peking, for instance, were model cities quite apart from all others. They were crowded with Chinamen who had returned, and were going about their ordinary business without fear for life or property. Markets were held here every day, and victuals bought and sold at the time that all the other wards of these cities were in a state of chaos and without vegetables or meat. The Japanese were animated by a desire to show Europe that if a thorough reorganization of China be desirable, they, and they alone, can affect it. And this they have gone far toward proving to Europe and the world in the most convincing way. Looting was first put down in the Japanese wards of Peking."

THE RIOT OF LOOT.

Looting may be said to have been general. The richest harvest was that gleaned by the Japanese. They helped themselves freely to the silver in the Mint and Treasury at Peking. The Russians showed the greatest ability in plundering. "The lawless looting which the rules of war against barbarians were said to warrant was continued until there was nothing left worth carrying off." As to the plundering of the apartments in the Forbidden City, Mr. Dillon declares there was a satanic humor about it, worthy of a modern Hogarth. Everybody wanted a "souvenir."

"The civilizers burst into the imperial chambers, despite the respectful requests of the Mandarins present; but it was only, forsooth, to have a look or take a photograph. Then they handled the furniture, but merely in order to ascertain the nature of the metals and the hardness of the wood. Then drawers were pulled out and cases opened, just as they might glance at and admire the barbaric splendor of the Chinese Court. And then there was a pause, during which the intruders looked less at the valuables and more at each other. One man would lift up a costly jade ornament or a fine piece of silverwork, study it, glance furtively around, re-examine it with a blush, lay it down in a half-shamefaced, half-regretful way, and move on to another drawer. Then he would return to the first and begin these rites over again. One gentleman had only just turned his back for a second on a most artistic and ancient piece of jade work, and was coming back to—admire it once more, when he saw it disappear in the side pocket of another, who remarked with a diplomatist's euphemism: 'One cannot go without a souvenir.' That word souvenir was the formula which every one had been seeking for. Once found, they all breathed and plundered freely. Each one wanted a souvenir, and, as there was little time to spare and choose, he took a number of articles home for inspection. The full tide of looting had now set in and could no longer be stemmed, even by the sturdiest of those who were wont to be 'honest in the daylight and virtuous in the presence of a crowd.' An officer of high rank, coming in, shook his head sadly, but exclaimed hopefully enough: 'Gentlemen, no looting, please. Each one may take a little souvenir, but nothing more.' But coolies carrying coals to steamers in Hongkong could not be more expeditious than was this respectable gathering of military and civil officials in stowing away the most unwieldy vessels, images, and ornaments between their coats and their skins. It was very comical to see self-respecting individuals, their features serious and solemn, while their bodies were so monstrously misshapen that even as gargoyles they would have been impossible. One officer left with what many fancied must be a ladies' tournure, expanded by the heat to alarming dimensions. His friends explained afterward that the protuberance was caused by a magnificent vessel of old china, which he in some mysterious way secreted on his person.

The peculiar horrors of this war the author certainly does not exaggerate. It may be questioned, however, whether he does not see the Manchu dynasty and the Chinese in a more amiable light than they deserve. The matter resolves itself into this: If China does not respect the lives of the foreign representatives or of the Americans or Europeans who dwell within her confines, she must be made to do so. This general rule holds good for Dahomey or China. The conclusion of this remarkable article is as follows:

"China has never meddled in European affairs, never given the powers any just cause of complaint. In fact, her chief sin consists in her obstinate refusal to put herself in a state to do either. She is not encroaching upon the territory of others, although her population has become too numerous for her own. Her only desire is to be left, as she leaves others, in peace. She has a right to this isolation. Russia allows no foreign missionaries to convert her people. To induce a Russian subject to abandon his Church for Protestantism or Catholicism is a crime, punishable by law. Why should a similar act not be similarly labeled and treated in China? It is, of course, useless to expect the powers to change their line of action. But it is hardly too much to ask that the press should modify its language describing it. Why should cultured and more or less truth-loving peoples persist in speaking of the glorious work of civilizing China, when it is evident that they are ruining her people and demoralizing their own troops besides? The future historian will find it difficult to explain how it came about that the free Christian people, most generous blood boiled with indignation against the high-handed action of the British in South Africa were at the very same time enthusiastic in their praise of the 'good work done' by the brave troops in China.

"The policy of the powers is a sowing of the wind, and the harvest reaped will surely be the whirlwind. But that belongs to the 'music of the future.'"

A LAWYER DENOUNCED.

Magistrate Crane Says that His Conduct Was Heartless.

When in March last Mrs. Mary Hunt had her husband, an agent in a life insurance company, arraigned in the Yorkville Police Court before Magistrate Crane, charged with non-support, and the recreant one was placed under $500 bonds to pay his wife $8 a week, Lawyer Charles E. Lansing of 171 Broadway asked that his client be paroled in his custody until the next day, when he would furnish the bonds.

On the following day all appeared in court except Hunt. Lansing stated that Hunt had disappeared, but that he would have him back as soon as he could get him, and in the meantime he would look out for the interests of Mrs. Hunt.

Mrs. Hunt yesterday had Lansing appear before Magistrate Crane, in the same court, on a summons. She said that the lawyer has made frequent promises to her, none of which he had kept. She says she is in a destitute condition. Magistrate Crane, who has taken an interest in the case, referred to the promises made ten months ago by the lawyer to Mrs. Hunt, and characterized the lawyer's conduct as "heartless"—and of the sort that did not reflect credit on him or his profession. Magistrate Crane said he would see to it that Lansing was punished.

Clothiers' Association Convention.

The Clothiers' Association of New York, which is the representative body in this city of the National Clothiers' Association, has completed arrangements for the annual convention and banquet, to be held at Sherry's on Wednesday, Feb. 6. Delegates from all the important clothing manufacturing centres will attend the convention, at which matters of vital importance to the trade will be discussed. The banquet arrangements are in charge of an Entertainment Committee, of which Sol Heller is Chairman.

RICH POLITICAL KLONDIKE

Efforts to Do Away with the Fee System in Brooklyn.

Three Offices from Which Incumbents Are Said to Have Derived from $60,000 to $100,000 Annually.

If the efforts of certain Republican legislators at Albany to get into law three particular bills now in the Senate and Assembly obtain, a rich political Klondike—the fee offices of Kings County—will soon be exhausted and three of the richest political plums in the State will no longer lend interest to politics in the borough across the big bridge. It is proposed to make these offices salaried ones, and to do away with the fee system entirely. It is believed that the measures will become law, and there are a certain happy few political gentlemen in Brooklyn, with plethoric bank accounts, who, when they think of this, blithely clipping their coupons, or stirring up the dust down the road with a 2:10 stepper, chuckle with glee that their day in these particular offices has been and gone.

There was once a famous statesman who declared that he would rather be right than be President. And there are politicians in Kings County who would rather be Sheriff of that county than President. Not that, as in the case of the famous statesman referred to, there is any question of right involved in the choice; merely that there is "more in it" financially. The President of these United States draws an annual salary of $50,000 as head of the Nation. One man who has held the office of Sheriff of Kings County pulled out in one year more than twice that sum in fees. This amounts to more than $300 for each working day of the week. At 5 per cent., this would be the income from $2,000,000 invested.

With very few exceptions, the men who have held the office of Sheriff, County Clerk, and County Register of Kings County have retired independently rich. The few men who have not gone out of office wealthy men got rid of most of their money before retirement. Among the wealthiest politicians of Brooklyn to-day are men who have held these county offices. One man retired from the office of Sheriff with a fortune of nearly $400,000. When elected to the office he was earning $25 a week in a mercantile establishment in Manhattan.

Now the continuation of these three richest political offices in the gift of the people of Kings County is threatened by the local Republican leaders, who are behind the bills now at Albany. It is provided in these measures that the three offices in question shall be salaried. An annual allowance of $34,000 is to the Register's office for salaries, which includes the Register's own salary, fixed at $8,000. The bills provide that the County Clerk's office shall be allowed $36,000 a year for salaries, the County Clerk himself to get a salary of $8,000. The Sheriff's office is allowed $40,000 annually for salaries, including the Sheriff's salary of $15,000. The bills calling for these changes have been introduced in the Assembly and Senate, respectively, by Assemblyman Wilson and Senator Marshall, both of Brooklyn.

If the bills become law, the present incumbents of the offices will not be affected, as the change will not go into effect until the expiration of their terms.

It has always been a matter of speculation among Brooklyn politicians as to just how much money in fees has been taken out of the offices of Sheriff, County Clerk, and Register by the men who have successively filled them. A man who has held the office of Sheriff, and is familiar with the workings of the other offices mentioned, said yesterday that exact figures in this connection were not obtainable. The incumbents of these offices, he said, received many fees which they were not required to make a record of, and, as they took their cash accounts with them when they left office, they alone knew what were the exact emoluments of their office.

It can be said, however, that the office of Sheriff of Kings County pays its incumbent on the average $75,000 a year. Not infrequently it pays much more. William J. Buttling, who was Sheriff from 1893 to 1897, holds the record in the matter of fees received while filling the office. When Mr. Buttling was elected the term of office was three years. Legislative action made the term in the Sheriff's office uniform with those of the other county officers—two years. This action, however, was taken after Mr. Buttling's election for three years, and, as his term could not be reduced, he was continued in office for four years, or until the next general election of county officers. Mr. Buttling's fees during these four years amounted to between $350,000 and $400,000. In the year 1896 his office paid him $106,000, which is the largest amount ever received by a Sheriff of Kings County during a like period. During the other years of his incumbency of the office Mr. Buttling's fees are said to have amounted respectively to $90,000, $80,000, and $85,000.

John Courtney, whom Buttling succeeded in office, and who was a Democrat, Buttling being a Republican, is said to have averaged between $75,000 and $80,000 in the amount of fees he received yearly. This would mean something like $225,000 during the three years that he held office.

Frank D. Creamer, a Democrat, who succeeded Buttling, drew out between $150,000 and $175,000 in his term of two years as Sheriff. William Walton, who is Creamer's successor and who has been in office about a year, is said to have maintained the average of income from the position.

The offices of Register and County Clerk have for the past ten years at least paid their incumbents an average amount in fees of from $50,000 to $60,000 annually. Ex-Senator Jacob Worth, who was appointed to fill out the unexpired term of Henry C. Saffen as County Clerk, after Saffen's fees during the year that he held office. William P. Wuest, a Democrat, who succeeded Worth, fared equally well, and Peter P. Huberty, another Democrat, and the present incumbent of the office, is said not to be falling behind as to the average in respect to fees.

Granville W. Harmon, a Republican, was enriched by fees to the extent of about $150,000 during his two years incumbency of the office of County Register. About the same amount was received in fees by Henry H. Haggerty, a Democrat, who succeeded Harman in office.

James R. Howe, a Republican, the present Register and successor to Haggerty, startled the political world of Brooklyn when he took office by announcing that he did not believe in the fee system, and that he intended to reserve to himself only what he deemed a reasonable share of the fees of his office. The balance, he declared, he would devote to some public purpose. This purpose has been announced by Mr. Howe as that of presenting an equestrian statue of George Washington to the Borough of Brooklyn.

YALE'S OLDEST GRADUATE.

Judge Cutler of Connecticut the Successor to the Title.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 26.—By the death of Benjamin D. Silliman, the title of Yale's oldest living graduate falls to Leman Woodward Cutler of the class of 1829. The announcement of Mr. Cutler's succession to the title is made to-day by the university authorities.

Judge Cutler has been for years looked upon as one of the most remarkable men of his class. He was born Dec. 12, 1807, in Watertown, Conn., and lived in his native town all of his life. He is ninety-three years old at the present time and in vigorous health. Judge Cutler was educated for college privately and at Rudd's School, in Huntington, Conn., and entered Yale in 1826, the year after Silliman graduated. He took his B. A. degree in 1829, and for the next twenty years engaged in practical farming in Watertown. He never studied for a professional career, but was engaged during his whole life in public affairs. In 1843, Judge Cutler was elected to the State Senate, and served again in that capacity in 1856. He was a member of the House of Representatives at Hartford for five terms, from 1861 to 1865, and again in 1866, to fill a vacancy. His public life has been, however, mostly connected with Watertown. He acted as Judge of the Probate Court of the town for twenty-four consecutive years, and retired only because of the Constitutional provision limiting such service to the age of seventy. He was Controller of Public Accounts of the State for five terms, Town Clerk of Watertown for thirty-nine consecutive years, Town Treasurer for ten years, and County Commissioner for six years.

Judge Cutler was the son of Youngiove and Anna (Woodward) Cutler, and was descended from two old Connecticut families. He was a Whig in politics, and later became a Republican. He was married Oct. 31, 1831, but has had no children.

The nearest competitor for the honor with Judge Cutler is Prof. Samuel Porter, also of the class of 1829, but three years younger.

IN WOMAN'S WORLD.

This is a sad tale of a Grand Butler, a bottle of excellent Claret, and a Tablecloth, one of the finest products of the looms. The Cloth is the central figure, being the most valued; the Claret a misused accomplice of the Grand Butler, who is the villain of the story. It will wring the hearts of all lovers of fine linen to hear the tale, but, the villain being punished in the end, it is worth while. Many of the details are missing, but the principal facts remain. These were, to be brief, that the Butler was about to send the Claret to the table when by some misfortune he broke the bottle, the unfortunate Claret being dispersed in deep red streams in all directions. The Butler, with what he thought undoubtedly was presence of mind, but what other interested people considered to be absence of wit, flew to the Fine Linen Tablecloth, clutched it hastily, and sopped up the Claret, thereby transferring all the deep red stains to the Cloth in a fashion which the application of a whole bag, box, or barrel of salt would not be likely to remove. That is the story, which ends with the dismissal of the Grand Butler on the spot, and no more said of the Cloth, which probably went the way of good tablecloths which have been able to finish their days in states of happy usefulness. The real sadness of the tale lies in the thought that there are undoubtedly many Grand Butlers who sop up Good Claret with Fine Tablecloths and no one is any the wiser.

The man of music met the musical young woman upon the street. He saw her first at a distance, and at once his heart was filled with misgivings. Could this be the airy, fairy musical lady of his acquaintance, whose every movement was the poetry of motion? Stub along, stub along she was going with no more grace than is to be found in an old pegleg. With every step one foot came down, peg, peg, peg, peg. Something surely had happened, and the man of music approached the young woman, his face full of sympathy.

"My dear child, what is it?" he cried. "Are you ill, have you had a fall?" The young woman turned upon him a look of virtuous indignation:

"I am a pianist, Sir, and I have been vaccinated," she cried with asperity.

Burr McIntosh, the actor-photographer, says that the prettier a woman is the easier she is to photograph. A very pretty woman is charming in whatever pose she may take, and she is satisfied. A woman less attractive expects exactly the same results, and the end is unhappiness. But the woman who knows how to pose for a photograph has to be born; she cannot be made entirely. The best sitter is the professional model, who is always graceful. The woman of the stage may do well, and so may the society woman, but the professional model is best of them all.

A cashier who has business dealings with many women says that it is interesting to read the history of the times in the checks which are presented to him. It does not require a knowledge of the people to pick out the checks of the older women from those of the younger. These older women, wives of millionaires and multi-millionaires some of them, were all educated in the same school and in the times when plain, old-fashioned names were given to women. There is Mary Ann and Euphemia, Hannah Maria, Sarah Jane, Phoebe Ann, Rebecca, Martha Ann, and numerous others seldom to be found now outside old-fashioned books. And the checks of the Phoebe Anns and Euphemias it is possible to pick out at a glance from all the others without reading because of the writing. It is as old-fashioned as the names. The signatures are written with a fine pen, in a delicate, fine hand, small letters, each standing out distinctly and all perfectly legible. It is different with the checks of the daughters of the Mary Jameses and Phoebe Anns. Their names cover most of the space on the lower edge of the checks—a big, bold, up-and-down hand, so sprawled that it is almost impossible to decipher, slashed over the paper, though the names are short in themselves, Saras and Maries who represent another generation.

He is a kind and considerate man, but at the same time he realizes that business is business and that one never knows what may happen. The woman was the man's tenant, and she paid her rent always with notes which her brother indorsed. The notes were good, and the arrangement was satisfactory on all sides. But time went on and the brother died. Then the landlord, realizing that the woman had been his tenant for some years, thought to himself that it would be only courteous for him to write a note

SOME HAPPENINGS IN GOOD SOCIETY.

The days and nights roll on, and Winter is getting a bit aged and perilously near that stage when lingering in the lap of Spring describes the decay of the season. Ash Wednesday takes place on Feb. 20, now only a few weeks off, and by that time the gayeties of the year will be practically over. But although a great deal has passed, there is still a great deal to come. For nearly every evening in February there is a dinner, or rather there are dinners, a dance, or other entertainment of some kind, and the cards still are pouring in. Even with those of strict English proclivities, mourning for the Queen will not be attempted outside of diplomatic circles. Indeed, it would be very ridiculous and out of place. The few English visitors over on this side will enjoy all the hospitalities offered them. For the moment, possibly, they will not go to any very large affair, although Mrs. Arthur Paget, who dines with Mrs. Richard P. Lounsberry on Tuesday next, is expected to visit afterward the Charity Ball. This, however, is simply done with a charitable intent and to increase the revenues of the evening and add to its attractiveness.

The week which has passed into history witnessed many dances. The most notable of these were the ball given by Mr. and Mrs. William D. Sloane, the Assembly, and the small dance at the residence of Mr. Heber R. Bishop. The opera has been very well patronized, and the parterre boxes are a study of combinations of fashionable people. There is not much visiting done this year, and the hostess of the evening endeavors to bring as many young men as can conveniently crowd into the back of the box. The costumes have been very rich and there has been a brave showing of jewels, although many of the women prefer to have their hair dressed with flowers, or fillets, or tinsel ornaments. The return to the simplicity of the Greeks and Romans and the wearing of laurel wreaths of gold and silver foil, such as are sometimes yet given to children at schools for prizes are among the new fashions. This style of coiffure is much affected by very young women. Miss Beatrice Mills, the twin daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills; the Misses Gerry, Miss Leila Sloane, and Miss Twombly have worn these wreaths at various times. Friday evening was really the most brilliant of the three subscription evening performances of the week. Monday was also an excellent night, and many of the audience went afterward to the Sloane ball.

The week will commence with the large reception and ball given by Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry. This entertainment is one of yearly occurrence. One of the distinctive characteristics of any large affair at the residence of Mr. Gerry is the entire supplying of all the accessories by the household. The supper is cooked by the chefs, and all the delicacies are either obtained in this country or abroad especially for Mr. Gerry, who takes a special pride and interest in this branch of his household. The evening, as usual, will end with a large cotillion, for which some very handsome favors have been selected.

Tuesday is the date of the Charity Ball, which takes place as usual at the Astoria. The Charity Ball is an institution about which New York is familiar, and which hardly needs any additional description. There are some details as to the affair, which will be given in the proper column. There is a widespread and general interest in the Charity this year, and it promises to be one of the best attended balls in the history of its organization.

Another dance for Miss Frederica Webb will take place on Wednesday. This will be given at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. Seward Webb. It will be a small affair for debutantes, with a cotillion. It is the second in a series.

The second Cinderella dance will be held Thursday evening at Sherry's. The Cinderella is always a very popular organization, especially with the young people. It gives them the opportunity of dancing and getting home early, and it is therefore quite a boon to the chaperons. There have been so many dances this Winter, and they have all been so late in beginning and so early, so to speak, in ending, that the young women who have been going out are looking pale and haggard. The men have, many of them, to be in business houses at 9 in the morning, and the rest of Sunday—such rest as it is—does not compensate for the turning of night into day.

There is much curiosity about the dinner dance which will be given by Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay on Friday evening at the Astoria. Mr. and Mrs. Mackay have done very little entertaining on a large scale. Their house, which is leased from Mrs. Breckholst Cutting, is adapted for dinners and affairs of that kind, but it could not meet the modern requirements for a ball. A dinner dance is practically a continuous performance. At this special affair there will be over 300 guests and a number of extra men have been asked in to the dance afterward. There will be the usual cotillion, and the favors have been personally selected by Mrs. Mackay, who is renowned for her charming originality. The guests will be nearly all the younger married set, with a few of the more prominent débutantes. It is said that this Winter the girls of several years' standing have but little show, and that they are not asked out as much as formerly. At several of the recent very large dances there were almost altogether young married couples and débutantes.

The arrival of Mr. and Mrs. F. Marion Crawford has been the signal for a number of luncheons and dinners. Mrs. Cadwalader Jones gave a tea for Mrs. Crawford yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Francis D. Millet and Miss Millet have also been the recipients of much attention, and Mrs. Arthur Paget has, of course, been in great demand. She will go to Newport for a few days, and in that time the ultimate fate of Marietta Villa may be decided. Last year it was used as a restaurant, and the year before as a conservatory and flower warehouse. Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Ismay are also being entertained. Mrs. Bruce Ismay has not been here for several years. Her sister, a younger Miss Schieffelin, Miss Matilda, married C. Bower Ismay, and she has been visiting her father and mother. Dinners will be given to Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Ismay by Mr. and Mrs. Schieffelin, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Trevor, and Mr. and Mrs. James Hude Beekman, and others of the family connection during their stay in this country.

Mrs. George Cornwallis West is yet undecided about coming over to America. At present she is in London. In fact, the plans of most English people and many Americans have been entirely upset by the events of the past week. As already announced, Mr. Coleman Drayton and Miss Drayton will remain in London until after the funeral of the Queen. Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin are at their London house and will have some friends with them for the ceremonies. Mrs. Ronalds has stopped her afternoon musicales for the present. There has been a sudden influx of English people in Paris, where Consuelo, the Duchess of Manchester; Lady Lister Kaye, and Mr. and Mrs. Shaw Safe have lately arrived.

Mrs. Robert Goelet will shortly sail for Europe, and will take a cruise on the Riviera in her yacht, the Nahma. Her departure has been hastened by the death of her mother, Mrs. George Henry Warren. Gen. and Mrs. Herbert Eaton will sail for England in a fortnight, and Mr. and Mrs. Hary Payne Whitney are expected to leave on Jan. 30.

The heavy travel to Florida has not yet commenced, but the little colonies there are very gay. Jekyl Island has also its contingent and Aiken has a few more cottagers. Mr. J. H. Alexandre and family have taken a large house there, and will be at Aiken all the Spring. Mrs. John Jacob Astor will not arrive at Aiken for a permanent stay until the middle of February.

The carnival at New Orleans promises to be one of the attractions in the South this year, as usual. Rex arrives on Feb. 18, and the festivities culminate on Mardi Gras evening, the 19th. There have been many débutantes in New Orleans society this Winter. Miss Myrthe Stauffer, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter R. Stauffer, the great-granddaughter of the late Zachary Taylor and a niece of Mrs. George Spencer Eastwick, has been the most notable débutante of the Winter. A great many entertainments have been given in her honor, and her grandfather, Mr. I. H. Stauffer, gives a large cotillion at the Athenæum for her on the 29th. Miss Stauffer has as guest Miss Petronela del Valle of New York, a cousin of the Duke of Manchester, and Mr. and Mrs. Stauffer gave a luncheon in honor of the Duke and Duchess last week, while they were visiting New Orleans.

In Boston Miss Katherine Thayer, the niece of Mrs. J. Hampden Robb of this city, has made her début, and she will come over to New York for a few days before the season is over. The ball which was given for her by her father and mother was one of the handsomest which has ever taken place in Boston. A novel idea was the bringing in of the favors by a little girl drawing an illuminated spinning wheel. As is the peculiar custom of Boston society, a number of young men were made ushers. Mr. E. V. R. Thayer, Jr., being the chief. These young men are decorated with small white ribbon bows on the lapels of their coats, and their duties are to see that all the young girls and men have partners and enjoy themselves. To those who went over to Boston for the Thayer ball, and who were paying their first visit there, this was an absolute novelty, and quite a contrast from the go-as-you-please indifference of a fashionable New York ballroom.

From late mail accounts, the famous ball at Cliveden which took place directly after the new year was a boy-and-girl affair. It began and it ended quite early. The floral decorations were mauve orchids, which were used in the greatest profusion throughout the house. Miss Astor, who received with her father, wore white and gold.

A few days later occurred the meet and the hunt ball. The Astors brought to the county seat a large delegation from Cliveden. Mr. and Mrs. Henry White were also to have brought a party of friends, but the death of Lewis Rutherfurd, Mrs. White's brother, at Davos Platz changed her plans.

Wednesday will bring three weddings; those of Robert Chetwood Beatty and Miss Jean Burlingame, of Edward Somerville Jaffray, and Miss Marie C. Hewitt, and of William H. Dixon and Miss Josephine T. Williams.

The wedding of William H. Dixon and Miss Josephine T. Williams will be celebrated in Grace Church. Miss Williams, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard T. Williams, (Miss Sarah W. Peters,) will have her cousin, Miss Louisine A. Peters, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Peters, as maid of honor, and her bridesmaids are to be her cousin, Miss Taggert, who with her mother has come over from England especially for the wedding, and the Misses Marion Fish, Florence V. Twombly, Anna Dodge, and Evelyn Parsons. Mr. Dixon's best man will be his cousin, Woodward Babcock, and his ushers are to be Searle Barclay, Jr., Richard T. Williams, Jr., a brother of the bride; H. H. Hollister, Jr., Bradish Johnson, Jr., Samuel F. Babcock, Jr., a cousin of the bridegroom; Maxwell Stevenson, Frederick Kernochan, and William Stevens.

The wedding of Edward Somerville Jaffray and Miss Marie Ceballos Hewitt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hewitt, will be celebrated at 22 West Fortieth Street, which house Mr. Hewitt has leased for the season. This will be a small wedding, as only relatives and a few intimate friends have been invited to witness the ceremony. Mr. Jaffray is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard S. Jaffray (Miss Emma Harris) of Willowbrook, Irvington-on-the-Hudson, and a grandson of the late Edward S. Jaffray.

Robert Chetwood Beatty and Miss Jean Burlingame will be married in St. James's Church, Seventy-first Street and Madison Avenue, at 4 o'clock by the Rev. E. Walpole Warren, and there will be a reception afterward at the residence of the bride's parents, 22 East Seventy-eighth Street. Mr. Beatty is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Beatty (Miss Hetty Bull) of 3 East Ninth Street, and Miss Burlingame is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Burlingame, (Miss Ella F. Badger.) Miss Constance Burlingame will be her sister's maid of honor.

Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones have cards out for a dinner on Tuesday next. This is the sixth and last of the series of large dinners they have been giving this season at their town house, 13 West Fifty-first Street. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are going South on Feb. 15, to their plantation, on the North Carolina coast, and will entertain a number of house parties there. As they have good golf links, a covered tennis court, &c., on their estate, their New York friends who receive invitations to these house parties are to be envied.

Mrs. Frederic J. de Peyster has cards out for two luncheons in February—on Wednesday, Feb. 6, (instead of Feb. 7, as announced yesterday,) and on Thursday, Feb. 14. Mrs. H. Mortimer Brooks has invitations out for two large dinners on Tuesday and Thursday of next week. Mrs. Dallas Bache Pratt, Mrs. Dodge, and others have cards out for dinners to be given on Tuesday, Feb. 5.

Mrs. E. S. Auchincloss is to take a number of friends to the theatre on Monday evening, Feb. 4, and afterward there will be a supper. Mrs. H. Holbrooke Curtis will be one of next Tuesday's dinner givers, and Mrs. Robert Hoe will also give a dinner on that night, from which her guests will go to the Charity Ball.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., will give a dinner this evening at their residence, 15 Washington Square North, and Mrs. Seth Barton French and the Misses Callender and de Forest will have receptions with music this afternoon.

Miss Grace Dobson, who made her début as a professional entertainer with such brilliant success at the Waldorf under the patronage of many fashionable New York women in December last, has been the guest in Albany of Bishop William Croswell Doane and Mrs. Doane, and while there gave a recital on Thursday last for the benefit of the cathedral organ fund. The Albany papers are most enthusiastic in their commendation of Miss Dobson's cleverness in her musical monologues, and her French-Canadian recitations. She also recited Van Tassel Sutphen's "Special Delivery," which he wrote for her. Miss Dobson was assisted by Miss Florence Boeso and Dr. Tipton, and the affair was given under the patronage of Mrs. William Croswell Doane, Mrs. A. Bleecker Banks, and Mrs. George Evans.

Cable dispatches from Mrs. Livingston Lee, at home, state that Miss Margaret Lee, one of the most brilliant riders of the Roman hunting set, is recovering from her recent injury. Miss Lee was thrown at a recent hunt, and it was thought that her chances for recovery were small.

Mrs. Henry W. Poor (Miss Constance Brandon) gave a reception last night from 9 till 11 in honor of Mrs. Francis D. Millet and Miss Millet, the wife and daughter of F. D. Millet, the artist. Mrs. Millet and Miss Millet are at present the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Poor at their residence in Gramercy Park. Mrs. Poor, who was gowned in white panne velvet, embroidered in silver, was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Millet, who was in yellow moire, and Miss Millet, who wore a rose-colored satin frock, trimmed with chiffon. The house was decorated with palms and Southern smilax, and pots of white azaleas were placed in the greens that decorated the halls. Hungarian and mandolin orchestras played alternately during the evening. A buffet supper began at 11 o'clock. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Stanford White, Mr. and Mrs. Varnum, Mr. and Mrs. Cortlandt Palmer, Schuyler Van Rensselaer, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Schuyler, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert S. Satterlee, Mr. and Mrs. Prescott Hall Butler and Miss Butler, Mr. Olin and the Misses Olin, Mrs. Charles Peabody, Mr. and Mrs. Stockton, Miss Furniss, Mr. and Mrs. J. Kennedy Tod, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Barney and Miss Barney, Dr. Kinnicutt and Mrs. Kinnicutt, Mr. and Mrs. John Auchincloss, Dr. Holbrooke Curtis and Mrs. Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Howland, Mr. and Mrs. Dimock, Mr. and Mrs. Leon Marié, Peter Marié, Mr. and Mrs. Phelps Stokes, Mr. and Mrs. Marquand, Mr. and Mrs. Wagstaff, Miss Eloise Breese, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Alfred Collins, Mr. and Mrs. Kernochan, Miss Kernochan, Miss Whitney, Miss Emmet, Mr. and Mrs. Twombly and Miss Twombly, Mrs. Lindley Hoffman Chapin, Mrs. Roger Bacon, Mrs. William Douglas and Miss Douglas, Mr. and Mrs. Henderson, Miss Elsie De Wolfe, Miss Bessie Marbury, the Misses Hewitt, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Delafield, Mr. and Mrs. William Manice, Miss Susan Strong, Mrs. Thacher Adams, Miss Remsen, and Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Cooper.

The kirmess which the Society of Decorative Art is to give, as announced in this column last Tuesday, in the Astoria ball room on the evening of March 14 will, it is said, be far more brilliant than that given last year, as there will be more time for preparation and other dances will be added. In the afternoon there will be a children's kirmess, preceded by the pantomime of "Cinderella," and in the evening there will be the National dances, &c., of last year, with many additional features. Miss Leila Stewart, who had it in charge last season, will also manage this year's affair.

There will be numerous bridge whist parties this coming week. The Southampton Club, organized by Mrs. Henry G. Trevor, will meet on Wednesday, and Mrs. Francis Burrall Hoffman's will meet on Friday. Mrs. Charles S. Abercrombie of Madison Square North has invitations out for a euchre party on Wednesday next, and Mrs. Maturin Livingston has a meeting of her bridge whist class on the first of the week.

Mrs. Robert McAllister Lloyd will, as announced in this column on Friday, give a dance for young people at her residence, 5 Gramercy Park, on Tuesday, Feb. 19, at which G. Beekman Hoppin will lead the cotillion dancing with the hostess. It will be remembered that Mrs. Lloyd was obliged to recall the invitations she had issued for a dance on Jan. 17 for Miss Eleanor Russell Morris, because of the death of a relative of Miss Morris. The dance will be preceded by a large dinner.

On the Campania, which sailed yesterday, were Mr. Tompkins McIlvaine, Mr. J. Newlands Thomson, Mr. C. B. Waite, and Senator Fulford, Mrs. Fulford, and Miss Fulford. On the Augusta Victoria, which arrived on Friday, were Mrs. Carlos de Garmendia, Mrs. F. F. Stephens, and Miss Marianne Stephens. Mr. and Mrs. Daniel B. Fearing were among the passengers on the Prinzessin Victoria Louise.

Mr. William K. Vanderbilt has gone South, and will cruise in the Valiant for two weeks before going abroad. He sails for Europe in February.

The English newspapers and a few Americans have announced the engagement of Miss Leila Paget to Lord Athlumney, an officer of the Coldstream Guards, who has an estate in County Meath, Ireland, of 11,000 acres and is the owner of Somerville Castle. Mrs. Paget has made, as yet, no formal announcement of this engagement to her friends here. Miss Leila Paget has not yet made her début in society. Last year she was quite an invalid. She is at present yachting with Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Drexel.

Lady Eva Dugdale and Mr. Frank Dugdale, her husband, have been in New York since last Tuesday. They came over for a trip to Australia and Canada. The trip has been abandoned on account of the death of the Queen. Lady Eva Dugdale is the principal lady in waiting to the Duchess of Cornwall and York, and the sister of the Earl of Warwick. Lady Dugdale will return to England.

Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger will sail Jan. 31 from Genoa to pass the Winter with Mrs. James P. Kernochan at Washington.

SOCIETY NOTES.

Mrs. Frederick Foote will receive on Wednesdays, 120 East Thirty-fourth Street.

Mr. A. Walpole Craigie will give a reception on Friday, Feb. 8, 57 West Forty-sixth Street, to meet Mr. Henry Waller.

Mrs. Herbert Jerome Davis, 255 West Seventy-first Street, gave a large reception yesterday. She was assisted in receiving by Mrs. George Perkins Lawton and Mrs. Austen Dyatt.

The Daughters of the Revolution of the State of New York will give a euchre party for the Valley Forge Memorial fund at the Waldorf-Astoria on Monday, Jan. 28, during the afternoon. The game will commence at 2:30 o'clock.

Miss Harriette Cady, the pianiste, who has just returned from Canada, will give a small reception on Tuesday afternoon next after 4 o'clock at 258 West Forty-second Street in honor of the Earl of Drogheda, who is about to sail for Europe.

The engagement is announced of Isidor Chuck and Miss Bertha Simon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. Simon. The young couple will receive to-day at the residence of Miss Simon's parents, 114 East Fifty-sixth Street.

Miss Carroll Bradshaw of 65 Central Park West will give the last of her studio teas for January tomorrow afternoon, Jan. 28. One of the soloists will be Miss Amy Roble, the young violinist, lately of Brussels.

The Sin Som Club will have a theatre party at the Criterion to-morrow evening. The members will assemble at the residences of Mrs. Oliver Livingston Jones, 116 West Seventy-second Street; Mrs. Richard B. Hartshorn, 9 West Fifty-seventh Street, and Mrs. John Burling Lawrence, 126 East Thirtieth Street. After the play supper will be served at the residence of Mrs. Henry B. Lockwood.

PLEASANT TIMES AT LAKEWOOD

Golf Links Little Affected by Rain—Amusements at the Hotels.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Jan. 26.—To one who does not know how quickly Lakewood recovers from a spell of bad weather, it will seem incredible that within three or four hours after a severe rainstorm—a storm that has flooded links and turned the roads into rivers of mud—scarcely a trace of water can be seen. Only a week ago it was thought that the handicap tournaments at the Lakewood Golf Club and the Country Club would have to be postponed, but no fewer than seventeen players turned in good cards at the golf club and eighteen at the country club before 5 o'clock. It is this wonderful absorbent faculty of the soil that makes Lakewood the healthy spot it is.

Socially it has been very quiet here. Many of the cottagers run up to New York for the opera, and come back to rest. At the hotels time passes pleasantly, if uneventfully. The Lakewood is well filled, and its guests when forced to stay indoors find abundant pastime in cards, billiards, pool, and promenading. The orchestra is also a potent attraction. Well-arranged programmes with popular as well as classic selections find favor with the music lovers who sit in the foyer or promenade along the covered verandas. Thursday night, Krieger, the magician, delightfully entertained them, and won much applause. Registered from New York are Mrs. W. T. Bull, Miss Hentse, Master James G. Blaine, third, Master W. T. Bull, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Makley, Miss Makley, Mrs. W. L. Lascelles, Mrs. Jay W. Woodford, Miss McConnell, Mr. and Mrs. I. Nathan, A. Westervelt, H. Mooyer, A. B. Hart, A. W. Gilbert, J. J. Colton, Mr. and Mrs. A. Openhyme and maid, Master George Openhyme, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Nordlinger, child, and nurse, Mr. and Mrs. M. Gomprecht, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Burbridge, Mr. and Mrs. L. F. George, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Anthon, Mrs. G. B. Glover, Mrs. H. L. Williamson, Mrs. Alfred Wagner, Mrs. M. Rindskopf, from Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. M. Minden, R. Robins, A. Mason, Mr. and Mrs. E. Cohen, W. D. Rockefeller, Allenhurst; H. B. Manning, New Brunswick; Dr. and Mrs. Charles Hermon Thomas, Miss Champion, Philadelphia; I. Fox, Hartford; Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Gilman, Boston; Mr. and Mrs. E. Mandel, and Miss Wampold, Chicago.

The Laurel-in-the-Pines continues winning new friends and holding old ones. During the past week it has entertained several celebrities—Mrs. C. M. Raymond, who as Anna Louise Cary, was one of the greatest contraltos of her day; Miss Minnie Ashley, whom New York applauded in "The Greek Slave" and "San Toy," and Miss Edna May, who came down to recover from the grip. Ericsson Bushnell, the bas, has also been a guest at the Pines. Other New Yorkers registered there are Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Foster, Miss Wells, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Vreeland and three children and maid, J. A. Fiske, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Raymond, Mr. and Mrs. F. N. Woerz, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Ceballos, Master Ceballos, F. H. Sargent, J. T. Sargent, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Steele, Miss Eleanor Steele, James B. Vredenberg, Mrs. Winthrop Howard Barnes, Walter H. Prince, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Clifford, L. B. Woodruff, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. S. Hyde, Miss J. McLean, Miss A. McLean, Jacob Halstead, and Mr. and Mrs. Amory G. Hodges. Brooklyn is represented by Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Smith, Miss Alice Smith, Miss L. B. Cromwell, Mrs. C. E. Warren, Miss M. L. Warren, Thomas J. Patterson, George Patterson, Miss Agnes Patterson, and Miss Mary Patterson; Washington by Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Noyes, N. Noyes, and Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Noyes; Philadelphia by Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Huston, W. Newbold Ely, Dr. G. I. Ring, and Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Sharp; Boston by Miss M. L. Williams, Miss K. H. Holden, and Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Herrick.

The regular Winter colony has arrived and settled at the Laurel House. The latest additions are Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Nones, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Haas, Mrs. William C. Sheldon, Mr. and Mrs. J. Byrne, Mrs. Charles H. Post, Miss Post, James M. Montgomery, Willis D. Wood, Miss Bowers, W. A. Warburton, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Hastings, Miss Hastings, Miss Foote, N. M. McCawley, Alfred Rowell, Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Mann, Mrs. C. F. Foote, Mr. and Mrs. R. Endicott, Mrs. M. L. Delafield, Jr., Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Holman of New York; Mrs. W. H. Gammon, Miss Gammon, Mr. and Mrs. H. De Haven, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Rowe, the Rev. Dr. J. G. Bacchus of Brooklyn; Mrs. C. H. Converse, Andrew Blume, Mr. and Mrs. J. Crane, Jr., of Boston; Walter T. D. Howe, C. J. Irwin, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Busch of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Carrington of Chicago.

Splendors of the Arion Ball.

The Carnival of Venice, which will be one of the artistic features of the Arion Ball, to be held at Madison Square Garden on Monday night, Feb. 11, will contain five magnificent floats. The second float represents "The Golden Age of Venice." Upon this float will be Titian and Raphael, with female models; Michael Angelo at work on a bust, and a number of pupils and models. Constituting the retinue of followers of the third float will be characters from Shakespeare's works, among them Othello and Desdemona, Shylock and Jessica, Portia, Juliet, and eight young women dressed in the costume of Rosalind.

TO DEVELOP FLAX CULTURE.

Minnesota Woman to Establish a Fibre Industry with Aid of a Belgian Expert.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 26.—A new industry is developing in Minnesota which will revolutionize flax culture, in the production of flax fibre for linen manufacture. This new departure is due to the energy of a woman, Mrs. Oscar N. Olberg, who has spent the past six months in Europe making an investigation of flax fibre culture.

She has just returned, and announces that there will be established at her home town, Albert Lea, Minn., shortly, a flax fibre industry, and that the farmers will be offered and paid good prices for their flax straw. Mrs. Olberg has engaged the services of G. Loppens of Neerpelt, Belgium, who will come to America and show the farmers how to raise flax. Two or three inventions for breaking and retting have been secured, and the patents are controlled by those interested in the enterprise. Finally, and most important of all, Mrs. Olberg has interested one of the heaviest and best-known capitalists of the East to finance the enterprise.

Mrs. Olberg learned that in Belgium an annual rental of $50 an acre is paid for the flax franchise. In Minnesota thousands of acres better adapted to flax culture than the foreign soil can be purchased for less than the annual rental in Belgium.

The crop in this country is cultivated solely for the seed, which is sold to linseed oil manufacturers, while the most valuable part of the flax fabric is wasted. Thousands of tons are burned annually in Minnesota. It saved at all, it is sold for packing at a price so low that it does not pay for handling. During the early nineties, after several samples of Minnesota flax had been sent to the linen mills of Ireland and Brussels, and had been pronounced first-class, there was considerable activity toward the establishment of linen factories in the Northwest. Plants were put in operation in Minneapolis, Eau Claire, and Appleton. Expensive machinery was purchased abroad, and the home-made product of these mills was unsurpassed by the goods from Belfast. But there was a dearth of raw material. The farmers would not, or could not, get the flax fibre into condition for the looms.

Within two years after the linen mills mentioned had started every one of them had ceased operations. For they found that in order to keep the spindles moving, they would be compelled to import retted flax fibre, while our own flax straw was either going to waste or being burned up. The Western linen mills, therefore, were compelled to suspend operations, while those of the older cities in the East only maintained themselves by purchasing a portion of their raw material from across the sea.

is the most beautiful Coiffure ever introduced. Its many advantages as to comfort and style will be realized upon inspection.

The Newport Coil as made and patented by me is made only of long, natural, wavy hair, with absolutely no stems, thus being incomparably superior in style and comfort to the old fashioned braid or switch.

Wigs and Toupees for ladies or gentlemen. None are allowed to leave my establishment which are not perfect in every way. Wigs when made by me are perfection as to fit, comfort, and illusive appearance.

OLD COLONIAL FURNITURE

Genuine Pieces Are Hard to Find, a Dealer Says.

Reproductions Are Really Better than Originals—Hand Work and Machine Work.

There is a rather shabby little shop on a rather shabby street not far up town, where a business is done that would not be suspected from outside appearances. It is from this shop that many of the wealthy residents of the city get their fine furniture in old designs, either the genuine article or a superior reproduction. The proprietor of the shop is a German, who learned his trade as a cabinet maker over a half century ago, when a man was taught his business in its entirety. When he started on a piece of furniture he made it every bit himself. A man like that knew his business from A to Z, and following it from the first half of the last century, gives a knowledge of general conditions not often found. The German cabinet maker has not changed his business as other workers of his time have done, and still makes single pieces of furniture and repairs old ones. The trend of the business is, however, quite different. Only the wealthiest families can afford to buy hand-made furniture, and the prices for handwork in these days of factory made furniture of all kinds seem fabulous.

Repairing and putting in order the old pieces of furniture is also expensive, and costs often more than an entire new piece. A desk will not be put into condition for less than $100, and it will cost $40, at the lowest estimate, to make an old bureau presentable. But when the pieces are finished they can stand the test of American steam-heated houses which are ruinous to furniture made in the days of open fire places or stoves. Much of the furniture called Colonial does not date back to open fireplace days.

"Nowadays," says the veteran furniture maker, "everything is called Colonial, but there is only the smallest proportion of the pieces that sell for it that date back further than to 1825 or 1835. Here is an old sideboard that is called Colonial"—it was a tall, square affair, with mahogany doors and claw feet—"but there is nothing Colonial about it. People think that all this carved and claw-footed furniture is Colonial, but that is where they are mistaken. Take those old sofas, with elaborately carved ends and legs that curve in and claw feet, and every woman who has one will tell you that it is a Colonial piece, but it does not date back probably later than 1835 or 1825.

"Here is a goose-neck rocker, the arms carved in the shape of the curved neck and head of a goose. That is a good chair, though they were not all as comfortable, but they were being made when I was an apprentice in 1846.

"It is not only that a piece of furniture is old that should make it valuable. It must be a good piece. But the good old pieces are getting more and more difficult to find. It is impossible almost to find anything in a place anywhere near a railroad, though you may find them occasionally in little towns off the regular lines of travel.

"Still we have an old sideboard here that came from the negro quarter over on Staten Island eleven years ago. That is a genuine old Colonial piece, and it is beautifully inlaid. That was put in order and sold originally to a wealthy man, one who was well known here in New York. He had it for ten years, and then, leaving town, we bought it back from him in as good condition as when he took it. There are a good many stories of interest with these old pieces of furniture. We always try to get them when we can. But it would not do to tell them, for the furniture has gone into very many houses of prominent and wealthy people in the city.

"We had one settee of which we learned the history in some detail. Occasionally these old pieces have been given to servants by their employers, as possibly the old piece in Staten Island may have been. This settee was given by Mrs. Rhinelander many years ago to a seamstress whom she employed. This seamstress was married afterward, and had a daughter, to whom at her death she left her personal property. The daughter, then a woman of about fifty, sold the settee, with a melodion, for $3 to an auctioneer. We bought the settee at auction. The framework was of mahogany and the seat caned. It had experienced many vicissitudes. The framework had been gilded, then painted white, and then brown. The seat had been covered with carpet, and over that some boards had been tacked to make a firm seat. The settee now is a more satisfactory piece of furniture than when it was new, and has gone into one of the handsomest houses in the city.

"We buy old tables frequently to make the tops for large pieces of furniture. People have an idea that old parlor doors of mahogany can be used for furniture, but they are good for nothing for our work. They are filled with grooves and screw holes, mortised, and cut up in too many ways to be useful.

"One hears a great deal of Santo Domingo mahogany, which is supposed to be in all old pieces of furniture. That can only be obtained now in small logs that cannot be used to any advantage. The mahogany that goes into the great run of mahogany furniture nowadays is the Mexican mahogany, and it is nearly as soft as pine. The best mahogany to be found is the Cuban mahogany, from Santiago, which is much heavier and darker. The Santiago mahogany weighs six pounds to the square foot and the Mexican only two and one-half pounds. The latter is easy to work, and for certain purposes very satisfactory. Practically the only purpose for which it cannot be used is for chairs, and it is not heavy enough for those. It is so light in color that it is always stained. The Cuban mahogany, while it is darker, is also slightly stained. People do not live long enough to see it change color from age. The Mexican mahogany never grows dark. We use the Cuban mahogany for the most conspicuous parts of the furniture, where it appears in large plain pieces, as in table tops. For many pieces, bedsteads, for instance, it would be too heavy and could not be moved without difficulty.

"For table tops we simply oil the mahogany. In old times the mahogany was all waxed. There were two ways of doing this—with the hard wax and with the soft. We have some old books giving a description of the different methods. For the hard wax with which table tops were finished, the wax was put on and ironed in with a hot iron, while for other parts of the furniture the wax was dissolved in turpentine and rubbed on with a cloth. There is a lighter colored mahogany on this side of the island of Cuba and there is a Honduras mahogany that is softer than the Mexican and has a coarse grain.

MODERN WORK THE BEST.

"Many reproductions of old furniture are much better than the genuine old pieces. They did not do as good work in the old day as we do now, for they did not have the tools. There is none of the old furniture that will stand our houses with the cellar heat. It will all fall to pieces unless first put in a good up-to-date condition. It is not the work that was done that we admire in the furniture of the old days, but the fine lines. I like a genuine old piece when it is good and has been put in proper condition, but otherwise it is much better to go over on Fourteenth or Twenty-third Street and get good factory made furniture.

"The sides of old bureaus and old desks always warp and split. They were made of a single piece of wood, and they will not stand the changes of temperature. Now we have better t

SPEED IN YACHT'S LINES

WORK IS PROGRESSING FAST

Boat Gives Promise of Developing Many Qualities Not Possessed by the Columbia.

Special to The New York Times.

BRISTOL, Jan. 26.—As the Bristol boat takes shape in being framed out, it is seen more and more plainly that there is no danger but that the America's Cup will be strongly defended this year, and that no matter what speed Shamrock II. may attain she will meet a vessel worthy of her next August.

The outside of the foreboly of the Belmont defender, as presented by the frame shapes of the section, shows marks not only of a fine and powerful fabric in carrying her canvas, but also that of an out-and-out seaworthy craft that should sail with comparative ease in a heavy sea. As recently described by yachtsmen, indications point to the craft making graceful progress in racing, no matter how hard she is driven. From this it is learned that her forward lines are such as to be much easier driven than any of the cup defenders preceding her, regardless of type or size. The placing of the ballast bulb so far forward, and the rather rounded form in the forefunderbody to a few feet beyond the water line, and then the finely drawn out end without too much of a cut away at the forefoot should render the craft a marvel in holding on to windward. This is all the more convincing when a person in touch with such matters after careful scrutiny at various times fails to observe resistance unless it is in the forward end of the lead keel. Her indications of buoyancy forward are asserted to be a study for the yachting experts. With a greater sail spread than has Columbia, the new boat will not "bury" in the waves as she is driven, but rather will have a tendency to tilt upward, showing her specified water line, no matter how rough the sea.

The impression prevails at Bristol, from what is known of the craft, that it will be years before another boat so light and yet so strong, will be built in other shops. The past week was one of general hustle in the south construction shop, as marked by the timbering out of the new craft from the midship section toward both ends. There were some few delays in receiving material for framing, but the time was so well utilized in preparing other parts of the craft that nothing will be lost in the end. Everything is now so well advanced that an early launching will be the programme. The metal work on the new craft is in a well advanced stage. With nearly every frame bent and trued and with a good number of the frames joined to the deck beams and set up, it will be but a brief time before the work of plating will begin on the new boat. Some of the frames were easily obtained, but they were not the ones most needed, so a wait was necessary, until other frame material could be received. Now all the important bulbed angles are in the shop here, making plain sailing.

The half dozen platers have not been idle since the Tobin bronze plates were received, as noted by the stack of punched and trimmed plates in the south construction shed. The floor plates to join at the butts of the frames at the midship section are quite deep and a quarter of an inch in thickness.

From amidships the floor plates taper in depth to both ends, the plates in the latter places being no more than four inches in depth. On top they are flanged an inch in width. The lower skin plates are fitted with tie plates of nickel steel 18 inches in depth amidships and tapering out toward both ends to 8 and 10 inches in depth. These plates are flanged at the bottom, the flange pointing inboard, giving much strength to the line of rivets of the frames into the bilge. The frames and the deck beams are connected with one rivet at each end, aided by the bracing of a nickel steel plate 8 inches in width extending 2 feet along the frame and a like number of feet inboard of the deck beam. Triple rivets are the fastenings at each end of this three-sixteenth-inch plate. Near the berth of the mast the deck beams are strengthened by webbed plates nearly a foot deep riveted to them.

DIMENSIONS OF LAWSON'S BOAT.

BOSTON, Jan. 26.—The dimensions of the Lawson cup defender were made public this afternoon by Designer Crowninshield. The figures show the boat to be somewhat larger and more powerful than the Columbia, and although no data are furnished as to sail area, the increase in wetted surface of 238 square feet over the 1899 defender indicates that the Boston boat will probably carry considerably more canvas. The dimensions furnished to-day are as follows:

Length over all, 140 feet 10½ inches; length on water line, 90 feet; overhang forward, 27 feet 5 inches; overhang aft, 23 feet 5 inches; beam extreme, 23 feet 11½ inches; beam on water line, 23 feet 5 inches; draught, extreme, 20 feet. Freeboard at stemhead, 6 feet 11 inches; freeboard, least, 4 feet; freeboard at stern, 4 feet 8 inches; beam at forward end of water line, 15 feet; beam at after end water line, 18 feet 9 inches; beam at stern, 11 feet 8 inches; centre lateral plane aft, load water line, 51 feet 5 inches. Centre buoyancy aft load water line, 47.25 per cent. Area lateral plane, 772.6 square feet; area, midship section, 117.9 square feet; area load water line plane, 1,771.5 square feet. Wetted surface, 2,913.5 square feet.

PLAN TO LEASE SOUTH FIELD.

Dr. Sayre's Proposition to Provide Athletic Grounds for Columbia.

The topic that most interests Columbia's undergraduates just now is the question of what will be done by the athletic authorities toward securing a suitable athletic field. The matter is being considered by the graduates also. The graduate view of the situation was stated by Dr. R. H. Sayre, President of the American Revolver Association and a graduate of the university, in a letter, in which he wrote as follows:

If football is to stay at Columbia, and all signs point to its being desired by the Trustees, faculty, and graduates, as well as by the students, where is it to stay? We have had to pay $15,000 a year for the rent of grounds, and so have at the beginning of the season to bear a burden which is not put on the shoulders of any other team. We may be told that the university owns grounds at William's Bridge, but they are so far away that it is impossible for a man to train there and at the same time pursue his studies, the very reason why athletics have languished at Columbia during the past ten years.

Educators, at least those who are abreast of the times, have recognized that young men require physical as well as mental training, and that institution which fails to provide both cannot hope to maintain its position in the front rank. While on a visit to Cambridge, I was much impressed by seeing how vastly superior Harvard was to Columbia in this respect. Not five minutes' walk from the recitation rooms and dormitories was a field suitable for 100 men to take healthy exercise. Where can we go to do this at Columbia? Nowhere, unless some one will buy South Field and give it to the university. If there is one thing above all others that will keep Columbia in the lead it is the possession of enough ground in which to grow. This lack of space in which to expand has been our drawback for fifty years and will continue to be so unless we become possessed of South Field.

The effect of this letter has been to cause the general conviction among the students that South Field must become the property of the university. The last seventeen issues of The Spectator, the undergraduate publication, have contained editorials urging upon the university the necessity of adding South Field to Columbia's athletic equipment. The price asked for the field is $2,000,000. This makes the purchase of the property appear impossible at present. It is hoped, however, that it may be leased for a long term or until funds for its purchase can be secured. This plan is approved by many of those interested in Columbia's athletics, and it is probable that action soon will be taken urging the idea on the authorities of the college.

Yale's New Football Manager.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 26.—Charles D. Francis, 1902, of Winchester, Tenn., was to-night chosen President and manager of the Yale Football Association for next year, succeeding R. B. Hixon, 1901. Mr Francis was elected by all the element in the university combine, the factional fight of last year having disappeared. Mr. Francis was assistant business manager last year, and made a successful showing in his office. The Vice President, stated to-night, is Charles Ellicott of Nyack, N. Y., 1902; the Secretary and Assistant Manager is Alexander Fox, 1903, of Warren, Penn. The meeting was largely attended by undergraduates and football men, as it is the most important election of the year.

TROTTING AT LONG BRANCH.

Grand Circuit Meeting and Matinee Racing Planned by Monmouth County Drivers' Club.

All details of the organization of the Gentlemen's Driving and Field Club of Monmouth County, N. J., have been completed, and the association, with an office at the West End Hotel, Long Branch, and headquarters in New York at the Rossmore Hotel, Broadway and Forty-second Street, has announced a promising programme for the coming Summer season. The new club's officers include a number of the amateur reinsmen identified with the New York Road Drivers' Association, and the relations between the two are very close. For the Monmouth County Club these are Dr. H. H. Kane, President; Randolph Guggenheimer, Andrew Freedman, and Walter E. Hildreth, Vice Presidents; P. J. Casey, Secretary and Treasurer, and Andrew Freedman, Dr. H. H. Kane, Thomas Byrnes, J. B. Doerr, George T. Putney, Walter E. Hildreth, and P. J. Casey, Executive Committee.

The rules of the New York Road Drivers' Association will govern the matinée racing of the new club where there is no conflict with the rules of the National Trotting Association. Every effort will be made to promote amateur sport, and, with a view to this, provision has been made for a number of prizes for amateur drivers, chief of which will be trophies for the respective owners of the trotter and the pacer winning the greatest number of races in the season and for the driver who drives the greatest number of winners.

The new club has completed a five years' lease of the Elkwood Park track and grounds at Long Branch and will utilize all the equipment, which includes the trap-shooting grounds, golf course, and arrangements for other sports, with a conveniently arranged clubhouse, grand stands, and other buildings suitable for the driving association's purposes. There are abundant facilities for harness racing, the full mile track giving an excellent training and racing course, while the stabling provides seventy-two loose boxes for horses.

It is proposed by the officers and Executive Committee of the club to give matinée races every Saturday in the Summer, beginning the middle of June or the first of July, such races to be made up partly of amateur events to wagon and partly of professional events, with purses. Later in the season a Grand Circuit meeting, lasting from four to five days, will be held. The officers of the club are so confident of the prospects for high-class harness racing that they have decided practically to announce one $5,000 purse and three $1,000 purses for open races at the Grand Circuit meeting, which will be held about the end of August.

Plans for other sports and recreations include provisions for tennis and handball courts, a croquet lawn, an artificial lake for fly casting, and improvements and additions to the golf links.

Trotters and Pacers.

The Road Drivers' Association of New York City has decided to increase the membership of its Executive Committee to fifty and nominations will be made at the next meeting. The object of this is to bring a number of the more prominent road drivers of this city in closer contact with the work of the organization.

Two new horses have been added to the Speedway brigade that promise to make things very lively in the green class this Spring. They were purchased in Windsor, Vt., Wednesday by F. S. Fisher for W. J. Davis, a well-known light harness horseman of this city, and arrived in town yesterday. Mr. Fisher says that if they do as well on the Speedway as they did in the roads about Windsor they will make some of the Speedway favorites step lively.

There is great need of an infield or paddock at some point along the Speedway where horses can be blanketed and left standing for an hour or so. There are many who drive to the Speedway simply for the purpose of watching the brushes, and who would, if a proper place was afforded, stable their horses and join the sidewalk brigade about the finish post. This would make more room for the fast steppers, and many accidents would be avoided.

Fred Gerken has been repeatedly quoted as anxious to back The Abbot (2:03¾) against Creaceus (2:04) for a large sum of money. Had Mr. Gerken put in an appearance at the Rossmore Wednesday the opportunity would have been provided, as there was a gentleman present for the purpose of matching the exploits of the two horses. There are abundant facilities for harness racing, the full mile track giving an excellent training and racing course, while the stabling provides seventy-two loose boxes for horses.

A call has been issued for a special meeting of the Road Drivers' Association of New York to be held at the Rossmore Hotel on Saturday evening, Feb. 2. At this meeting there will come up for discussion Clause 5, Article III., of the by-laws concerning the amount of annual dues: Clause 1, Article IV., increase of officers by the addition of three honorary Vice Presidents and the enlarging of the Executive Committee from fifteen to fifty members. Article VI., the question of paying the Secretary a salary. Other matters for discussion will be the parade and the proposed open air horse show.

SWORDSMAN'S OPEN CHALLENGE.

Fencing Master Senac Wants a Match for the Championship.

An open challenge to all aspirants to the fencing championship of the United States has been issued by Louis Senac, the fencing master, and with it a proposition for a five-hundred-dollar match in public for the title.

Senac, who has been an instructor in swordsmanship in New York for some years, asserts that he has been impelled to the action he has taken by the belief that, while fencing has been growing steadily in popularity in the past few years, a mistake has been made in surrounding the exercise and contests for prizes with too much privacy. He argues that it would be better for all concerned and for swordsmanship itself if the competitions had more publicity, as he believes the public then might become interested generally in sword play, while the fencers themselves would have their ambition stimulated and would acquire greater skill.

STANDING OF HOCKEY CLUBS.

St. Nicholas Skating Club Holds First Position in the League Table.

Hockey last week was remarkable for the splendid game on Thursday night between the sevens of the New York Athletic Club and the Crescent Athletic Club. There was general surprise that the wearers of the Mercury foot managed to defeat the Brooklynites, for last year the Crescents twice beat the local seven and maintained an uninterrupted series of ten victories.

It is curious to note that the St. Nicholas Skating Club's seven, recently defeated by Princeton, should lead the other sevens. This is due to the fact that St. Nicholas has finished only one game, which it won, and every other team has at least one defeat in its record. As soon as St. Nicholas begins to play off the contested and tie games, however, the Crescent and New York Athletic Club players will likely forge to the front.

The Hockey Club of New York has sustained a loss in "Benny" Phillips, Captain and forward, who has given up playing the game on account of heart trouble. He has gone to Florida. Standing of the teams:

	Won.	Lost.	Tied.
St. Nicholas Skating Club	1	0	2
Crescent Athletic Club	3	1	0
New York Athletic Club	2	1	0
Brooklyn Skating Club	2	1	1
Hockey Club of New York	1	2	1
Quaker City Hockey Club	0	4	0

THE GERMAN CHARITY BALL.

It Will Take Place at the Waldorf-Astoria on Jan. 31.

The German Charity Ball will take place this year at the Waldorf-Astoria on Jan. 31. As on previous occasions, it will be given under the auspices of the Bachelor Circle, (German Liederkranz,) Jung Arion, (Arion,) and Beethoven Bachelors, (Beethoven Maennerchor.)

The success of the past eleven balls has been so great that nearly $80,000 have been distributed among the deserving German societies. The societies that will receive the results of this year's ball will be the German Hospital and Dispensary, German Society, German Poliklinik, Isabella Heimath, Wartburg Orphan Farm School, St. Mark's Hospital, St. Francis's Hospital, and the German Ladies' Society for the Support of Needy Widows and Orphans.

The ball will be opened by Mrs. Edward Burghard and Julius Rohe. The dance music will be furnished by Mr. Lander, and the promenade will be supplied by Prof. Frank of the Twelfth Regiment Band. Max Jantzen will act as floor manager.

The following is a list of some of the box holders for the German Charity Ball:

R. F. Amend, Louis Bossert, E. Benneche, H. W. Boetger, E. L. Boas, E. M. Burghard, George C. Boldt, W. Barthmann, Beethoven Bachelors, George H. Chatillon, German Hospital, German Poliklinik, Peter Doelger, Fred De Bary & Co., Franz Leinhos, Joseph Liebmann, Charles Liebmann, C. H. Liebert, Rudolph J. Miller, C. L. Peters, Julius Rohe, Jacob Ruppert, Jacob Siegel, H. B. Scharmann, St. Mark's Hospital, Herman Sielaken, and C. A. Stadler.

CURLERS LOVE THEIR GAME

Planning for the International Match at Montreal.

NEW YORK RINK TO COMPETE

Secretary Foulis Gives Some Interesting Ideas About the Sport—Old Men Who Play Well.

Devotees of the old Scotch game of curling are justly disgusted with the weather which the present Winter seems disposed to give them. Only two good days for competition have been vouchsafed them this season, and the frequent postponements of interesting matches have made the veteran players think some hard things, even if they have not cared to frame their uncomfortable thoughts in words.

The Grand National Curling Club of America, which comprises nearly twenty-five clubs in the eastern district of this country, arranged an elaborate series of contests early in the season, but only two of those games have been played. With the touch of cold weather last week the hardy old Scotch curling clans took heart, fondly imagining a long period of good ice at Van Cortlandt Lake, where all the big games in the Metropolitan circuit are now played. So enthusiastic were these sportsmen that notwithstanding the bitterly cold weather on Saturday, a week ago yesterday, nearly one hundred enthusiasts turned out at Van Cortlandt,

WHAT POWER CAN THE CONGRESS GIVE THE PRESIDENT?

The message of the President on the condition of the Philippines, with the reports of the Secretary of War and the Civil Commission, presents a very plain and an immensely important problem to Congress. This is succinctly stated by Secretary ROOT:

I wish to call attention to some conditions existing in the Philippine Islands which indicate that the development of that country along the lines of peaceful industrial progress now requires the exercise of powers of civil government not vested in this department, or in you, as Military Commander, but requiring a grant of authority from the Congress.

Of this the President says:

I earnestly recommend legislation under which the government of the islands may have authority to assist in their peaceful industrial development in the directions indicated by the Secretary of War.

The only general legislation as to the Philippines now before Congress is the bill introduced by Senator SPOONER in the last session, and which has—not to the credit of the Senate—been displaced since the first day of the session by the Hanna Ship Subsidy bill. The Spooner bill delegates to the President and his appointees the entire legislative and judicial power so far as necessary to govern the islands, and, if passed, is to go into effect when the insurrection shall be completely suppressed. Its object plainly is to provide some adequate authority for the administration of the affairs of the islands when the authority growing out of a state of war and insurrection shall have lapsed with the suppression of the insurrection. The proposition of the Secretary of War is, not to await the complete suppression of the insurrection, but to extend the authority of the President for peaceful legislation gradually when and where it becomes, in his judgment, practicable to introduce civil government. It is a sagacious and efficient plan. The question will, however, be immediately raised: Can the Congress delegate to the President the powers of legislation reposed in the Congress itself by the Constitution, and intrusted to it by the votes of the people?

This question is examined in the most searching manner in the current number of The Columbia Law Review by EDWARD B. WHITNEY, Assistant Attorney General under Mr. CLEVELAND. His general conclusion is that in theory such delegation has been condemned by the courts and the leading writers, but that in practice the Supreme Court has not applied to any case actually before the court the principle that legislative authority cannot be delegated. Nor does Mr. WHITNEY find any distinct legislative precedents for the Spooner bill, and he is of the opinion that if the constitutionality of the bill should come before the court it would be treated as an original question. There are, however, cases in which the court has approved acts of Congress authorizing the Executive to "use that kind of discretion which ordinarily is the basis of legislative action." Mr. WHITNEY makes the following summary statement, which appears to us conclusive:

It seems to me that the courts, while repeating indeed the old maxim that legislative power cannot be delegated, have very nearly overthrown it, and have done so because it was not based on sound reasoning, and has always been impracticable in application. The maxim is, in fact, a restriction upon legislative power. If Congress believes that the practical limitations upon its own time and upon its own means of information are such that all legislation upon one subject or upon all subjects in the Philippine Islands could be better provided by the President through resident Commissioners or otherwise than by itself, why should Congress not have the power to make such an arrangement? If it has not the power to delegate a part of its functions when such a delegation is in accordance with public interest, and in accordance with its own wishes, then it seems to me that there is a most serious defect in its authority.

If, as we believe will come about, the Congress finds it necessary to intrust to the President and his appointees a large degree of legislative authority, we are clearly of the opinion that it should define plainly the principles by which he should be guided and the end that he shall seek. The principle is that all power must be used solely for the advancement of the just interests of the inhabitants of the islands, and the end to be sought is the establishment, as fast and as far as possible, of self-government in the islands. As a corollary to this proposition, it is proper that the Congress should reserve the usual requirement of the consent of the Senate in the chief appointments through which the power delegated to the Executive would be exercised, and it would always have the right to restrict, regulate, or withdraw any authority delegated. The main point is that it should be made manifest to all concerned, and especially to the people of the islands, that the goal toward which all administration in the islands shall be directed is the establishment of the same kind and degree of freedom for the people there as exists for the people here. That is the only goal we have a right to seek. If we do not seek it honorably and practically, there is no limit to the confusion, disaster, and disgrace to which we shall be exposed.

STREET CARS IN NEW YORK.

In the year that ended with last June the Metropolitan Street Railway Company ran 9,812,000 horse-car miles in New York City. This was but 800,000 miles less than the total service of the cable cars and it was 40 per cent. of the total service of the electric cars. This covered the working of the Metropolitan system alone and did not take in the lines of the Third Avenue system, now owned and worked by the Metropolitan. Perhaps few citizens of New York realize the large amount of work still done in this town by horse cars. The service on the great avenues of travel is by electric and cable power, and, being on these great avenues, it is visible to all. But the figures show that the inconspicuous horse cars are still serving, in their way, a great number of our people. It is not necessary to say that they are slow, dirty, and even squalid, compared with the electric and cable cars. Indeed, it is probably quite within bounds to say that the best of the service in New York is the best street car service in the world, all elements considered.

The horse cars are costly, too. If the 9,812,000 horse-car miles had been run at the cost per car mile of the electric-car work in the same year, the company would have saved $568,000, or 4 per cent. on $14,200,000. Obviously the pressure to change from horse to power traction is considerable, and the advantages of a change are thoroughly understood by the acute gentlemen who control the street-car system of the town.

The serious obstacle in the way of a change is its cost. The overhead trolley is out of the question, and the underground construction is so expensive that many of the minor lines would not earn interest after maintenance and working are provided for. The cost of the underground work is heavily increased by every crossing of tracks and by every turn-out. Furthermore, the important lines along the river fronts lie so low that the conduits would occasionally be flooded.

One need not be an engineer or an expert in transportation to see that the situation in New York presents an inviting opportunity to the man who can bring forward a motor car carrying its own power, and able to go anywhere that rails are laid, without disturbing the ground beneath the pavement or occupying space overhead. Such cars, of two different kinds, are now running in regular service on Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth Streets and on Thirty-fourth Street.

This is not the time and place to compare their performance, for important and opposing commercial interests are involved; but several hundred thousand citizens of New York and of its suburbs are hoping that one of these systems, at least, will speedily prove itself efficient, trustworthy, and altogether acceptable to the company and the public.

CONSTITUTIONAL MONARCHY.

We have already had occasion to refer to some amazing views of the English Constitution entertained and expressed by some of our esteemed contemporaries here in New York, and by at least one of our esteemed contemporaries in London. The fact is, that unless one has taken the trouble to make himself historically clear about the British monarchy, it is idle and misleading to guess about it. It is matter for information, not for conjecture. And those who guess at it are almost as likely to go wrong in underestimating the power of the British crown as in overestimating it. The theory that the King of England is able to dismiss one Prime Minister because he does not like him, and to put in another because he likes him, to which some of our esteemed yellow contemporaries have delivered themselves, is not so very much more absurd than the theory that his only function, as CARLYLE said of the British aristocracy, is to "keep quiet and eat his victuals."

It would be hard to expound the functions of the titular ruler of Great Britain without simply paraphrasing BAGEHOT'S chapters on "The Monarchy" in his book on the "English Constitution." These chapters, from which we have already quoted, do not leave much to be said about the theory or the "rationale" of the British monarchy. Rather they combine the theory and the rationale in a wonderfully illuminating way, as was the wont of their author, and, as was also his wont, they abound in illustrations drawn from practice. But, after all, these were recorded and literary examples. It is most edifying to find them confirmed by the testimony of actual politicians and administrators, whose business it is to know exactly how the literary theory of the British Constitution and of the British Government works out in practice.

We have just had that kind of confirmation, and it is remarkable how strong a confirmation it is. When King EDWARD the other day made his speech to the Privy Council, a speech which evidently was not perfunctory, but had in it the note of personal perception as well as of personal emotion, he said: "I am fully determined to be a constitutional sovereign in the strictest sense of the words." Very likely this remark puzzled a great many readers on both sides of the ocean. Some may have thought it meaningless, although that supposition was perfectly incompatible with the evident sincerity of the speech. It was not meaningless. Nor is it necessary to lay invidious emphasis either upon the adjective or the substantive of the phrase he employed. He meant to be "constitutional," but equally he meant to be the "sovereign."

Lord SALISBURY'S remarks in the House of Lords upon the public services of the Queen furnish a most instructive commentary upon the declaration of her successor. The speaker was the most influential and experienced of her servants in Parliament. He had been several times her Prime Minister. He testified avowedly as an expert: "We who have had the opportunity of seeing close the working of her character in the discharge of our duty to her":

She always maintained and practiced a rigorous supervision over public affairs, giving her Ministers the privilege of her advice, and warning them of dangers, if she saw dangers ahead. She left on my mind that it was always dangerous to take any step of any great importance of the wisdom of which she was not thoroughly convinced. Without going into details, I may say with confidence that no Minister, during her long reign, ever disregarded her advice, or pressed her to disregard it, without always feeling that he had incurred a dangerous responsibility and frequently running into danger. * * * She spared no effort; I might also say that she shrank from no sacrifice, to make the task of conducting this difficult Government easier to her advisers than it might otherwise have been.

This is, of course, a eulogy of the Queen. But it is also a showing that a constitutional sovereign is by no means necessarily a figurehead, but that there is an important career open to him if he is able and disposed to fill it, without at all seeking to enlarge the constitutional bounds of his authority. In fact, Lord SALISBURY'S speech reads almost like an annotation of BAGEHOT by a statesman of long practical experience, and a confirmation of the literary theorist and outside observer. Quite apart from the break in the succession to the English throne, the doctrine of Ministerial power is a corollary of the doctrine of Ministerial responsibility, and this in turn is a corollary from the doctrine of royal irresponsibility, which is as strongly laid down by the Tory BLACKSTONE as by any later writer. It comes to the same thing as BAGEHOT'S praise of the Ministerial as opposed to the Presidential form of representative government. And, as we have suggested, Lord SALISBURY'S eulogy of the Queen sheds new and striking light upon BAGEHOT'S exposition, of which the following passage comes as near as any to being a summing up:

A sagacious and original constitutional monarch might go to his grave in peace if any man could. He would know that his best laws were in harmony with his age; that they suited the people who were to work them, the people who were to be benefited by them. And he would have passed a happy life. He would have passed a life in which he could always get his arguments heard, in which he could always make those who had the responsibility of action think before they acted; in which he could know that the schemes he set at work in the world were not the casual accidents of an individual idiosyncrasy, which are mostly much wrong, but the likeliest of all things to be right—the ideas of one very intelligent man at last accepted and acted on by the ordinary intelligent many.

Such a constitutional sovereign was Queen VICTORIA, according to the most competent of living witnesses. It is true that such a phenomenon is not commonly to be looked for. But it is also true that a constitutional sovereign need not be a nullity unless he is one, or prefers to be one—that the "King business," as some humorists call it, may be a very useful trade.

REFORMING WILD CUBS.

The death at the Central Park Zoo of the infant grizzly bear is greatly to be regretted. The infant grizzly was removed from its mother's care, and its nourishment and education were undertaken by an amiable fox terrier with a temperament as antithetical to the ursunine as could well be imagined. It is, we think, an accepted fact that the adult grizzly cannot be tamed, and that his naturally surly and intractable disposition is not amenable to good influences of any kind. It might have been different with a cub which had never known the demoralizing exigencies of winning its own living in the only way open to a grizzly in the state of nature. It was innocent of the lust of conquest, and had never known what it meant to satisfy its appetite with the warm blood and quivering flesh of a newly killed victim. The evil lessons of a struggle for existence under adverse conditions it would never have learned. Whether it was a hereditary degenerate, with a congenital incapacity to assimilate an education tending toward moral development, could not be determined until it was old enough to contemplate its foster mother, the amiable fox terrier, in the light of food more desirable than that served in the daily meat ration at the Zoo, or it felt called upon to resent discipline of the kind adapted to the correction of an infant terrier. So far as can be learned by naturalists, the grizzly has never had a friend not of his own immediate family—and not many of those. In temperament he reminds one of his Honor Mayor VAN WYCK, but there the resemblance ends. The grizzly has the reputation of being wholly devoid of kindly and generous impulses, but he has always been brave. He hunts alone, disdaining assistance, and refusing to share the trophies of the chase. There is nothing of the wolf or coyote about him. He is generally at home to callers, is afraid of nobody, never shirks a challenge or excuses an affront, is always ready to engage in mortal combat, and never leaves the field alive with discredit. Many men who helped to make history and, in their time, did great things for humanity in reducing barbarism to an orderly system of government and social organization, had much the same characteristics. Very dangerous and generally disagreeable, they fitted their environment, were nation builders, and left descendants entirely conformable to changed and bettered conditions.

There was an element of human interest in the Zoo experiment which warrants regret at its untimely and unsatisfactory ending. If the cub of the grizzly could be tamed to make it a well-behaved and right-minded bear, with no ungovernable carnal appetites and no homicidal impulses toward its keepers, it might very well encourage the hope that the progeny of the Tammany tiger could be educated to the standards of good citizenship. Unfortunately, the tiger as we know him locally has tastes and appetites which are destructive of public morals and private honor. He fattens on the unspeakable carrion of protected vice, and instead of being a brave and open enemy of whatever is worthy and of good repute, he skulks in the jungle and prowls by night, willing to take anything that comes his way, however unclean. To reform him is impossible; to cage or kill him is the duty, and should be the pleasure, of every good citizen. But this will profit little if the cubs of his populous lair cannot be made amenable to good influences and diverted from the ways in which the tendencies of heredity would naturally lead them. Our tiger once had a useful function. Probably he was needed to organize, restrain, and educate the hordes of illiterate voters brought here by an unrestricted immigration and congested at this port. Even in this, however, he has outlived his usefulness. To perforate his striped hide with ballots is only half the problem. The tiger's cubs are an anxious responsibility, and one which will occupy the attention of good citizens until the ravening instincts of their blood and breeding are modified, or, better still, eradicated. If the tiger's lair can be broken up the succeeding task will probably be much simpler and easier of accomplishment than it now appears.

The Legislature of Missouri is to have for its consideration and, it is hoped, favorable action, a bill appropriating a sufficient sum, $5,000 or more, to erect a monument over the grave of the late United States Senator Thomas H. Benton, "Old Bullion," in Bellefontaine County, that State. There is now only a small, plain marble slab on the grave, and it bears only the inscription of his name, Thomas H. Benton.

There are now sixteen prisoners in solitary confinement in the Massachusetts State Prison, at Charlestown, the most dangerous of the lot being Jesse Pomeroy, "the boy murderer." He is constantly laying plans to escape and keeps the guards ever on the alert to thwart them. He once pulled down the ventilator over his cell door and made a saw of a portion of the material. Then the place was walled up and fresh air introduced into his cell in other ways. He has now been imprisoned on a life sentence twenty-seven years.

NON-ATTENDANCE AT CHURCH.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have been greatly interested in the debate going on in your columns as to why more people do not go to church, especially in the letters of "Workingman" and Mr. Thomas Conyngton. Mr. Conyngton says the best evidence of the attitude of the Church is to be found in the books written on social problems and the pages of the representative periodicals. I dispute that, and claim that the best evidence of the attitude of the Church is to be found in the daily life and practice of her representatives, and that daily life and practice is not generally in accordance with the spirit of the Church Founder.

"Workingman" said so also, and said it most emphatically, but Mr. Conyngton, with great adroitness, dodged the issue. He knows "Workingman" is right. He also knows that the crying scandals of the Church to which "Workingman" has pointed with honest scorn exist, and Mr. Conyngton makes a poor showing when "Workingman" forces him to take refuge behind such subterfuges as "probably are," "may be," and "all these may be." What does Mr. Conyngton think of Tuesday's dispatch in THE TIMES headed "Workingmen and the Church"? It contains a startling confirmation of "Workingman's" claims, couched almost in the same words, and comes from the far-distant city of St. Louis. In that dispatch the Rev. Charles Stelzle gives the substance of 100 letters sent to him by labor leaders in answer to the question, "What is the chief fault that workingmen find with the Church?" They all attacked that institution. Unlike Mr. Conyngton and the writer of the two-page editorial attack on "Workingman" in the columns of The Independent, the St. Louis clergyman admits the truth of the charges. Let me give the exact words of this part of the dispatch:

He says that many of the complaints, he feels, are well founded. Nearly every labor leader who has replied has argued that the Church is not for the poor man; that he is not made welcome within its walls; that, in fact, it is a rich man's club. They have written him that many who go to church on Sundays are employers who squeeze their men six days in the week, and they almost all go on to say that the Church is a hypocrisy.

All the replies distinguish between the Church and the religion of Jesus Christ. The majority profess a reverence for the Saviour, though ranging in their estimate of Him from humanitarianism to theophany. But they write that the religion taught by the Apostles is not to be found to-day in any religious organization, and they had rather read their Bibles, when so inclined, for themselves.

When "Workingman" calls attention to the spectacle of men whose calling is a spiritual one prostituting their sacred office to partisan political purposes, instead of severely condemning those reverend gentlemen as they richly deserved, Mr. Conyngton calls their speeches "rather pervid partisan oratory," and says that the outrageous practices of the missionaries in China, about which the Rev. Dr. Ellenwood boasted in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, are "open to criticism." Open to criticism! They call for the righteous indignation and the virtuous scorn of every one who pretends to a sense of fair dealing, how much more so when the perpetrators of the outrages are alleged missionaries of good tidings and great joy? One may well ask, in the words of the admirable letter of Senex in the issue of Jan. 13, "Whose missionaries are they?"

THE POSTAL TUBE SERVICE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You urge Congress to replace the appropriation for the pneumatic postal service and quote the favorable report of the commission which investigated the subject. You should have stated, however, that while the commission approved of postal tubes in cities and advocated their further extended use, they expressly refrained from indorsing the company that is giving the present service in New York, whose lobbying methods have made them so obnoxious to Mr. Loud, the Chairman, and the other members of the Postal Committee of the House of Representatives. You quote the approval of the "Merchants' Association," as if that body were the Chamber of Commerce, while the Secretary takes upon himself to send messages to Congress without calling the association together.

Certainly, in these days of progress, a means of expediting the mails is not to be thrown aside, but it should be after investigation and competition, and not by legislation so special in its nature that only one company is allowed to receive the appropriation.

Mr. Loud says that this company has no assets except its contract with the Government. It pays nothing for its valuable New York franchise, because it is a "post road," and its lobbying was so successful that it even made the Government pay for its experimental lines.

Let competition be open. Let tubes be laid in the cable road conduits and in the new tunnels, and let the Government pay on a basis of the cost of the service, and not on a basis of paying dividends on the stock of a company that has so much "pull."

THE ROYAL PROCLAMATION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Multum in Parvo.

"God, save King Edward VII."

Less than twenty years ago the area of the three kingdoms was given, including the islands, as 120,892 square miles. Of this area 666 privileged persons owned 30,7— square miles, or nearly 25½ per cent. of the entire kingdom!

By a proclamation of Jan. 25, 1901, I read as follows: "Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God to call to His mercy our late Sovereign Lady, Queen Victoria," &c., which may or may not have been written by the "Lord's Spiritual," who may be presumed, with all reverence be it spoken, to know somewhat of the pleasure of the Infinite, seeing that their office and profession is in its aim spiritual. However, it would seem to one, a common dissenter, that language after this order would have been more truthful, if not more apropos to the occasion: Whereas, it has pleased—or otherwise—Death, the common enemy and destroyer of the human race, to summon to his kingdom of silence, Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, in the like manner and form as he summons all other his liege subjects, without let or hindrance, it, therefore, behooves us at once to proceed with all our ancient customs, zeal, and ceremonies to appoint her most august successor to the throne, to wit: Albert Edward, her son, our King, Edward VII. God save the King! God save the feudal Barons! God save the Bishops, arch and not arch! But as to who saves the people? God is not once invoked! The people, it would seem, must save themselves, or, as perchance is fit, utterly perish. The King counts, the peers count, the Commons count, the Lords spiritual count, and why should they not, seeing that out of the 666 above named, 366 of their number are credited with having 5,070 church livings to bestow as vicarial gifts to 5,070 clergymen? Oyez! Oyez! Oyez! "As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen." For lack of something to say, original and apposite, I will parody Shenstone, and conclude:

"Let the gull'd fools the toils of life pursue,
Where bleed the many to enrich the few."

THE NEGRO IN THE SOUTH.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The remarks of Representative Otey of Virginia in the lower house of Congress during the passage of the bill to reapportion the representation to the same and his wild harangue against the "Olmstead resolution" prompt me to answer him. Every one knows that if Mr. Olmstead's resolution had become law it would not have increased the political standing of the negro in the South or elevated him to a more favorable position to dominate his white constituents than that which exists at the present time in the several States which have passed laws for his disfranchisement.

I am willing to admit that the remarks of Mr. Otey, though false, are shrewd ones, as they have a tendency to mislead those who do not take the trouble to investigate this great issue for themselves. It is not negro domination that Mr. Otey and his colleagues in the South fear; it is the loss of political prestige and the power to dictate legislation, as has been their custom in the past, which would occur if their representation was reduced to an honest basis, in accordance with the legal number of votes cast and honestly counted.

When the Democrats were in the majority in the House and Senate, the Southern Representatives of that party dictated and controlled all legislation. Northern Democrats, for the sake of loyalty to their party, have fallen in line, and, in some instances, made to support legislation which was sectional and unpopular. The party's advocacy of "sixteen to one," the initiative and referendum, direct legislation, and the curtailment of the powers of the Supreme Court, preventing that body from passing upon the constitutionality of any laws passed, &c., is a fair sample of legislation the people of the United States would have had thrust upon them if the Democratic Party had been placed in power, dictated wholly and solely by the Southern members of that party.

Through fear of losing political prestige and power, Mr. Otey et al., present the ancient bugaboo with greater vehemence, and make the negro the paramount cause to fight against a reduction in Southern representation, knowing that the people of this country would sympathize sooner with such a plea than if the real cause was truthfully known. The "poor negro" has been accused of all crimes commitable by man or beast, and suffered the penalty by being lynched by different methods, such as hanging from tree limbs, shot, burned at the stake, and other barbarous means of punishment indulged in as a pastime by our Southern civilizers. And now we must still further run the gantlet to prevent a reduction in Southern representation. Is it not enough to make one cry out, "O Lord, how long before the people of this country will awake to a true realization of the facts and accord us a portion of the justice that is our due?"

It has been said that the political training of the negro has been the chief cause of the dissatisfaction manifested against him. His close adherence to one political party and his continually voting against the so-called interests of the South, &c., have made him "persona non grata" to the same. Now, we are willing to admit we have our faults, and some very serious ones, but does the disease merit the remedy administered? I claim not, especially when the disease has been forced upon us by those who have always tried to take away the liberties given us by the Constitution. It has been a very long time since the negro stood in fear of the Democratic Party, except that portion which comes from the South, and in some instances would espouse the cause of that party when portions of their State or National platforms have seemed beneficial to the masses. We have become thinkers, and have the interest of our country at heart, and would divide on the different political issues along with other citizens of our country if we did not fear the legislation emanating from the Southern members of that party. Past experience forces us to remain in the Republican Party, especially when we recognize the fact that no Republican State or National legislators or Governors have advocated disfranchisement of the negro or passed laws providing a separate, or "Jim Crow," car for his accommodation.

If the people of this country would have us change our politics, remove the cause that forces these conditions upon us by reducing the representation from the South. Then if the Democratic Party should be placed in power we will have nothing to fear, as legislation will be dictated and controlled by the Northern and Western members of that party. From past observations Northern Democrats' ideas are above passing laws against a certain class of our citizens or for the benefit of any special section of our country. The same can be said of free trade, free silver, income tax, and other legislation that Northern Democracy has learned not to advocate, because it would not be beneficial to the whole country. The past peaceful record of the negro, his ability to adapt himself to all conditions without a serious opposition or murmur, is unprecedented in the history of man. The historians still have to record that ten or more negroes have banded themselves together for the purpose of taking revenge on any one for the many wrongs imposed upon him. On this record alone, if there was no other, we are willing to submit our cause to the fair-minded people of this country, believing that when the real issue is truthfully known they will refuse to be a party to the wrongs committed against us and against the people of our country by that portion of the Democratic Party which hails from the South.

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of the 22d inst. an article headed "Rural Free Mail Delivery" and signed C. E. S. deserves a little airing.

The writer of this article I can see sitting in a high revolving chair in a warm, comfortable office, where his mail is brought to him by Government employes at least a half dozen times during the day, fretting over and ridiculing the rural idiots, who have just a faint wish to share the convenience which he enjoys to such a great extent every week day of the year. With presumptuous overbearance he comments on the mental and social status of the benighted toiler of the soil. I cannot help but scent the fume of cigarettes, which befog sound judgment; his observations can only emanate from that class, who in Summer time run through the country on their wheels in fantastic dress and manner with the never-wanting cigarette in evidence—aimlessly killing time.

No wonder such human species consider the idiot along the roadside a degraded being who, by hard work, forces from the bare soil the maintenance of life for himself and his fellow-men. This nature's nobleman cares little for such shallow, heartless criticism, but he wants his share of privileges, to which he is entitled and which are begrudged to him for fear of the individual extra expense of 2 cents for a tax stamp. Therein lies the motive of C. E. S.'s long-winded article.

He mentions early efforts in Canada in connection with this subject, but is probably not aware that the rural free mail delivery in most of the countries in Europe has been an established fact over fifty years. In our progressive country the old colonial service is practically still in vogue.

The hardships, especially in Winter time, endured by those who have to travel miles for their mail is not known to those in their cozy offices in the cities. This could be minimized by employing one person, properly equipped for the purpose. The extra outlay would be balanced by saving of time, which in the busy season is quite an important factor with the farming community all over the country. C. E. S. may be assured that the average farmer has no need to replenish his stock of knowledge in country stores. The battle for life exercises his brains sufficiently to keep him from the lunatic asylum. C. E. S.'s statements to the contrary I declare false.

In answer to his hallucinations regarding expectant trolleys and public buildings at Government expense, I give an illustration to show to what extent Uncle Sam has showered his bounties on the rural districts. In my immediate vicinity we have two United States mail routes, which carry the mail from the railroad to the Post Office. One contractor receives for a round trip of fifteen miles less than 50 cents per day. The other drives nine miles for about 33 cents daily. C. E. S., will this statement allay your nightmares?

Responsibility for Unclean Streets.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is evident, even to the most casual observer, that the streets of New York are in a very disgraceful and filthy condition. The late Col. Waring showed us that it was possible to keep the streets of our great city clean; he also showed us that it was possible to keep trucks from being stabled in the streets. His successors have done neither. Mr. MacCartney, at least, made a pretense of keeping Fifth Avenue and the better class of residential streets clean, but the present holder of the office does not even try to do that.

On the blocks between Tenth and Eleventh Avenues and between Eleventh Avenue and the river, where there is a dense population, and where Col. Waring had from ten to twelve men at work on each block, Mr. McCartney and his successor have had none. This condition of affairs also prevails on the lower east side.

It is needless to say that this accumulated filth and dust of the streets is especially on those paved with asphalt and in thickly populated districts, a breeder of disease. A large number of cases of grip in the recent epidemic, and many cases of phthisis and of diseases of the eye, can without doubt be traced to this cause.

The streets of New York are dirtier at the present time than those of any other city of the civilized world. It is not so in Boston, in Philadelphia, or in Washington. It is not so in the great European centres—London, Berlin, and Paris. Why is it so here? Because Tammany Hall puts ignorant and incompetent men into office. Let us hope that Tammany will be ousted at the next election, and that a man who has had the training of a civil and sanitary engineer be chosen for the important office of Commissioner of Street Cleaning.

Commends an Immigration Bill.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am very glad to have read in your Sunday edition of the 13th inst. that the Knights of Labor have prepared a bill to be brought before Congress to amend the immigration law. It is a very important matter. Immigrants have arrived here this year to the number of nearly half a million. Most of these people are of a very poor class, having little or no money, and they all, or nearly all, remain in the large cities. That is not the place for them, as the large cities are overpopulated with that class at the present time.

The proposed bill is wisely worded, as it provides that any immigrant arriving without the certificate of our foreign Consul shall be deported. It also gives authority to the Commissioner General of Immigration to take charge of all aliens entitled to admission, and to distribute them to those parts of the country where there is a demand for their labor, and not allow them to remain in the large cities.

He Favors John D. Crimmins.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I notice a statement in this morning's TIMES that "Senator Thomas C. Platt, who arrived from Washington last night, regards with much favor the proposition to make John D. Crimmins the anti-Tammany nominee for Mayor."

If this statement is correct, it is certainly a very significant and hopeful sign that the leader of the Republican machine recognizes the force of the reform movement which is under way in this city.

Mr. Coler has been and is generally considered the "logical candidate" of those who are opposed to Tammany Hall. If Mr. Platt and his machine will not accept Mr. Coler, but will honestly support the candidacy of Mr. Crimmins, the friends of municipal reform in this city will, I believe, be perfectly satisfied.

I know nothing of Mr. Crimmins's views in this matter, or whether he would accept the nomination. Doubtless he could do so only at great personal sacrifice. But he certainly would be as strong an anti-Tammany candidate as could be selected. Possessing the qualifications most essential to the office, unquestioned integrity, undoubted ability, and ripe experience, he would make a model Mayor. All things considered, I do not think a stronger or better man could be named than John D. Crimmins.

Bryan as a Biblical Scholar.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your able editorial, "Mr. Bryan and The Commoner," you are commending Mr. Bryan's intention of taking a trip around the world in order "to devote himself particularly to the study of colonial dependencies and imperialism." I would suggest that he would better remain in Nebraska and begin to study the Bible, for he seems to be a very poor biblical scholar. In his announcement of The Commoner, as quoted in yesterday's issue of THE TIMES, Mr. Bryan attributes the sentence, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," to Christ, while, in fact, the author of it is Moses. (Leviticus, xix., 18.)

How about getting Oom Paul, who is presently out of a job, to instruct his good friend, Mr. Bryan, in the mysteries of the Holy Scriptures, colonial dependencies, and imperialism!

Metropolitan's New Plan.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Up to the present day the Metropolitan Street Railway Company had its cars on the Tenth Avenue line run directly up the Boulevard to Harlem. But now they have a new plan whereby persons who use this line are compelled to get out at Tenth Avenue and Seventy-first Street and transfer to another car if they desire to go north of this point. These cars are so crowded that passengers have all they can do to hang on to the straps, let alone get a seat. Will you use your influence with the railroad company and get them if possible to run a Tenth Avenue car through to Harlem, say every second car, north and south on the Boulevard via Tenth Avenue to Forty-second Street? By so doing you will oblige a good many who live north of Seventy-first Street and are compelled to use the Tenth Avenue branch.

Sun Spots and Winter Cold.

Letter to the Editor of The London Standard.

Sir: There are some simple rules about Winter cold which it seems desirable to draw attention to as being possibly of some practical use. It is known that the spotted surface of the sun waxes and wanes in a cycle of about eleven years. The time of growth of the spots is usually less than that of decline, (say four years to seven.) Now, our Winter cold shows a striking contrast on either side of the maximum. Measuring our Winters (at Greenwich) by the number of frost days from September to May we find this state of things in the last sixty years:

1. The group of four Winters after a minimum sun-spot year always has an excess of frost days, (over the average number in four Winters.)

2. The group of three Winters after a maximum always has a deficiency.

3. At least two out of the three Winters after a maximum are always mild.

These three rules are without exception so far, and we may add the following:

4. At least two out of three Winters after a minimum are usually severe, (four cases out of five.)

While these facts may not be adequate to warrant confident affirmation of sun-spot influence, they seem to afford some degree of presumption as to the future. In any case it will be interesting to note whether the above relations are maintained as time goes on. There are several other ways in which the contrast referred to might be put. At present we are near a sun-spot minimum, but it would be premature, I suppose, to say that the true minium has been passed.

Letters From Readers on Various Timely Topics

BLUEBIRDS IN WINTER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Reading in THE NEW YORK TIMES this morning a notice of the bluebirds in January at Mount Vernon, it might also be of interest to your readers to know that in New Windsor, N. Y., sixty miles north of the City of New York we have bluebirds all the Winter months; they sing, too, on the milder sunny days, and can be seen flitting about even in the coldest weather, if the sun shines.

There are six of them, three males and three females, and even now, while I am writing, there is one, a female, which is always more intelligent than the male, picking off the juniper berries tied on a little branch directly in front of my window, so close I can almost reach it with my hand.

These six bluebirds have been coming to our piazza roof where I keep a saucer of water for them, almost every day, and often three or four times a day, to drink, since October.

Three Winters ago, in the latter part of January or the 1st of February, I noticed six bluebirds drinking from the roof gutter, where the snow had slightly melted in the sunshine. Any one wishing to relieve the tedium of a long country Winter and also do a good work for the birds, can enjoy an endless source of amusement by feeding and watering these charming little songsters on their balconies and piazza roofs, where they can readily be rewarded by supplying them with their great needs, food and water.

Besides the juniper berries I have tied on my little tree (which is a branch stuck in a hole on a platform so as to be upright) lumps of beef and mutton suet, which receive hourly visits from the beautiful little downy woodpeckers, the males with bright crimson crescents on their heads, the chickadees, lovely little, sprightly birds, always greeting you with their merry chick-a-dee-dee-dee, and the more sedate though equally tame and pretty white-breasted nuthatches. The song of these latter is like the often-repeated words "she-did-she-did-she-did."

With the exception of the downy woodpecker, these birds will also eat nuts, walnuts, hickory, butternuts, &c., cracked and scattered about, with small lumps of suet, and will grow so tame they will sit on the edge of the roof while I scatter their food on the platform, scarcely waiting until the window is closed before they commence carrying off the nuts, which they relish more than anything which I provide for them.

The snowbirds are also very fond of nuts, but they love canary, hemp seeds, and bread crumbs, with occasional bits of the fat, though they will rarely peck it off like the other birds, if they are supplied with their other dainties.

Sometimes large flocks of wax wings will come and drink from the roof gutter, and, fluttering over the juniper berries like humming birds, will pick off one or two, but they are very shy and rarely come up to the saucers unless driven thereto by having everything frozen up or dry.

I should add the saucers are large (No. 4) flower pot saucers, from which the chickadees and nut hatches drink and drink all day long. Even at times when the saucers are frozen over these birds will hammer a hole in the ice, though, except on exceedingly cold days, I can keep the water from freezing by warming and frequent changing of the saucers.

The very beautiful high-holers, or flickers, are also Winter residents with us, as well as the lovely yellow birds, or goldfinches, which latter, however, lose their yellow coats in Winter, changing to an olive green. The yellow birds will sometimes pick a seed from the larch cones which are also tied on the little tree, but I have never yet found any food for the high-holers, and would esteem it a favor if any one could enlighten me as to the Winter food of these interesting birds.

PEACE EMISSARIES AND WAR.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If The London Chronicle is desirous of finding an actual Revolutionary parallel of the treatment said to have been accorded to the peace envoys in De Wet's camp, an incident of the revolt of the Pennsylvania line in 1781 will apply far more closely than the execution of Major André. In the year named the greater part of six Pennsylvania regiments quartered near Morristown, N. J., under the command of "Mad" Anthony Wayne, justly feeling aggrieved at a crafty misinterpretation of their term of enlistment, revolted and started on an orderly march toward Philadelphia to demand redress of the Congress.

Misinterpreting the temper of the men, Sir Henry Clinton sent two emissaries to the camp with seductive proposals to induce the mutineers to desert to the British side. The emissaries were promptly seized, by order of the Board of Sergeants in command, and delivered to Gen. Wayne, and, after due deliberation with the troops had been amicably adjusted, were tried by court-martial, sentenced, and hanged at the crossroads near Trenton. The men instrumental in their capture declined a reward of 100 guineas, saying:

"It was not for the sake or through any expectation of reward, but for the love of our country, that we sent the spies immediately to Gen. Wayne; we therefore do not consider ourselves entitled to any other reward but the love of our country," and do jointly agree to accept of no other."

As you well say, Gen. Kitchener's severe censorship keeps us in the dark as to the circumstances attending the alleged flogging and shooting of the peace envoys; but it seems to me that in this instance the presumption should be in favor of the Boer commander. ARTHUR GUITERMAN.

A COLOR LINE IN CRIMINALITY?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Please allow me space for a few remarks concerning the remarkable trial just ended in Paterson, N. J. When we consider the hideousness of the deed for which these three men have been convicted, a deed which caused the almost entire annihilation of the tribe of Benjamin, we close our eyes and shudder as we picture the scenes that we have every reason to believe would have followed its commission had the perpetrators been negroes. As in a recent proposed religious revival in that State the attitude toward the brother in black could not have been more narrow, selfish, and bigoted in Georgia, we earnestly believe that, like Georgia, Arkansas, and Colorado, New Jersey could and would have given to the world an exhibition of savagery unequaled in the dark ages of Saxon civilization.

While deep down in our souls we pity the bereaved kindred of this weak woman, we breathe a prayer of thankfulness that her murderers were not of that race that would have been a pretext for a crime more revolting. The verdict of that jury was a lesson to those inclined to be hasty in judgment and a stern rebuke to lynch law, it matters not how revolting the crime may appear. The apparent bravado of the prisoners and their confiding words did not prevent these jurymen from thoroughly weighing the evidence to see what was the real intent. If an impartial jury had been allowed to sift and weigh evidence in other like cases such disgraceful scenes as have been witnessed and performed by our so-called best people would not have occurred. But Sam Hose's piteous protest, the stolid indifference of the doomed boy in Colorado, the intelligent appeals of that poor, innocent wretch in Leavenworth, could not check a howling mob bent upon witnessing a weird and revolting exhibition of barbarism—not because a crime unusually brutal had been committed, but because the one suspected was of a hated race.

Have we not every reason to believe that the aspect of a crime is viewed entirely by the appearance or the race of the one who commits it? Is there a color line in criminality? We have every reason to believe that there is a strong sentiment that there is a color line in religion, in the higher walks of life, a "Jim Crow car" in Heaven, and if so, there is the same belief that there is a color line in shame and sin, in jails and penitentiaries, and that the white man, if he goes to hell at all, must occupy the region nearest the refrigerator. These things have a disheartening effect upon the millions of black citizens of this great Nation, whose blood is mingled with the cement that holds it together. The negro advancing in wisdom and intelligence is watching with disgust the antics of a people whose prejudice stimulates them into committing so many unreasonable things.

It is no wonder that our influence for good is weakening among the heathen when the Fiji Islander can read that "in Arkansas a few days ago, 5,000 cultured heathen of the Saxon race shouted around a burning victim and tore off pieces of his flesh as relics ere his agonized body lapsed into unconsciousness."

Thou must be true thyself
If thou the truth wouldst teach;
Thy soul must flow
If thou another's soul wouldst reach.

THE PROBLEM OF POPULATION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

With a great many apparently able thinkers agreed that human wretchedness is caused in the main by overpopulation, it seems rather novel that your correspondent, "Henry Nelson," in THE NEW YORK TIMES of the 22d inst., should look on a decreasing population as a "serious thing." Yet, even more surprising than novel is the cause which he ascribes for the decrease in this country and in France—that both we and the French "do not love children enough, and will not for their sake give up the ease and comfort of life." I think an intelligent analysis of the matter will show that Mr. Nelson's "cause" is seldom the real one, and that the philoprogenitiveness of the Nation is suffering no diminution.

It is well known that as a class the rich have very small families; the middle classes are more prolific, and the poorer classes are blessed (?) with an abundance of children. If any class is evading the responsibility of parenthood, "sacrificing the ease and comfort of life," it is not the poor, by any means. Not only do they make the sacrifice, but they seriously interfere with the chances for the ease and comfort of the very children produced by the mere fact of the increase. Does this show any great love for children? Is it not a fact that every child born to a poor man makes that man for a time more of a slave? Does not the increase of the workers also intensify the competition among them for work—make more bitter the struggle for existence?

On the other hand, were the rich to be more prolific and the poor less so, there would be a distinct gain for the working class, but the intelligence of the one and the ignorance of the other form a barrier to such a result. False as the Malthusian theory is, it is but the legitimate child of false social conditions, and yet every false condition, every false theory, rests in part upon a truth. Is it a doubt that the earth is not impossible to crowd too many people on the earth, if the growth of population were not restricted. It is also true that under present conditions, viewed as a personal problem, a poor man can have too many children. But this does not prove that a decrease in population proceeds from a diminishing love for children. It remains to be proved that love of children is the main factor in their production, and that the reproduction of the species is a process not capable of regulation and improved results by the use of the human will and intellect. Political and religious fetichism will continue to ignore the problem, and pseudo-philosophers and well-fed optimists will dismiss it with superficial remarks, but in some form or other the population problem will worry humanity. We can't expect the ideal until material conditions are made just and rational.

THE SCARCITY OF SERVANTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your valuable paper of Jan. 6 we noticed, under the above heading, a more sensibly written article than usually appears upon this vexed question. As the "so-called question" is put in the form of an ever-present difficulty to those who employ servants, might they not try a very simple remedy, which we will suggest?

The article referred to states some of the grievances servants justly complain of. Their working hours average from sixteen to eighteen in the twenty-four. This is hard, steady work with brain and hand. The services required from an ordinary servant now are almost professional. No wonder the hospitals have a full share of broken-down women from this constant strain on head and weary hand.

The working hours of the stronger sex are limited mostly to one-half of those employed by the weaker sex. Moreover, the ladies who overwork these servants will interest themselves in shop girls and saleslades in the big stores all over the city, will see that they are not overworked, that they are seated when not employed, and even blacklist the stores which comply not with their wishes in the matter. May it not occur to these well-meaning dames that charity might begin at home and in a matter for which they are far more accountable? The poor girls or women in their employ do not sit, we will not say in their presence—that is a crime, and not tolerated in the present day—but if the mistress be within sight or hearing they tear to be found resting a moment, no matter how weary.

Where men are employed as butlers, &c., their lot is comparatively easy. They take afternoons and evenings off alternately with each other. Where women alone are kept, they are utterly at the mercy of the employer. No afternoon, no evening, for them unless by mere chance the family is out for dinner. It is a pitiful fact that the fashionable lady of to-day makes the lot of her servant a hard one. Not only does she exact so many hours of work, but it would seem that the more she can make her servant feel responsibility and realize the immeasurable distance between them, the more she succeeds in lessening her sense of freedom, the more satisfied she is.

We see no necessity for this in the business relation which simply connects the two. We suggest that the lady allow her servant to live; in other words, let her feel that life is worth living. Shorten the working hours, speak a kind word, as she knows how, throw in a little of the milk of human kindness; it will solve the difficulty as surely as Alexander's sword cut the Gordian knot.

MR. CLEVELAND AND THE FILIPINOS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

This view is that of an expansionist who thinks the anti-imperialists are neglecting really rational argument for platitudes, and who believes in our present opportunities as the means of reviving the old school of American statesmen, also to furnish better object lessons for the voter than another century of old conditions or arguments could do.

To-day you say: "We have never tolerated oppressive laws or unjust administration at home." "Never" is too strong. You should say, "not as a rule," for have not many of our lapses or exceptions been gross and glaring? Does either Quay or Croker doubt this in his heart? By saying "never" you in one word completely play into the hands of opponents, most of all so rational a man as Mr. Cleveland. You well know that the one unknown quantity in our national life is how much the [illegible] suffering patience of Americans will tolerate for a time. Were not many justified in fearing that it would at first tolerate government of the new possessions by the spoils system? Was not the chance great enough for even Mr. Cleveland to have such fears even at this time, by no means too far advanced to dispel them? Of the aforesaid "unknown quantity" is not our life strewn with glaring illustrations? To establish proper rule in our new dependencies requires a change of national habits. The American people, having risen to the occasion so well as they have and so promptly, is one of the most wonderful spectacles of modern times. Will they continue to thus adapt themselves? Is there not some danger of a discouraging lapse for a time? As the national conscience has been stirred by need of the greatest vigilance about our new territory one need not fear the answer to these questions. An overstrained self-confidence has made us at home very careless. In the new lands we feel the exact reverse, and act accordingly, with excellent results not only in Cuba and Porto Rico, but even in portions of the Philippines in spite of the present war.

Such is the simple fact. It is this fact and the ones given immediately before that the anti-expansionist does not grasp. Failing to grasp it, he might well base elaborate argument upon the dangers spoken of, instead of wasting so much time and ink as he does on visions of "imperialism, militarism, sordid materialism, despotism, conquest's lust," &c., of which there is not the least danger. Mr. Cleveland clearly fears the long suffering patience of the American people of abuses at home, getting to our dependencies, rather than the Americans themselves, as his trust in their common sense while in office plainly shows. He is not the man to forget that, which fact must be allowed for criticism of his views.

Let us look from another point of view. There are in Manila many educated Filipinos who are well versed in American matters. Many of these were encountered by the J. G. Schurman Commission, and some could give our Commissioners points about our Constitution. Might not many of these urge the Tagals not to trust a people who trust Quay, Croker, Platt, and their kind? Would they not have a protent argument against us here? If not, why not? We often hear that the anti-imperialist crusade keeps up the Philippine rebellion. If the said agitation per se could not do so, might it not be a potent means for such Filipinos as spoken of to act upon?

Anyhow, the Filipinos, or letting them alone, many here, have ample reason to distrust us if they must do so. Some indeed must, with human nature as it is.

DUTY OF EX-PRESIDENTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your criticisms in your editorial of the 10th inst., "Untried Paths," upon the recent utterances of ex-President Cleveland and of ex-President Harrison seem to me neither discriminating nor judicious. You say: "We expect our wise men to tell us not merely that we are in a bad way, but what we ought to do to set ourselves right."

This appears to me to be a most unreasonable expectation. Neither of those gentlemen is employed or recognized by the Government to work out its intricate problems. We employ a Chief Magistrate, with liberal compensation, aided by a large staff of expert officials, whose duty it is to find and to recommend the best methods of government—at least Constitutional ones. We have also a Congress of men picked from every State whose duty it is to initiate and legislate such methods. Now, if either of the gentlemen named were to presume to particularize such, the same people who now find fault with them because they do not propose such detailed methods would blame them still more if they did.

"What are you," those officials would ask, "who presume to tell us what to do?" The eminent ex-Presidents are likely to share the fate of the wife of Epes Sergeant's inebriate, who at intervals between the lampposts hiccoughed: "When I get home, if I find my wife up I'll whip her. What business has she to be up burning wood and candle late as this? And if I find her abed I'll surely whip her. What right has she to let me fumble about without a fire or light this time of night?"

But you do not credit them with their constructive work. They not only try to restrain from a wrong path, but they—especially Mr. Harrison—point out the right one—the path of the Constitution.

It seems to me, Mr. Editor, that you are a shining example of the very quality which you deprecate, viz., of pessimistic criticism instead of constructive appreciation. When men of authority and experience, so circumstanced as to be nearly impartial and genuinely patriotic as poor human nature can hope for—men of perhaps greater information and wider experience in the conduct of government than any other in our country—when such men are kind enough to show the Administration and Congress that they are on the wrong path—and even to point in the direction of the right one, that of the Constitution—would it not be wiser and less pessimistic to seriously consider and wisely utilize what they do suggest than to feebly cavil at their omission to suggest more?

Such men, so doing, deserve well, and are not to be set at the detailed performance of tasks which hundreds of others are elected to do and compensated for doing.

Such service of such men is in line with the historic instances. Socrates's genius told him when not, never when, to.

It is the law of the mind and of the conscience that people set in place and in power should answer for the exercise of their individual effort, judgment, and moral sense, not for that of other folks.

It is childish for persons accepting such responsibility, or for any one in their behalf, to cry out against those who are kind enough to dehort from wrongdoing and to exhort to follow the beacon light of the Constitution, because they do not lead the responsible officials step by step over the right path.

There are a good many plain people, Mr. Editor, including not a few Republicans, who think and feel more deeply and correctly than your editorial expresses.

THE BOX-OFFICE BOOR.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Let me add my quota of grievances against the superlative insolence of the ticket sellers at the box offices of the majority of New York theatres. I cannot see that Wallack's or Daly's are losing anything through the courtesy of their employes, and, in consequence, we patronize these theatres; also the Empire, for this very reason.

Here is an example of a not infrequent occurrence at other theatres. I inquire for seats in the third or fourth row for "any evening next week." Am gruffly answered "all sold." Then I ask "for any evening the following week." Another growl of "all sold." Finally I say, "well then, give them to me for the first evening you have them." This remark invokes the wrath of the cad behind the window, and in his most insolent manner ejects the following words: "Can't have 'em for any night. Next!"

Now, I claim that even if theatres are in league with speculators and sell tickets through them at advanced prices for the best seats, said theatres have no right to insult patrons of the box office. Let me remind these autocrats of the box office that there have been several occasions when the would-be purchaser of tickets, becoming exasperated beyond endurance, has reached within the sacred precincts of the box office and caught the impertinent seller a blow in the region where his brains ought to be, that cured him temporarily of his gross insolence. I accidentally omitted the Broadway Theatre where I have invariably been treated with most commendable courtesy. A THREE-NIGHTER.

THE BOX-OFFICE NUISANCE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In this morning's issue you printed a very interesting letter by "A Patron of the Play," in which he states that although my object was good in writing my previous letter, the method was doomed to failure. If he will but refer to my previous letter he will find that in writing it I was merely adding my protest to that of "A Theatregoer"; and in my letter I commented upon the fact that Mr. Theatregoer suggested no remedy, and that I knew of none; and I only held out tentatively what I knew, and stated at the time to be a very unsatisfactory way of ending the box office evils.

The plan of Mr. "Patron of the Play," although impracticable, is a splendid one. If he has any means of carrying it through, he can most certainly rely on my help. If he cares to apply to your office kindly give him my name and address.

The plan is, however, impracticable in America; although successful in England. Let us take the representative cities—London and New York. In London the plays are produced for the sake of art; players, managers, and even box office hirelings are imbued with a certain amount of respect and even reverence for the traditions, the awe-inspiring memories, so redolent in the atmosphere pervading most of the London houses. Insolence, disrespect, and anything akin thereto are almost crimes in such places. Even our managers are different when they take charge of those theatres, as is so commonly done.

Where is that feeling to be found in New York? Here the opposite conditions prevail. Everything is done for money. Even the foreign players, when performing here, think less of art than of dollars and cents. The Players' Club could do little if anything to change these conditions unless all the people would unite. So that, as with all American evils, the fault lies primarily with the people.

In London the managers thrive or fail as they please the will of the sovereign. They must produce plays and conduct their theatrical affairs in a manner satisfactory to the royal censor. Such evils as exist here and about which we are protesting would not be tolerated there.

In New York, with a club or without one, the people will still rush to the various theatres and pay exorbitant prices. Thus "Our Club" would have little influence.

Unless we can reach the managers' pockets "the wail of our woes" will undoubtedly fall upon deaf ears so far as they are concerned. A BOHEMIAN.

COURTESY AT THESE THEATRES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why don't the complainers of treatment at box offices give the theatres' names and sign their own to the articles? By so doing some faults might be corrected at those offices. Permit me to reverse the style of letters you are often in receipt of and call attention to the always polite and careful attention received at the box offices of the Broadway, Empire, Lyceum, and Knickerbocker Theatres.

THE SPITTING NUISANCE.

THE LAW AGAINST SPITTING.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The ripple of decent sentiment against spitting in public conveyances is bringing to the surface many facts of interest, among which an important case is that of spitting car conductors. Permit me to add another instance of official disregard for law by spitting policemen.

For a year and a half I was a daily passenger on the Third Avenue elevated line. My trips were made in the early afternoon, at which time scarcely a day passed when there were not from one to five "bluecoats" in the car in which I was riding. My attention was soon attracted to the reckless infraction by many of these officers of the rule placarded before their eyes by the Board of Health. At first I was inclined to excuse the offenders on the ground that possibly they might not comprehend the meaning of the terms used in the posted order. The board, with a fine sense of propriety, had inserted the word "expectorate" instead of its more common, if not "more tenderer," synonym "spit." My interest, however, increased as the transgressions continued, and I took care to follow the "cops" and to select the car in which they rode. During nearly eighteen months I kept count, with the result that four-fifths of these officers were observed to break the law.

The subject is a serious one, not only in its aesthetic aspect, but in its broader correlations. The habit of spitting in public places has been written down as peculiarly an American habit. It is nearly seventy years since Mrs. Trollope, in her caustic "Domestic Manners of the Americans," rendered, as the result of her observations, the following indictment: "I hardly know any annoyance so deeply repugnant to English feeling as the incessant, remorseless spitting of Americans." The habit perhaps originated in the once prevalent practice of chewing tobacco. To protect against the depredations of this vice it has been noticed that in the West and South some legislative halls have been provided with large cast-iron cuspidores—one at the desk of each member—which serve the double purpose of receiving streams of diluted nicotine and of furnishing, in their rattling covers, a means of expressing disapprobation of occasional oratorical hores. But any one whose observation has extended over a few decades must be convinced that this "American" custom has rapidly declined as public decency has become more sensitive.

Thus far the recent references to this lingering offense have mostly treated it as "filthy" and "disgusting," which it surely is; but there is a higher, more momentous, and dangerous aspect of the subject, and one which should especially impress car conductors and officers of the law. The order of the Board of Health is backed by the imperative mandate of medical science. The contents of the mouth and throat are in many cases the home of disease germs, the voiding of which in public places is dangerous to public health. Decency proscribes the practice and suggests an extended use of the pocket handkerchief, but regard for public health pronounces the habit a crime and invokes the protection of law. So grave is the evil that places of resort for consumptives have been rendered useless for sanitary purposes by reason of the expectoration of the invalids themselves.

Recently State and municipal authorities in Southern California have found it necessary to adopt stringent measures against what was formerly regarded as a harmless indulgence to the afflicted.

The subject has a wider bearing, which relates to the evolution and progress of city government under constantly changing conditions. Were Jefferson now living—he who advocated as little governing as possible and dreamed of the "agricultural State"—I am sure his wise statesmanship and his rare common sense would indorse the doctrine that the great masses of people concentrated in large cities must be much governed. There is no other way in which business can be expedited, social life run smoothly, and public calamities be averted. Municipal laws must not only restrain and punish offensive conduct, but they must educate and train citizens in the practice of such conduct as will render the application of the harsher remedies unnecessary. Just here a case in point.

While sojourning in the City of Munich I had frequent occasion to visit the old Pinakothek. On one morning, as soon as the doors were opened, knowing that I was the only visitor at that moment, I felt an inward moving of my American instinct for personal freedom, and started up the flight of stairs to the left. Instantly the guard called me back. "Go to the right," he said. "Do you not see the sign, (rechts gehen)?" "Yes," I replied, "but I thought that rule would be enforced only when many people are going up and down." I have never forgotten his remark as I turned back on my sinful course: "No, no! That is not so. If at a train you go to take the right wise, you are alone, how can we be sure that you will obey the rule when many people are going up and down?"

The spitting nuisance cannot be successfully opposed on the ground of decency alone. It is an offense against public health and safety. This is why the order against it issues from the Board of Health. But this particular grievance is but one of a thousand details in the management which from time to time arise to prove that municipal government is both a science and an art. It cannot be intrusted to political cabals and party politics, with which it has no more natural relation than has the Weather Bureau. The City Government must educate as well as control. Its officers must set an example of as well as compel obedience. Upon this solid ground must all citizens stand, act, and vote if they desire social comfort and business prosperity.

Since the present municipal administration came into power heralding a "wide-open" era, any man with his eyes open must have observed a decided letting down in every department of public order—a decadence which will go on from bad to worse until voting citizens recover their sense of responsibility and act as a unit, independently of political party influence. Suggests the Use of Spittoons.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Having read the many articles in THE TIMES recently on the spitting nuisance in the street cars, and while heartily condemning the same, I would suggest that the car companies be obliged to furnish small spittoons, the same to be attached beneath each seat, and when required for use by a passenger to be released by touching a spring. Such a convenience I am sure would be highly appreciated and used by all cleanly persons especially, who, if the unfortunate victims of catarrh, in default of such a necessity would of course expectorate on the floor rather than swallow and take into their stomach the abominable stuff, and I don't believe there is any law that can stop them. A man doesn't like to fill his handkerchief with phlegm, and he might, sometimes, get caught out without one. WILLIAM A. BRADISH.

An Anti-Spitting Crusader.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am glad that you are giving space in your columns for letters regarding spitting in public conveyances. This abominable nuisance has become a very serious matter, and if every breaker of the health ordinance in regard thereto could be punished it would prove a great public benefaction. I am a daily traveler, and have made it a rule to call the attention of the conductor to persons committing this offense, and if he does not give the matter proper attention I write to the Superintendent of his company, just giving the facts—number of the car, number of the conductor, time, &c. I notice that I never have to complain of the same conductor twice. J. O. N.

Hoggish Detectives on Cars.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I see F. says he was insulted trying to stop spitting in the cars. I saw a detective throw his whole weight on an old gentleman and nearly kill him. You see this Metropolitan Railroad Company, that owns and runs New York City, has spotters and detectives on all its cars, and they all chew tobacco like hogs, and, of course, they have to spit. The conductors are afraid to say anything, and if anybody else does, they will find it too hot to stay on the car. I have seen these detectives in plain clothes deliberately spit on people they didn't fancy as they got off or on the car. JOHN THOMAS.

An "L" Guard on Spitting Nuisance.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In answer to numerous complaints of passengers on surface and elevated cars about the non-enforcement of the anti-spitting law, I would respectfully submit that when they make a complaint to a guard they would also give him their names and addresses. The enforcement of the rule often leads to squabbles with the pigs, and in such cases a report is required by the company, with the names and addresses of two or more witnesses. I am a guard and do not wish to be discharged, as "A Sufferer," in yesterday's issue, suggests. If he, and a few more like him, had the courage to stand by him there would be no need of writing to the papers. As soon as the guard gets in trouble they turn their backs on him, and, as they do not dare to send in a report to the company without the necessary names, they shirk the responsibility. Please give both sides a show by publishing the above. AN "L" GUARD.

POTENT, OR IMPOTENT?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The very grave questions lately argued before the Supreme Court concerning the power of the United States to acquire and govern new territory are reducible to the single issue of National potency or impotency. The United States is either potent or impotent in that regard. Only the most compelling reasons could make a lover of his country admit that she was cursed with impotency as to any vital power. And yet we see thousands eager in asserting a fatal weakness. This is as if a man should boast that he lacked virility. The most blatant in this boast are those whose opposition to the present Administration shows the "ultimate extremity" of rancor. Such men attack anything favored by the President, simply because he favors it. And the infirmity of human reason is such that words may be collocated and styled "arguments" in favor of any conceivable question. If this Administration had held, as these men now hold, that all Constitutional provisions attach themselves to new territory as soon as sovereignty obtains, with equal ingenuity they would have taken the position they now assail. Their arguments are but weapons against the Administration.

Another class are those who ignorantly believe, as extreme sentimentalists, that it is practicable to treat every Porto Rican and Filipino, from the very instant the treaty was ratified, as full-fledged citizens who enjoy all the political privileges that belong to citizens of one of our States. A large and dangerous class—all the more dangerous because their real object is concealed—are those whose timidity makes them insular. They radically object to all "expansion." If by their clamorous arguments the Supreme Court can be led to declare that the United States is impotent to acquire and govern territory except under all the provisions of the Constitution, then they see clearly that the United States would not only never make such acquisitions, but would promptly give up all those lately acquired. For it is clear that our whole body of sane men would not tolerate the instant gift of suffrage and all Constitutional political privileges to all the islanders. They all see and mourn the sudden gift of the suffrage to the Southern negroes without preparation.

Another class believes, in the Porto Rico case, that it was "inexpedient" to levy any tariff. But expediency is a question wholly within the domain of the political department, and cannot be considered by any court. This class assembles sentimental ideas as to the inexpediency, or the "meanness," of taxing a small territory, and loosely hope that such notions should affect the Supreme Court in its action upon a question of Constitutional law. Almost every great cause is dominated by a single and simple vital issue. In this, the most important cause ever before the Supreme Court, that issue is this: Has the United States Constitutional power to acquire, dispose of, and govern territory acquired by war or treaty, by and under the authority of the Congress, until admission to Statehood is granted?

Dismissing idle sentimentality, partisan opposition, and silly objection to expansion per se, the answer may be stated thus in a few words: Under the written Constitution the United States has the express power of waging war and making treaties. It had and exercised these two great National powers under its unwritten Constitution for a number of years before the written instrument of 1787 was signed.

The power of making war is wholly useless unless, in case of success, we can exact indemnity—in money, or in land, if money cannot be paid. It is therefore a power, by clear implication, to take territory for war indemnity. And when so taken, the power to govern is also implied. The written Constitution expressly confers upon the Congress plenary power to "dispose of" and regulate the "territory of the United States. The power to "dispose of"—to sell or to give away—is the broadest conceivable power, and includes all lesser powers.

The precedents of a hundred years show that every Territory acquired has been first governed by the Executive, as Commander in Chief, and then in various ways by the Congress, for long periods of pupilage, and then, when it seemed proper, in the judgment of the Congress, admission to Statehood and full membership to the Union was granted. Until that great honor was accorded the inhabitants of a Territory had, or could have, the high privilege of all the immunities and rights of that American citizenship which accrues only to those who are not only citizens of the "United States," but also citizens of some one particular State.

The Union is composed of States. The Territories are not States—they are domain, land, or property; their inhabitants have all the rights which under our system inhere in territorial domain; not until as States they are admitted to the Union can they have the additional rights that inhere in Statehood. The Constitutional clause forbidding discrimination in tariff duties is confined to the States. If it had been the intent to forbid imposts from territories, that word should have followed the word States, but it did not!

Surely, surely, if the Congress (as above shown) had the power to "dispose of" Porto Rico, it had the infinitely lesser power to lay an impost tax. Each State is "foreign" to every other State. Porto Rico is foreign to each State, and therefore to all the States united. If immediately upon the acquisition of Porto Rico she ceased to be foreign as to the tariff, and there was no need to extend or modify the tariff, then she ceased to be foreign as to our postal system, as to our judicial system, bankrupt system, patent system, and our Senatorial and Representative systems, which is reductio ad absurdum. These systems can be extended to new territory only by specific act of Congress. In all earlier Territories they have been so extended.

Much harm has arisen from the misleading use of two epigrams: "The Constitution follows the flag." "The Constitution does not follow the flag." Almost every epigram is inexact—only a half truth. Both expressions are partly true and partly false. In the sense that the flag symbolizes international sovereignty, it is true that the Constitution follows the flag, en proprio vigore; for it is only by and under the Constitution (written and unwritten) that we have any sovereignty—"United States" sovereignty is the creature of the Constitution. But that very Constitution which ordained our National sovereignty distinctly marks the grave differences between "States" and "Territories"—too numerous now to mention. Chiefly this: Each State is an organized, self-governing body politic, while a Territory is unorganized National property or domain, governable only by the Congress. When the flag is planted as an emblem of sovereignty, under the sanctity of a treaty, those provisions of the Constitution which relate to "territory" at once do "follow," or attach themselves. But those provisions which relate to States do not follow; they await Statehood. Is not this distinction perfectly clear?

These suggestions, I trust, may brush away some of the cobwebs that hang in many mistaken, prejudiced, partisan, or ill-informed minds.

JOSEPH CULBERTSON CLAYTON.

MUNICIPAL CONDITIONS.

STREET SIGNS ON CORNERS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Guggenheimer ordinance recently passed by the Municipal Assembly requiring corner property owners to place street signs on their dwellings made with "five-inch porcelain letters set on a blue ground," was doubtless in the interest of the Trenton potteries, and would, if placed, give the street corners the appearance of a full-fledged crockery shop. Just why a red border was left off, thus preventing a patriotic exhibit of our National colors as well, can only be accounted for on the ground that the patriotic intuition of this august body had deteriorated since the election.

The absurdity of the proposition is fairly demonstrated on Amsterdam Avenue, where the regulation sign would have to be 34 inches in length by 8 inches wide—thus requiring for the whole avenue over 10,000 running feet of lumber and about 275 pounds of pottery. Considering that in this borough and the Bronx there are something like 2,332 corners, each requiring two signs, it appears to be evident that this ordinance if enforced would be likely to put up the price of building materials as well as dinner plates. This alone ought to condemn it with the Mayor, but whether it does or not the city has no power to enforce it.

Of course the signs ought to go up, but they should be of such a character as to make improvement to the appearance of the city and not a disfigurement as proposed. Mr. Guggenheimer's signs would make the city the laughing stock of all other cities and the clown of newspaperdom throughout the country.

But why should the corner owner be saddled with the trouble and expense of putting up these signs, when every owner on the block, every tenant, and the general public as well would be equally benefited? The proposition as now presented is unjust. CITIZEN.

TAMMANY ISLAND PARADISE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I note two able suggestions touching Governors Island. One of these suggestions is from a picturesque Sunday contemporary of yours, and is that the island be surrendered to the city by the United States Government and converted into a place of residence, with fine apartment houses, a co-operative store like Tuxedo, &c. The other suggestion happens to come from the army, now in possession, that something more than $1,500,000 be spent in new quarters for the officers, new storehouses, new wharves, a new sea wall, and such like improvements. Inasmuch as Secretary Root asked for a report on such improvements, I am inclined to the view that the matter will take that reference.

At the same time I have a valuable suggestion to make in regard to Governors Island myself which deserves the serious attention of mankind. Looking at the matter calmly, I am convinced that the island should be turned over to Mr. Croker and his immediate friends in order that it may be converted into a sort of Island of Capri, such as the Roman Emperors maintained in the Bay of Naples. Tiberius, Nero, and a few of their statesmen had some high old times in this luxurious retreat, far from the madding crowd, and they were not much better provided with the means or inclination for enjoying the pleasures of life than are some of my rich and riotous friends in Tammany Hall.

Some great goings-on are reported to have enlivened Capri, but I feel sure that under proper conditions Tammany could duplicate and even exceed them, particularly if it had some sacred and secluded Capri down the bay as a base of operations.

The painstaking Mr. Suetonius relates that on one occasion when Caesar Augustus visited Capri certain decayed branches of an old tree broke off at his approach and lifted themselves exultingly from the ground. One can easily imagine any decayed matter which might be on Governors Island bursting into life and fragrance and full bloom at the approach of Mr. Croker, Mr. Carroll, the Hon. T. Sullivan, his Honor P. Divver, or the Prefect of Police, Devery. In such companionship the trees would life up their branches and rejoice and dead fish, whipped by the waves against the sea wall, would come to life and once more cut with their golden oars the silver sea.

It was on Capri that Tiberius invested himself with the office of reforming the morality of the people, but he did not allow this noble work to interfere in the least with his own chaste pleasures or those of his friends. All the more reason that we should have an Island of Capri for our modern Caesar and his Court, including his Committee of Five, from which they could direct their heaven-born project of reforming New York. THE HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In an issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES of two or three weeks ago there appeared an excellent article on the situation as regards the tenement house question, in which regret was expressed that the plumbing, light, and ventilation of new tenements has been removed from under the watchful supervision of the Health Department. If I remember aright, it was suggested that it would be in the interest of the community to have that department again placed in control.

The creation of the Building Department, which was advocated and engineered by the architects of the city, seemed at the time to have been a necessity, and the transfer of the plumbing and ventilation to its control was supposed to have been, at the time, a move in the right direction. Experience, however, has shown to the contrary, but it is questionable if at the present time—and supposing no change to have been made seven or eight years ago—things would be in a condition which would give the satisfaction expected.

The organization of the Health Department was the work of Prof. Chandler, in 1883. He formulated rules for plumbing and drainage, light and ventilation, and while he was in office he succeeded tolerably well in maintaining the system, although the time he could give to the business of the department was too limited to produce all the good effects intended.

In the hands of Gen. Shaler it is a matter of record that the Health Department was not a shining light among the various branches of the City Government. He was removed from the position of President in 1857 by Mayor Hewitt, who appointed Mr. James C. Bayles to the vacated Presidency. Under President Bayles the most far-reaching and beneficent reforms were introduced, the rules were enforced, and the best benefit to the community was secured, and to such an extent that the humblest tenement building was as safely plumbed and as well provided in the proportion of light and ventilation as the most expensive building on Fifth Avenue. In fact, the difference lay only in the expensive character of the sanitary appliances in use in the latter. His successor, President Charles G. Wilson, followed the lines laid down by Mr. Bayles, and we had a renewal under his management of the active zealous administration of the latter gentleman.

In an evil hour the department passed under Tammany domination, and there it sticks. A very respectable man, Col. Michael C. Murphy, is at the head, but good Lord deliver us,

AT THE THEATRES

Need of New Invention in Farce and Burletta—Plan for an Ideal Theatre.

One of the lessons of this season is that new blood is sadly needed in the manufacture of light comic and musical pieces for the entertainment of the multitude. Farce and burletta in various forms have always been conspicuous in the theatrical repertory since the afterpieces of Garrick, Foote and Fielding. But inventive geniuses have arisen, from time to time, to modify and improve the prevailing forms and give to the minor drama some sort of new life.

After the great vogue of Planché and the men of his hour on the London stage, for instance, came the punning travesties of the Brothers Brough, which, having declined to the inanity of H. J. Byron and the latter work of Burnand, gave place in turn to the really artistic operettas of Gilbert, in which fresh humor, sparkling wit, and the true dramatist's comprehension of human nature were so happily commingled. Planché and the lesser writers of "pantomime" and extravaganza in his day treated the old themes, familiar nursery tales and folk legends, if not quite seriously, at least politely and with some show of poetic fancy. The succeeding school of burlesque writers were ribald jesters who deliberately turned history and romance topsy-turvy and, indeed, there was no lasting value in anything they produced.

Nobody would laugh to-day at their puns. Wamba, in "Ivanhoe," asking the household of Cedric, to whom he enters out of a rainstorm, "Why am I fat?" and, answering his own conundrum, "Because I'm dripping," would be thought as melancholy now as any of the funereal buffoons of our "farce comedy." And even the elaborate verbal ingenuity in the declaration of bluff King Hal in "The Field of the Cloth of Gold," that he will not cross the Channel on Sunday because the sick transit spoils the glory of Monday, represents a kind of fun long since played out.

The Brothers Brough were not greater experts at this sort of literary foolery than John Brougham, whose American career as a conceiter of comic plays and a stage humorist began after the vogue of the rude early travesty of Mitchell's Olympic had passed. Nor were the Broughs or any of their contemporaries in the English playmarket cleverer in the mere construction of travesty than Brougham, whose "Pocahontas," which survived a whole theatrical generation, was as bright and original as any burlesque play of its class ever was.

But that sort of burlesque, though it had a fitful revival in de Walden travesties of "Hamlet" and "Richelieu," in which George L. Fox gravely burlesqued Booth, gave way before the new influences exerted by the importation of the Offenbach opéra bouffe, on the one hand, and the absolute literary inanity, but measurable terpsichorean and musical skill, in the burlesques brought from the London of the sixties by Lydia Thompson and her contemporary blondes. Offenbach in French could never be anything here but an exotic, of course, and Offenbach in English, under the best possible conditions, was still lacking in the essential opéra bouffe, but there was enough fun in the "books" of Meilhac and Halevy, nevertheless, to defy the ravages of translators. Quite apart from the innumerable English versions of the French opera bouffe, from "La Grand Duchess" to "La Jolie Parfumeuse" and "Mme. l'Archiduc," and some of these were good shows," in which sensible folks could find their money's worth of fun, the humorous influence of Offenbach and his colaborers did actually have an appreciable effect for a time on the stage frivol of that hour, even upon the Lydia Thompson kind of burlesque.

A little later Edward Harrigan, taking the negro minstrel sketch and the "sidewalk conversations" of the variety theatres as his starting point, invented and breathed the very breath of life into a new form of native comic drama, deriving his personages and their very language from life itself; while from Harrigan's beginning all the species of later "farce comedy," as the illiterate press agents call it, more or less directly grew, even Charles Hoyt's sufficiently original nonsense plays, in which there was, however, abundant observation of life and humor of a distinctly New England and rural type to contrast with the Irish-American and purely urban fun of Harrigan.

The advent here of the Gilbert and Sullivan operetta created a taste for light opera, and for a long while the Vienna operetta satisfied the demand, after its fun had been worked over by native and English adapters. But that passed, and every other kind of stage fun of that era seems to be played out now. The long reign of "acrobatic farce" is surely finished. Nothing could be drearier than the examples of this sort of stage piece lately exhibited here.

In the beginning of the consulship of energetic Lederer at the Casino, Morton and Kerker's "Tenderloin" burletta, with all its audacity and paganism, was at least vital and exhilarating. Half a dozen of the George Edwardes brand of "musical comedy," exported from London, where it took the place of Gaiety burlesque, (and none too soon,) were entertaining, and the latest, "San Toy," proved comparatively diverting this season, though its merit is almost wholly musical and pictorial, and its humor is small.

Weber and Fields seemed to be engineering the development of a new sort of funny entertainment, for a while, and they are still the best friends of Euphrosyne and Momus in New York, but they have succeeded this season by main strength, as it were, and the matter in their entertainments is not up to their standard.

Dullness reigns in the land, and the folks who want to laugh find as hard scraping for fun in the theatres as they do in the colored "comic" journals circulated exclusively in the barbers' shops. There is sad need for a new inventor of farcical stage pieces. Operetta, "musical comedy," extravaganza and burlesque need reviving.

It really seems as if something might come of the latest plan to establish a theatre in London for the production of plays believed to be worthy yet disregarded by the commercial theatre. Even if such a theatre, once firmly established, did nothing more than to prove conclusively that there are no such plays, it would be serviceable. In that case it would silence the discordant voices of one set of enthusiasts for a time.

Beerbohm Tree seems to be the instigator but he was goaded to it by Cecil Raleigh, who complained, without the slightest show of reason or fairness, that theatrical managers who produced old plays, on which there are no royalties to pay, were unjust to the contemporary dramatists. Mr. Tree has now publicly suggested that every manager producing a Shakespeare or other classical play shall pay 2½ per cent. of the gross receipts into a general fund for the foundation and maintenance of such a theatre as the enthusiasts think they want. The suggestion is being made so much of that, if the other managers agree to Tree's proposition, the scheme is likely to be pushed.

In the absence of positive novelty in the shift of "attractions" in the popular theatres this week students of the drama may derive some sort of aesthetic satisfaction from the performance at the Empire Theatre Thursday afternoon, by Mr. Sargent's pupils, of "The Tragedy of Death," a symbolic drama in one act and three tableaus, by René Peter, translated by E. S. Belknap, and provided with illustrative music by Harvey Worthington Loomis. This work is soon to be done at the Théâtre Antoine in Paris, but this will be its first performance on any stage. Judging by an analysis printed in the announcements it will be a precious thing, if rather bewildering to mere wayfarers. "The Portraits of the Marquise," taken from Octave Feuillet by Mrs. Burton Harrison will be acted the same afternoon. E. A. D.

THE VAUDEVILLE SHOWS.

In the perpetual hunting after every new thing, B. F. Keith has captured for the Union Square Theatre one of the most striking attractions of a purely ephemeral nature that the amusement world has known for some time. "Bathhouse John" of Chicago, known more soberly as the Hon. John J. Coughlin, Alderman in that city, is the author of the words and music of "Dear Midnight of Love," and May de Sousa will sing it with a large chorus and an orchestra this week. The bill will include also a number of first-class vaudeville attractions. Eva Williams and Jack Tucker will present their picture of low life. "Skinny's Finish"; James O. Barrows and his company will produce a new sketch, "A Thoroughbred," and Press Eldridge, Smith and Campbell, Ray L. Hoyce, Belle Davis, and others are in the programme.

At Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre this week's bill contains plenty of laughing dialect acts in Tom Nawn's newest Irish farce, "Pat and the Genii"; Perkins D. Fisher's "Rube" farce, "The Half-Way House," and Dutch Harry Watson's Company in "The Two Flats." The specialty features are the Three Mascagnos, European acrobats; Genaro and Bailey, cakewalkers; Naomi Etbardo, hand balancer; Frank White and Lew Simmons, blackface comedians; Gaspard Brothers, Claudius and Corbin, and the Kalatechnoscope.

These are the closing weeks of Jean Marcel's living art reproductions of statuary, paintings, and bas-reliefs at Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre. The new-comers this week are Mlle. Delbosq, the wire performer; Al Leech and Three Rosebuds, in Joseph Hart's latest musical farce; Max Waldron, female impersonator; Ralph Johnstone, who is retained for a second week in his bicycle act; Frank Cushman, "the twentieth century minstrel"; Spenser Kelly, baritone; Maddox and Wayne, comedy duo; three Barrets, club jugglers, and a dozen more.

Charles R. Sweet will make his first appearance this season at Proctor's East Fifty-eighth Street Palace, and present his funny burglar musical specialty. Lillian Burkhart is the dramatic headliner and will play "Capt. Zusanne" for the first time in this city. Others who will appear are Lew Hawkins, minstrel monologist; Cushman, Holcombe, and Curtis in the musical farce, "The New Teacher"; Montague and West, refined musical act; Gilbert Sarony, the old maid; Vera King, vocalist, and Hanley, McGowan, and Hanley, comedy trio.

Clayton White and Marie Stuart are the stars at Proctor's One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Theatre in the farce "Dickey." Hill and Hull, grotesque acrobats, just from Europe, will make their first appearance in America in five years. The other features include Carroll Johnson, black-faced comedian; Martine brothers, grotesque acrobats, on the rebounding table; Doherty's poodles, a clever troupe of dogs; Howard brothers, banjoists; Hornmann, magician; Trask and Gladden, singers and dancers.

An attractive bill is offered at Huber's Museum. It includes the Tyrolean Quintet; R. A. Strudell, the "electral" marvel; Harry Harrison, the human ostrich; Gray and Lavinia, magicians, and their Japanese cabinet; Lala Coolah; Sam Furst, the sailor whittler, and Allen's Punch. In the theatre the principal attractions will be shown in a reproduction of the McGovern-Gans fight, giving the battle from start to finish, and the Leonzo brothers in their two-act drama, "Del Monte," in which they introduce their acting dogs, Don and Duke.

What was intended as a bit of burlesque in "Fiddle-Dee-Dee," at Weber & Fields's Music Hall, has turned out to be one of the many successes of this organization. Something new is seen and heard at every performance of "Fiddle-Dee-Dee" and the burlesque of "The Gay Lord Quex" and "A Royal Family."

A programme of unusual excellence has been arranged for this week at the New York. Besides the new spectacular ballet, "The Devil's Dance" and "The Giddy Throng," an olio, including a number of popular performers will be seen. To-night Nina Farrington and Henry Bergman will make their first appearnce in vaudeville in a sketch entitled "A Case of Divorce."

Maud Raymond and George Fuller Golden will be the leading features of Hurtig & Seamon's Music Hall. Among the others in the programme are George Evans, Alice Captaine, Binns and Binns, Rosford brothers, McCale and Daniels, and Bickel and Watson. The Merry Maiden Burlesquers will be the attraction at the Dewey Theatre. A long list of attractions is offered by the Hashim management at Koster & Bial's, commencing to-morrow afternoon. Prof. Lorle, a celebrated European sharpshooter, assisted by Mlle. Atalina, heads the list. The Tellman's cats are varied and darling, the William Tell legend of the apple shot from the head of a companion being included in the list. Clifford and Huth, Sam Kitty, and Clara Morton, Hope Booth, and Artie Hall are also in the new bill. Others include Smith and Fuller, musiques; the Mimic Four, comedians and singers; the Clemense sisters, singers and dancers; Zazelle and Vernon, horizontal bar gymnasts; Lawrence Crane, comic Irish magician; St. Onge brothers, trick bicyclists; Budd brothers, eccentric comedians, and Dixon, Bowers, and Dixon.

THIS WEEK'S PLAYBILLS.

Two leading theatres—the Garden and Manhattan—which had scheduled new productions for to-morrow night, will be closed for the week owing to the unfinished condition of the new pieces. There will be a revival of "Barbara Frietchie" at the Academy of Music on an enlarged scale, with Miss Effie Elisler in the title rôle. For to-morrow night, as well as Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Manager Conried will offer his patrons at the Irving Place Theatre Sudermann's play entitled "Sodom's Ende." A farce comedy called "Behind Papa's Back" will have its first presentation on Thursday night, and repeated Friday and Saturday evenings, and for Saturday matinée "Minna Von Barnhelm" will be repeated.

The unchanged bills for the week will include not only plays that have been filling long engagements and are compelled to bring them to an end on Saturday night on account of engagements made outside of this city, but also several that have started their season quite recently. Miss Annie Russell will terminate her season with "The Royal Family" this week at the Lyceum, and in order to fulfill the demands made by those who are desirous of seeing the play three matinées will be given on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. William H. Crane, with his "David Harum" at the Garrick Theatre, also brings his long and successful season in this city to an end this week. He will then start upon a tour which will cover a period of two years. "Mrs. Dane's Defence" continues to maintain its popularity, and during the past week Mr. Frohman was in receipt of a letter of congratulation from Henry Arthur Jones, the author of the play, in which he states that he is so delighted over its success that he is already at work on a new piece for the Empire company. Miss Edna May's return to the cast of "The Girl From Up There" at the Herald Square Theatre caused an increase in the attendance. A number of new songs have been introduced and new lines are being constantly added. H. V. Esmond's comedy "When We Were Twenty-one," with Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott, at the Knickerbocker Theatre, has proved as popular with the public as it was last season.

"Lady Huntworth's Experiment" will be the dramatic attraction for the remaining part of the season at Daly's Theatre. Miss Julia Marlowe has won a personal success as Mary Tudor, Princess of England, in "When Knighthood Was in Flower" at the Criterion Theatre. Mary Mannering as Janice Meredith at Wallack's Theatre continues to play to large attendance, as does also Miss Viola Allen at the Theatre Republic with "In the Palace of the King." Only two weeks more remain of "My Lady Dainty's" engagement at the Madison Square Theatre. Miss Amelia Bingham's first venture as a manager with "The Climbers" at the Bijou Theatre has proved successful, and "Florodora" continues prosperously at the Casino. A new duet entitled "Somebody" has been introduced in the first act for Miss Fannie Johnston and Sidney Deane. The musical farce, "The Night of the Fourth," is continued at the Victoria. New groups have been placed on exhibition at the Eden Musée, one of Queen Victoria lying in state and another of Edward VII. Several changes in the cast of "Vienna Life," the new Strauss opera, which was presented at the Broadway Theatre last week, result in a smoother performance being given.

The changed bills of the week return some of the plays and players to stages upon which they are already familiar. That is the case at the Harlem Opera House, where Anna Held's only New York appearance this season in "Papa's Wife" will be made. Harry Lacy who is well known to west side theatre-goers, will be seen at the Grand Opera House in "The Still Alarm." "A Social Highwayman," adapted from the novel of Elizabeth Phipps Train by Mary T. Stone, will be the offering of the Donnelly Stock Company at the Murray Hill Theatre. William Bramwell and Walter Allen will assume the characters of Courtice Jaffray and Jenkins Homby—originally played by Joseph and E. M. Holland. Dorothy Donnelly, Mrs. Thomas Barry, Laura Hope Crews, Thomas L. Coleman, and William Redmond will also be in the cast. "Held by the Enemy" will be revived at the American Theatre, with Ralph Stuart as Colonel Prescott and Miss Jane Kennark as Rachel Macreery. Chauncey Olcott at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, with his "Garrett O'Magh," still proves popular. "Lost in the Desert" will be seen at the Metropolis Theatre, and the melodrama "The City of New York" at the Third Avenue Theatre.

M. Le Roux's New Play.

M. Hughes le Roux, who will be the 1902 lecturer of the Cercle Française of Harvard University, is the originator of a play which has just been put on the stage at the Ambigu Theatre of Paris. It was adapted by Pierre Decourselle from le Roux's "Le Maitre de l'Heure," the title being changed to "L'Autre France," as being better adapted to the stage.

It is an episode of the Algerian insurrection of 1870, and, according to the opinion of the Parisian critics, is one of the best-staged plays Paris has seen for many years. It is said to be a decided success.

M. le Roux is now on his way to the Court of Menelik, King of Abyssinia, where he has been sent by the French Government on an official mission.

FASHIONS FOR LITTLE ONES.

Pretty things in the way of children's clothes are now coming to the fore, clothes for little ones who will accompany their parents in a late Winter or early Spring trip to the South or that will be worn during the Summer. There are Russian blouses still for the little ones, and these are made in all colors and in various pretty and strong wash materials—piques, linens, and galatea in different colors, all white or white trimmed with colors, and each more attractive than the other.

Little Russian blouse suits are made for both little boys and little girls with little trousers under the long blouse, for seashore and mountains, or anywhere the little ones are to have the comfort of playing in the dirt and amusing themselves out of doors. The sailor suit is also in evidence, for there is nothing prettier for the half-grown boy and girl. There is a variety of devices for them, each satisfactorily nautical, which are put on at the regular naval supply stores, to be sure that they are exactly accurate.

The waists are as long as heretofore in all sorts of little frocks. The Woman's Exchange, on Madison Avenue and Forty-third Street, which has an opening in its children department to-morrow, has very pretty little dancing frocks in white which show this long-waisted effect in pretty designs. One charming little frock for a little maiden of perhaps three or four is of white pique, cut, as many of the little frocks now are, with low neck and short sleeves. The little skirt is perfectly plain, the waist set loosely in box plaits and the edge of the neck and sleeves with a little cap, which is formed by the sleeve, finished with an embroidered edge of small scallops. The low-cut neck has the effect of being square, and the little dress is exceedingly pretty. The thin white gowns are of French nainsook, with insertions and ruffles of lace. Not a large collection of children's garments is kept on hand at the Exchange, for orders are filled at the same prices as ready-made goods, and the majority of people prefer to order.

The Russian blouses are finished with straight bands at the neck or with little turned-over collars. One pretty little blouse is finished with bands of pink in the centre of which are bands of white Hamburg, the pink showing through. The band up the side of the blouse, the belt and collar band are made in this way. One pretty little suit that is to be made to order is to be of a moss green for a wash suit for the mountains. Brown linen is one of the most serviceable materials used for children and one of the most popular. Little sunbonnets or hats are made to match the little suits for mothers who like to see a certain uniformity in dress. A little maiden in a pink gown and pink sunbonnet is fetching. So she is too in serviceable dark blue or brown.

Some mothers put their children, girls as well as boys, in quiet country or seaside places in little pajamalike garments, made on the principle of the bifurcated garments used for some children for night gowns. Creeping suits are made in this way for small children.

Smocking, which is not new, but which will never grow old, is one of the prettiest ways of finishing children's little frocks. This is to be found on around the neck and sleeves of the little low-necked and short-sleeved frocks, and forms tiny yokes in the high-necked frocks. There is always a suggestion of home work about it that is charming aside from its real beauty.

AMERICAN FURNITURE POPULAR.

Consul at Mannheim, Germany, Says the Field Is Inviting.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—According to Consul Harris at Mannheim, Germany, that Consular district offers a desirable market for American household and kitchen furniture, especially medium-grade oak chairs, with and without rockers, tables, and book cases. Rocking chairs, almost unknown in many parts of Germany, are steadily growing in favor in that country, and American desks and other office furniture find an excellent and constantly growing market in that country.

Many of the processes of carving and otherwise decorating sideboards, mantels, and chairs, effected in the United States by machinery, are worked out by hand in Germany at greatly increased cost. The German market, the Consul adds, is no place in which to sell shoddy goods, and certainly not shoddy furniture.

Three Children Burned to Death.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 26.—Three children of R. McCarthy were cremated today in a fire that destroyed their home, in an eastern suburb. They were Edith, aged eighteen years; Melissa, fourteen, and Kenneth, ten. The parents occupied a room on the lower floor, and were awakened to find the entire building in flames. All escape for the children, who slept above, was cut off.

Electric Light Plant Taken Over.

LYONS, N. Y., Jan. 26.—Charles A. Lux of Clyde, representing the Elkins-Widener Electric Light Syndicate, has secured control of the stock of the Lyons Electric Light and Power Company and will assume the management of that company. The company is now building a new electric plant in Clyde.

A Politician Commits Suicide.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., Jan. 26.—William L. Warner, a prominent Democratic politician, Deputy Internal Revenue Collector for this district under the Cleveland Administration, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head in his office this morning.

AMONG MUSICIANS

Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" and the Sources of the Poem.

It is a pity that the general public will not take opera as an art, but is contented to look upon it as a mere pastime, the chief pleasure of which is a sort of hysteria about singers. Little sympathy for that feeling will be found here. Occasionally some singer realizes a beautiful ideal, as Jean de Reszke does when he enacts the rôle of Tristan, but usually the centre of interest is the work itself. Many persons labor under the delusion that "Tristan und Isolde" is a new fancy of Wagner's; they do not know that the tale is one of the famous old legends of the Arthurian cycle and that it ranks as one of the great epics of mediaeval Europe. First of all, however, this story belonged to the great Arthurian cycle of legends, which have supplied material to so many poets down to Tennyson and Swinburne. The latter wrote a version of this very tale under the title of "Tristram of Lyonnesse," which is only a modern adaptation of the earliest known title, "Tristam de Leonois," a poem dating from 1190.

The story is of Celtic origin, yet we find that it first took definite shape in France. The Arthurian cycle consists of the "Romance of the Holy Grail," "Merlin," "Launcelot," "The Quest of the Saint Graal," and "The Mort Artus." From the last was drawn the beautiful "Morte d'Arthur" of Sir Thomas Mallory, a story of which about one-third is devoted to the life and adventures of Tristram, not properly told in this version. How was it that the French romantic poets were engaged in celebrating the doings of English heroes? In the heart of the Midi the forerunners of the Troubadours sang the deeds of Arthur and Launcelot and Merlin, just as Tennyson did in the latter half of the nineteenth century. As far as we can ascertain at this time the exploits of Arthur, which had been narrated in scattered song and story for many a long year through all the vales of England, were compiled by Geoffrey of Monmouth. He died in 1154, the year in which Henry II. ascended the throne of England. Henry was of the house of Anjou, and united the crowns of England and Normandy under his sceptre. At about the same period, according to Prof. Morley, Walter Map, an Archdeacon of Oxford, (1154-89,) is believed to have introduced the Holy Grail into the romances which existed before his time.

The conditions were now precisely right for the introduction of the Arthurian legends and the Grail into the romantic literature of France. The Norman Court took great delight in the English tales. The French poets were only too glad to find new material which was sure of favor in high places. And their own blood was not averse to the nature of the poetry. The French of the Middle Ages were a wonderfully cosmopolitan people. Near Tours, far to the north of the sunny land of the Troubadour, Charles Martel crushed and scattered the army of the Prophet, and for centuries after that the Saracen trod the valleys of the Midi. Long before that the Greeks had sent settlers into the region, and the old nature-loving Hellenic spirit found its expression and its means of preservation in the folk songs and dances of the people. But the inhabitants of the Midi were, nevertheless, Celts. Matthew Arnold says: "Gaul was Latinized in language, manners, and laws, and yet her people remained essentially Celtic." And so we need not be astonished at finding the Celtic Arthurian legends taking root in the literature of mediaeval France. Robert de Borron, a Trouvere, born near Meaux, wrote about 1170 or 1180 the Provençal version of the Grail legend. Chrétien de Troyes, another of the French romancists, wrote a version of the Grail legend about the same time as Borron.

Of the oldest versions of the Tristram tale, two are known. M. Gaston Paris and Dr. Golther have put forth in their books on the Tristram legend studies of what is called the minstrel version of the story. It is said to be the work of one Berol, of whom practically nothing is known. There was also a very early German version by Eilhart von Oberge, and from this indirectly originated the unsatisfactory version given by Mallory. The other old French one was that of Thomas of Brittany, an Anglo-Norman. This poem was the previously mentioned "Tristam de Leonois," and from it, about 1210, Gottfried of Strassbourg, a German, drew the great mediaeval Teutonic form of the tale.

The French versions of the Arthurian legends found their way into Germany. It was from the poem of a Frenchman, Kiot of Provence, that Wolfram von Eschenbach said he obtained the material for his "Parzival," originally part of one of the Arthurian legends. From this poem of Wolfram Wagner became acquainted with the materials of his "Lohengrin" and "Parsifal," and from further researches into the Arthurian tales he obtained his "Tristan und Isolde." The direct source of his book was the version of Gottfried von Strassbourg, but in making his drama Wagner, as usual, departed in some of the most significant incidents from his original.

It was not for the purpose of entering into this, however, that I began these cursory remarks. They were suggested to me by a hint thrown out by my confrère H. E. Krehbiel in a recent article in the Etude, a musical monthly published in Philadelphia. He declared that Wagner study was confined too much to the handbooks and that there was not enough independence in it. The public is notably indolent in regard to art, but there should be a chosen few who would get great pleasure out of studying the variants of these old legends and the manner in which Wagner has employed his materials with surpassing dramatic skill. As a beginning in this line, let me recommend Prof. George Dippold's "Great Epics of Mediaeval Germany," Jessie L. Weston's "Legends of the Wagner Drama," and the same lady's translation of Wolfram's "Parzival."

Ballroom Scene in "Vienna Life."

When Ernest Albert was commissioned to design and paint the scene for the second act of "Vienna Life" he was given carte blanche and could indulge his fancy untrammeled; the result is the magnificent stage effect which is now being talked of all over New York. The architecture is in the rococo style of Louis XV., not exactly pure, but fanciful. The entire scheme of the scene is to represent dancing; in fact, it is called "The Apotheosis of the Dance." The size of the full scene is 36 feet deep and 45 feet wide, with 45 life-size figures, all dancing, over 100 cupids to imitate stucco work, and two splendid representations of dancing alabaster nymphs, on the staircases in the interstices of the fretwork. Two magnificent staircases and a gallery run around the back of the hall forming an eccentric ellipse at the back of the stage. A magnificent frieze is painted on the walls in splendid panels, and this is the only color work that breaks the white and gold effect of the scene. The panels on the rear are 8 feet by 24 feet and represent "The Dance of the Bacchantes." The right hand panel is "The Minuet," the left hand "A Country Dance," and at the extreme back centre is "The Waltz," as a tribute to Johann Strauss, the "Waltz King," in whose honor the whole scene has been designed. Behind the fretwork drops is a border of pure gold laid on in sheets loosely, so that it trembles and shimmers in the lime light, giving a fairylike and sumptuous effect. On the staircases are four splendid candelabra, which intensify the purity of the lines of the staircases and landings. This magnificent scene was designed, painted, and built in three weeks and cost nearly $2,700.

American School of Opera.

The American School of Opera will give a performance of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and scenes from "Faust" at the Berkeley Lyceum Theatre Tuesday evening, Jan. 29, with the following cast: Santuzza, Maria Strakosch; Lola, Frances Golden; Lucia, Helen Kerr; Turiddu, Iver Anderson; Alfio, Andreas Schneider. In "Faust": Marguerite, Katherine Coivin; Siebel, Jean L. Cooper; Faust, Walter H. Wheatley; Mephisto, Allen C. Hinckley. Much interest is being manifested in this first appearance of Miss Maria Strakosch, the daughter of the late impresario, Max Strakosch. This will also be the first appearance of Mr. Allen C. Hinckley, a basso, from Philadelphia.

The Week at the Opera.

Monday Evening—"Les Huguenots," Miss Breval, Mme. Homer, Mme. Melba, Messrs. Saleza, Plançon, and Edouard de Reszke.

Wednesday—"Romeo et Juliette," Mme. Melba, Miss Bridewell, Messrs. Jean and Edouard de Reszke, and Mr. Plançon.

Friday—"Aida," Miss Macintyre, Mme. Homer, Messrs, Saleza, Plançon, Campanari, and Journet.

Saturday Afternoon—"Tristan und Isolde," Mmes. Ternina and Schumann-Heink, Messrs. Jean and Edouard de Reszke and Bertram.

Saturday Night—"Don Giovanni," Misses Strong and Scheff, Mme. Gadski, Messrs. Salignac, Pini-Corsi, Journet, and Scottl.

The usual concert will take place to-night. The solo singers will be Misses Macintyre and Adams, Messrs. Salignac, Journet, and Scottl.

The Philharmonic Society.

The fifth concert of the Philharmonic Society will take place at Carnegie Hall next Saturday night, preceded by the customary public rehearsal on Friday afternoon. The programme is as follows:

Overture, "Iphigenie en Aulide".....Gluck
"Hymnus,"

Mr. David Bispham.
Minuetto and finale from C major quartet, Opus 59.....Beethoven
String orchestra.
Songs: "My Soul Is Dark".....Schumann
"Hark, hark the lark".....Schubert
"Edward".....Lowe
Mr. Bispham.
Symphony after Byron's "Manfred"...
Tschaikowsky

NOTES OF MUSIC.

Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, is to give a second violin recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 13.

Hugo Becker, the 'cello virtuoso, whose successful début with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its last concert, is still the talk of the musicians, is to give a recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 12.

Harold Bauer has recently given recitals in Chicago and Indianapolis with the same success that marked his appearances in New York and Boston. He will probably be heard in concert here again before his departure for Paris early in March.

Adele Aus Der Ohe, the pianist, arrived in New York on the North German Lloyd liner Lahn yesterday. She is to make a three months' tour of the country, and will make her first appearance in Boston with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday, Feb. 15, appearing in this city the following Thursday.

The second pianoforte recital by the young Italian pianist Toselli is announced for the afternoon of Thursday, Jan. 31, at 3 o'clock. Signor Toselli has again placed upon his programme a number of novelties, including pieces by Sgambati, Martucci, and Leoncavallo. Other numbers on the programme are from Schumann, Beethoven, and Chopin.

Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, the pianist, is to give New Yorkers an opportunity to hear her in a piano recital on the afternoon of Feb. 14, in Mendelssohn Hall, under the management of Mr. Henry Wolfsohn. It is some five years since Mrs. Zeisler was last heard here, and then with orchestra, under the direction of Anton Seidl, and the impression which she created at that time still lingers in the minds of many who heard her.

Mr. Harry Rowe Shelley's "Santa Claus Overture," which is to receive its first performance at the Metropolitan Opera House on Sunday, under Mr. Walter Damrosch's direction, is intended to depict the essence of Christmas feeling, the jollification, the children's games, the singing of carols—in short, all that savors of sincere regard as well as ardent admiration for the joyous holiday season. Incidentally, Santa Claus may be imagined in his night ride, during which the goodies are deposited in the manifold little stockings, to slacken the pace of his "eight tiny reindeer" that he may listen to the singing of nuns celebrating midnight mass in a far away convent, while the convent bell chimes in concord with the singing.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

THE RUSSIAN PROGRAMME IN CENTRAL AND EASTERN ASIA.—Owing to certain communications that have recently been exchanged between the French Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Russian Ambassador in Paris, it is believed that Russia has an elaborate military programme in regard to Central and Eastern Asia which will be carried out during the present year. It is a well-known fact in diplomatic circles in St. Petersburg that the Russian Minister of War, Gen. Kuropatkin, even before the Boers invaded Natal, took a pessimistic view of the dangerous potentialities underlying the European entanglement in China, and the British entanglement in South Africa, and that he now holds that Great Britain is drifting into a crippled and helpless condition, favorable to certain political rectifications which some of her neighbors may deem it both expedient and opportune to take.

Gen. Kuropatkin, therefore, has devised a scheme which will apply both to Turkestan and Northern China. An entire extra division of troops is to be drafted, by a closely conservative series of details, into the former territory. It is believed that this part of the scheme will attract little attention, as nearly all the recruits needed were dispatched beyond the Black Sea and the Caspian early last Fall, and that these instead of being ordered further east will remain where they are and be united with the usual contingent of regular troops which it is customary to send into Turkestan at the end of every Winter. It is also learned that the regular garrisons in that region as far as Kushk on the Afghan frontier, have already more than their full complements of all arms.

As far as the Far Eastern question is concerned, there will be twenty-three voyages made during the present year by the cruisers of the Russian volunteer fleet between Odessa and certain ports in China, Port Arthur, and Vladivostok. Among these voyages the transportation of from 35,000 and 40,000 will be divided. From official figures recently published in St. Petersburg it is shown that the Russian force in the Far East now numbers more than 175,000 men, and it is also deemed worthy of notice that, in addition to the above reinforcements which will be dispatched by sea, a large but hitherto unestimated force will be sent overland during the coming Summer.

REVELATIONS MADE BY THE PRUSSIAN INCOME TAX.—The published returns of the Prussian income tax for the last year of the century are regarded in Berlin as showing the rapid growth of prosperity in the kingdom. The total of the taxable incomes amounted to 7,841.3 million marks, which is an increase of 37 per cent., or 2,117 million marks, since 1892, the first year in which the present tax laws came into force, and of 583 millions as compared with 1899. Four hundred and thirteen thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight persons paid taxes on an income of more than 3,000, as against 39,957 who paid them in 1899. Of the number who paid last year 318,583 were town residents, while 95,295 were settled in rural districts.

A statistical feature which is attributed to the rise of wages, chiefly in towns, is that the number of persons in the enjoyment of the higher category of income is lower in regard to the total number of taxpayers. Here are the figures in detail, showing the rapid growth of the lower categories of taxable incomes:

The number of persons with incomes ranging from 900 to 3,000 marks has advanced from 2,701,209 in 1899 to 2,963,213 in 1900, so that they now make 87.74 per cent. of the total taxpayers. Incomes varying between 3,000 and 6,000 marks have risen from 251,169 to 265,591; those from 6,000 to 9,500 marks from 57,232 to 60,840; from 30,500 to 100,000 marks from 11,629 to 12,580; while incomes of more than 100,000 marks have increased from 2,331 to 2,652.

ENGLISH CATHOLICS AND THE VATICAN.—In regard to the recent address made by the Duke of Norfolk to the Pope, the Italian press have shown that it was not so ignorant concerning the real status of the Duke as had been feared by certain London newspapers. Most of the non-clerical Italian papers treat the affair as simply a personal matter, one of incoherence, bad taste, and ignorance of international etiquette on the part of the representative of English Catholics, and concur in believing that the chief organs of public opinion in England will promptly disavow an utterance tantamount to a wanton attack both upon the institutions of a friendly State and upon the principle of religious freedom, "in virtue of which Catholics in England and Protestants in Italy enjoy full liberty."

The Italie says simply: "We deeply regret the conduct of the Duke of Norfolk, who, forgetful of the hospitality of a country friendly to Great Britain, expressed a desire for the re-establishment of the temporal power and attacked religious liberty."

The Popolo Romano says: "When the clerical press, inspired by the Vatican, sympathized with the Boers, the Duke of Norfolk protested against this attitude, which hurt the feelings of his countrymen. The Duke has changed his views on coming to Rome, and wounds the feelings of the Italian nation."

La Tribuna di Roma is believed to have indicated the true explanation of the Duke of Norfolk's attitude. It publishes the full text of a letter addressed to its editor by the Duke, in which the statement is made that the reason of the presence of the English pilgrims in Rome was solely that of "doing honor to the Pope, and being by his side in maintaining the rights of Holy Church." La Tribuna, by a careful comparison of the Duke's address with the reply made by Leo XIII., suggests that the Pope was not only fully acquainted with what the Duke was going to say, but that the latter's speech was inspired or dictated directly by the Roman Curia, as is abundantly revealed by internal evidence. Hence the conclusion is reached that the Duke of Norfolk, in making his indiscreet address, did not speak so much as an Englishman as the mouthpiece of the Roman Curia.

THE FRENCH SHORE QUESTION, AS VIEWED BY THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT.—What is believed to indicate that the French Government has no intention of giving up its shore rights in Newfoundland is found in a certain passage in a speech recently delivered by the French Foreign Minister, M. Delcassé, in the Senate, in response to an interpellation made by Senator Garreau on the foreign policy of France. He said:

"It is impossible for me, as Minister for Foreign Affairs, to speak on any particular point of our foreign policy every time that the press chooses to open a controversy. The procedure would be only a too convenient method of ascertaining the ideas of the Government. As to Newfoundland, I can only repeat what I have previously said in the Chamber—in Newfoundland our rights are unquestioned; nothing prevents their being exercised. I do not think any indication of a possible abandonment of our rights can be seen in this."

On the following day after the reply in the Senate, Le Temps, in what is believed to be an inspired article, went into further details in refuting the idea that France would give up her shore rights in exchange for Gambia. The truth is," said Le Temps, "no one in France dreams of Gambia. The trade of this colony is, for the most part, in our hands already. On the West Coast of Africa, in Gambia and Sierra Leone, we are beating the English on their own ground, and we have our doubts whether our traders would much care to see this region become French territory. * * * There is no Gambia question for any one in France; nor is there a French shore question, for, as M. Delcassé has said, 'Our rights there are incontestable and uncontested,' and there is nothing to prevent their being exercised.'"

Nevertheless, Le Temps shows that it fully understands the English point of view, for it adds: "We feel, therefore, that it behooves France to show herself conciliatory if she is asked to accept an agreement in order to correct what the progress of time has made abnormal. Treaties must not be inverted. We feel no necessity for a change, and no one, therefore, should suppose that it is we who intend to pay the piper."

THE CONSUMPTION OF MILK IN PARIS.—Several of the Paris papers have lately commented upon the local increase of what they term "the milk habit"; that is, the drinking of a glass or two of milk at the period before dinner known as the "apéritif" hour. The change that has gradually been wrought in substituting milk for absinthe is said to be owing to the increase in open-air exercise among Frenchmen which produces a "craving for milk rather than for liquer." Most of the cafés, particularly those on the way to the Bois, are now supplied with sealed bottles of milk, and in some places a cow is kept in the window, with a sign informing the thirsty bicyclist or automobilist that "milk made on the premises is the purest in Paris."

The subject of milk adulteration is just now receiving the attention of the health authorities of Paris, and Dr. H. de Rothschild has recommended that special inspectors be employed to examine all milk sold, although he deems that the danger of tuberculous infection from milk drinking is really less than is commonly imagined. Winter Sleep.

The ancient Earth is still Heavy with Winter sleep;
And as a man grown rich
Delights in memories
Of his old poverty,
He sees him off, in dream,
In tattered gabardine,
Bereft of all his wealth,
Naked before the stars,
Asking an alms of Heaven.

And, masquerading thus,
He thinks with secret joy
Of his rich treasure-house
Heaped up with precious ore
Of yet unmilled leaves,
Where, worked by willing slaves,
The urgent shuttles fly,
Shedding from unseen looms
The wondrous woven webs
And stainless vestments
For which are dyes distilled
In crucibles occult
From sunset blazonries;
And where have hushed increase
The unbreathed melodies,
The uncensed incenses,
The wild unburgeoned pomp
And pageantry of Spring.

Thus, as a King disguised
In garb of beggary,
His unsuspected robes
Concealed by piteous rags,
He threads the ways of space;
And naked are his arms,
And empty are his hands;
While oft he hides his mirth
When alms are thrown to him,
And ruth is moved by sight
Of his great poverty.

Great Britain, France, and War.

W. Laird Clowes in The Nineteenth Century.

In the event of war between Great Britain and France the first and most important part of the struggle would be for the command of the sea. Should Great Britain succeed in retaining the command of the sea, France would thereby be reduced to a condition of impotence so far as offensive operations are concerned, and would sooner or later be obliged to submit to the will of her rival, although, it is true, the war might last for a long time. If, on the other hand, France should succeed in wresting from Great Britain the command of the sea, and in keeping it, Great Britain would be so much more hopeless and impotent than France in similar plight would be, that the war would terminate quickly. In a word, France, even without the command of the sea or anything approaching to it, remains capable of prolonged resistance, firstly, because she is a self-supporting country; secondly, because the French national sentiment and strength are already concentrated within her borders, and, thirdly, because she stands among the best equipped of the military powers, while Great Britain, deprived of the command of the sea, would collapse with relative rapidity, firstly, because she is in no sense a self-supporting country; secondly, because her national sentiment and strength are scattered over the world and cannot be concentrated, save by way of the sea, and, thirdly, because she is not a military power, according to the standard set up by Germany, France, Russia, and Austria-Hungary.

The Athenian of To-day.

From Scribner's.

The Athenians dine late the year round, and, whenever the weather will permit, in the open air. As the heated season advances, the dinner hour is set later and later, until in August 9:30 or 10 becomes the common thing. Fancy going to the theatre after that! Yet the open-air performances are liberally patronized, and they do not begin, of course, until after dinner. The legend "curtain rises promptly at 9" is a snare and a delusion, as many a foreigner has found to his extreme annoyance.

The out-of-door dining and the sky-roofed theatres are so typically Greek that they serve as a link between the old and the typical times. The old Greek, as everybody knows, was an outdoor man; his house serving as little more than a sleeping place and storeroom. The Athenian of to-day dines in a garden, on his terrace, or in a park. If he is too poor to possess any of these accessories, he sets his table upon the sidewalk. Many of the cheap restaurants appropriate the walks for dining rooms. One is often compelled, when taking an evening stroll, to dodge up and down among dozens of tables covered with reasonably clean linen and lighted by means of candles, whose flames are protected from the wind by means of glass globes.

Besieged in Peking.

Miss Cecilia E. Payen in The Century.

Aug. 14—10 A. M.—We passed the most dreadful night of the whole siege. We were grouped together as closely as possible, and had to yell at the top of our voices to make ourselves heard. It is one of the mysteries of the siege that we are still of this world. We had our five cannon going, and many large guns were being fired upon us from the Imperial wall. At 2 o'clock everybody was up. There was a welcome sound far off, making us feel that relief was near, or many would have collapsed at this terrible moment. One German was killed, and Mitchell, our crack gunner, was badly wounded during the night. Poor fellow! he has been so brave, and we are so proud of him, that it is too bad that he should become disabled just when relief is at hand.

As I write this the cannon of our troops can be distinctly heard; it is like a distant roar of continual thunder. Everybody in this compound is so excited that we hardly know what we are doing.

Aug. 15—7 A. M.—Joy, joy! Saved at last! Our relief came yesterday at 3 P. M. The Sikhs, 4,000 East Indians, under the British, were the first to march into the compound. I do not know who was the happier, the relievers or the relieved, for they hurrahed more than we, and seemed so proud and happy to find any of us still alive. Oh, what a sight! Such wild excitement, such shouting, and such mad joy among the people! Never were soldiers more welcome. Following the Sikhs came the British, then 1,800 Americans under Gen. Chaffee. How tired and worn our poor fellows did look! Hearing the dreadful firing upon us last night, they thought it would be impossible for us to hold out, so they forced the marching.

Mary Caton Patterson.

From The Ladies' Home Journal.

The Americans read with wondering eyes the stories which came from Ireland of the regal magnificence with which one of their countrywomen was dazzling the British people; how she had become the wife of the brother of the Duke of Wellington, and how the Court of the newly wedded pair at Dublin Castle rivaled the brilliancy of royalty itself. She was called "The American Queen of the Irish Court," and in no capital of Europe would her flatterers allow that there was a woman who surpassed her in the elegance of her bearing and in the accomplishments of a sovereign. Indeed, she was only one of a group of sisters whom Europeans hailed as "The American Graces." Their mother, a daughter of Charles Carroll, had married Richard Caton, a poor English gentleman of handsome face and presence, who settled in Baltimore. Mary, the most famous of the three daughters, married Robert Patterson, a brother of Betsy Patterson, the first wife of Jerome Bonaparte. After the death of her husband, in 1822, the Baltimore belle revisited Europe. Hardly less eminent than the Duke of Wellington before the battle of Waterloo had been his brother, the Marquis of Wellesley. In the Spring of 1825 it was announced in Ireland, where Wellesley was Lord Lieutenant, that he was engaged to her, and it was noted in the United States as a curious coincidence that while one American girl had married the brother of Napoleon, another, and she her sister-in-law, should marry the brother of Napoleon's conqueror.

What China Might Do.

From The American Catholic Quarterly Review.

The part which China itself may take in the struggle is still harder to anticipate. At the present her people seem hopeless against modern war, with its scientific weapons and careful discipline; but France seemed scarcely more likely to successfully resist the armies of Europe when Brunswick issued his famous proclamation. The last twenty-five years have given ample illustration that in war the unexpected is always liable to happen. Modern discipline and arms did not save the Italian Army from crushing defeat by the warriors of Abyssinia nor the British-led Egyptians under Hicks Pasha from annihilation by the Dervishes. The Boer war, where 200,000 British soldiers have been needed to conquer a population of 300,000 all told, is a still more striking instance of the uncertainties of war, even under modern conditions. The possibilities latent in the 400,000,000 of Chinese are enormously greater than were those in the 25,000,000 of revolutionary France. That the people have little of the military spirit of Western nations at present is true, but it is no guarantee that it may not be awakened in them as in other men by aggression carried too far. The Taiping rebellion and the Black Flags of Southern China are hints that the fighting spirit is not wholly absent from Chinese natures. The Russians to the time of Peter the Great were as little regarded as soldiers by their European neighbors as the Chinese to-day. A King of Sweden, in the eighteenth century, scattered 50,000 of Peter's best troops with 8,000 Swedes at Narva. The same monarch traversed the whole of Russia as a conqueror with 40,000 men. The Russian peasantry to-day are as peaceable and scarcely more advanced in civilization than in the days of Peter, but the best soldiers of the world, from Frederick of Prussia to Napoleon, have found conquerors in the once despised Russian armies. The Mongol tribes, now a part of the Chinese Empire, have entered Europe as conquerors at least three times in modern history. The dominion of Kublai Khan and his successors for two centuries reached from the Yellow Sea to the Dnieper, and the Princes of Russia had to seek their investiture with power in a Tartar camp. It seems not impossible that the descendants of the old conquerors may learn the use of arms again as readily, at least, as the Russians have done already.

Education in Berlin.

From Harper's Bazar.

Berlin has conceived a novel plan of furthering the right development of children. This provides for an interchange of city and country children. Thus the poorer classes of Berlin, who cannot afford family outings, are enabled to send their children to the country, and in exchange they receive the children from the country home, who thus are provided with the liberal education town life affords. Reciprocal selfish interest in their own prompts considerate treatment of the visiting children in each home. The plan works so successfully the intention now is to extend it, and make it international, establishing an exchange of children between different countries. The question arises in the American mind, Why have homes at all under this system? Turn children over to State institutions, and let the work of modern education smoothly proceed without the slightest obstacle which preservation of the family ideal imposes.

The Deep Sea Pearl.

The love of my life came not
As love unto others is cast;
For mine was a secret wound—
But the wound grew a pearl, at last.

The divers may come and go.
The tides, they arise and fall;
The pearl in its shell lies sealed,
And the Deep Sea covers all.
—EDITH M. THOMAS in Harper's Bazar.

Napoleon En Route for St. Helena.

From The Gentleman's Magazine.

Tuesday, 15.—Napoleon's birthday. The Admiral complimented him on the occasion, and his attendants appeared in dress uniforms.

After dinner a long conversation took place which turned on the intended invasion of England. He asserted that it was always his intention to have attempted it. For this purpose he sent Villeneuve with his fleet to the West Indies, with orders to refresh at one of the French isles, to return without loss of time, and immediately to push up the Channel, taking with him the Brest fleet as he passed. It was supposed that this trip would have withdrawn the attention of our fleets. Twenty thousand men were ready at Boulogne to embark at a moment's notice. Under cover of this fleet he calculated he could have debarked this army in twenty-four hours.

The landing was to have taken place as near London as possible; he was to have put himself at the head of it, and have made a push for the capital. He added: "I put all to the hazard; I entered into no calculation as to the manner in which I was to return; I trusted all to the impression the occupation of the capital would have occasioned. Conceive then my disappointment when I found that Villeneuve, after a drawn battle with Calder, had stood for Cadiz—he might as well have gone back to the West Indies. I made one further attempt to get my fleet into the Channel, but Nelson destroyed it at the battle of Trafalgar, and I then, as you know, fell with my whole force on Austria, who was unprepared for this sudden attack, and you remember how well I succeeded."

At cards this evening he was successful, winning nearly 80 napoleons; he evidently tried to lose it again. He was in good spirits at the idea of success on his birthday, having been always of an opinion that some days are more fortunate than others. It was nearly 11 o'clock when he left the card table.

A Boer Marksman.

From "Shadows of the War."—Dosia Baghot.

The Boer officer, who was observed by others that day picking out our officers, was for some time within a few yards of him. Fraser saw no less than five officers fall to his unerring aim, and so long as they showed the slightest signs of life, he continued to fire at them. In the intervals the Boer marksman walked perfectly leisurely about, pipe in mouth, then stopped again, knocked out the ashes of his pipe, picked out another victim, and aimed long and deliberately at him. With the rank and file he did not concern himself at all, he only shot at our officers. He seemed to feel no fear at all. A lyddite shell fell just a little way behind him and burst. He turned his head and calmly watched it, then moved on with a contemptuous shrug of his shoulders. Fraser thought he must be a German; he was smartly dressed in long boots and breeches, his coat was off, and he wore a silk shirt with diamonds gleaming in his sleeve links.

To Saint Valentine.

Saint Valentine, though wide your fame
You don't deserve your pious name,
And this the reason of my plaint—
Your conduct misbefits a saint.

From youthtime up to middle age
I've catered for your patronage,
But ever since we've been acquaint
You haven't acted like a saint.

For when comes around, as fixed as fate,
The day which you appropriate,
You give me cause for new complaint
In manner most unlike a saint.

I long have sued for Mabel's smiles
And yielded to her costly wiles,
But ardent lines or bauble quaint
Alike are spurned—ungrateful saint!

Your halo's rimmed with many a dart;
Your symbol is a wounded heart;
Fond swains you lure with artful feint,
Such actions don't become a saint.

Your name no longer should appear
In saintly calendar, 'tis clear,
For I affirm, without restraint,
You're more a sinner than a saint.

Pain and Its Service.

From The Contemporary Review.

The wounded oyster mends its pain by making pearls out of it, but only in the medium of sun and sea. Pain draws out hidden virtues from our nature when we receive the environment of the infinite as devout men, like Aeschylus and Hosea in the ancient world. Deeper and more hidden virtues have been drawn out in the modern world by the environment of Christ crucified. We find ourselves greater than we had thought. We have awakened to a sympathy with the eternal and a sympathy with humanity in which we have become martyrs, missionaries, philanthropists. We find this body not worthy of us, and we have been assured of a worthier; we feel the world too narrow, and have found a larger. We reconcile the sorrow and the splendor that are here, and these with the splendor that is to be. We take our education calmly, patiently, hopefully.

We are qualified for service by suffering. The man who carries the rankling memory of a great sickness, who has stood on the edge of the mire in which so many have sunk, on whom has fallen the shadow of the grave, in whose years a tragedy is set which he wished had not been, who has struggled against denial and hindrance, whose theology has been human with heresy—he is the man whose voice has the notes which touch the troubled and shaded soul. The clergyman who goes into cottage and villa with healing words and a sunny face carries a wounded heart; the physician whose prescription has a virtue goes into the sickroom carrying our sicknesses; he who can be trusted in need has known misery. He who will lead others must have lost his way some time among the hills and glens. Resignation easily passes into an arid fatalism, but when suffering has produced this ministry of service it is sweetened.

The Tearful Mr. Stead.

From Blackwood.

Mr. Stead's documents have a kind of psychological value. They reveal a character happily rare in the world's experience—a character of arrogant sentimentality. With nothing but a sanguine temper and a flood of tears to back him, Mr. Stead is ready and anxious to rule the world. He would establish himself as an amateur Providence; he would interfere with all men's business, and brook no interference himself. Many years ago he defined government as a glorified eavesdropping. He would have an ear—his own as often as possible—at every keyhole, and by adroitly using the information thus collected he would compel even his enemies acquiescence. Wherefore his friends have called him "good," and truly he is good" with a "goodness" which most men would avoid. For instance, he does not count among his virtues the faculty of sifting truth from falsehood. He thinks it not improper to bring charges which he cannot substantiate, and when, with an active printing press to aid him, he would calumniate large classes of valiant, self-sacrificing men, he does not shrink from anonymous slander.

Prussia, Bavaria, Wuertemberg.

From The Gentleman's Magazine.

With the acceptance of the imperial title at Versailles in 1871, on the very day when, 170 years before, Frederick I. had adopted the royal name at Königsberg, it might have seemed that the separate history of Prussia had merged in that of the German Empire. But such is not altogether the case. People scarcely realize even now outside of Germany that the German Empire is really a federation of sovereign States, and that the Emperor—be it observed "German Emperor," not "Emperor of Germany" or "of the Germans"—is merely the hereditary President of that federation. The separate Parliaments co-exist in the component States together with the Imperial Parliament, in which they are each represented in proportion to population, and with the Federal Council, in which they are each represented as States. That Prussia, which embraces nearly 67 per cent. of the total area, and nearly 61 per cent. of the whole population of Germany, should have the largest individual number of votes in both these two Imperial bodies, and should have an actual majority in the former of them, is only fair. But there have been times when the smaller States have been able to carry their way against Prussian wishes in the Federal Council, while in the separate State Legislatures, and especially in that of Bavaria, there is still a considerable amount of local, as opposed to national, feeling. In spite of considerable pressure, Bavaria and Wuertemberg still cling to their own postage stamps, and such incidents as the prompt repudiation of the tactless remark that the non-Prussian Princes who went in 1896 with Prince Henry to the coronation festivities of the present Czar were his "suite," and the resentment felt by the smaller States at the Emperor's more recent intervention in the Lippe-Detmold succession, are proofs that "particularism" is not dead, even after thirty years of empire. On the other hand, the appointment of a former Bavarian Premier as Chancellor in the person of Prince Hohenlohe, and of a Badenser as Minister for Foreign Affairs in that of Baron von Marschall, showed that the very highest posts in the empire are not regarded as the prerogatives of "the predominant partner."

A Strolling Singer.

"He sang along the woodland paths
When all the world was warm and gay,
The birds half mocked him overhead,
The shadows cooled his greenlit way.

"The earth was sweet with growing things,
The vintage promised full and fair;
And one with eyes like larkspur buds,
And garnered sunshine in her hair

"Stood watching by the ilex trees,
A glow, a welcome in her eyes.
He sank, too tired, at her feet
And smiled through wistful little sighs.

"'Dear love,' he said, 'I cannot live,
I shall not see the morrow's sun,
But I am fortunate to die
While yet my loving is not done.

"'And weep no foolish tears for me,
But when the vines with gold are hung—
Think "Life was very good to him
For he had lived, and loved, and sung."'"
—CHARLOTTE BECKER in Ainslee's Magazine.

Ugly English Electioneering Ways.

From Good Words.

Mr. Bouverie, who sat for the Kilmarnock burghs and was a well-known figure in the House of Commons, referring in later years to such occasions, said that he remembered many exciting hustings scenes, but he thought that the Ayrshire nomination of 1852 was the greatest scene of tumult that he had ever witnessed. At Kidderminster, in 1857, such was the violence of the crowd at the declaration of the poll that Mr. Lewe narrowly escaped death from stoning, and only found safety by the circumstance that the master of the grammar school, whose house was close by, unlocked a garden door, which the newly elected member hastily entered, his head streaming with blood.

There will be those who can recall the altercation time after time between Lord Palmerston and a butcher, on the hustings at Tiverton, when the aged statesman, ever ready with reply, effectually discomfited his opponent. At the nomination at Rothesay in 1868 the mill girls were, according to custom, set free from work, and maintained a continuous uproar, which prevented speakers from being heard. A piece of iron was flung at the hustings, and must have killed any one whom it had chanced to strike. At the declaration of the poll on a later day, a well-known inhabitant jerked the arm of a reporter all the time that the newly elected member was speaking, so that not one word could be taken down, and at the close of the ceremony the member and the reporter retired to a hotel, where the speech was redelivered in peace. At a nomination at Heddington, when Lord Elcho (now Lord Wemyss) and Mr. George Hope of Fenton Barns contested the county, a great disturbance prevented Lord Elcho from being heard on the hustings. He jocularly declared that he was in no hurry, as he was not going to London till night, and that he would meanwhile smoke a cigar. Having lit up, he threw the contents of his cigar case among the crowd, and a shower of stones was the response to his ill-timed generosity.

Lucrative Patents.

From The Century.

One of the old examiners in the Patent Office estimates that about one invention in twenty-five repays the cost of taking out a patent. Yet inventors as a class are sanguine men, and no knowledge of the enormous percentage of chances against them will deter them from multiplying ingenious devices. Every one expects a fortune from his particular piece of mechanism. Every one has heard not only of the enormous sums realized from the great inventions of the last half century, but also of the large returns yielded by things apparently trifling which have struck the public fancy or met the public need. The toy called the returning ball, a small ball attached to an elastic string, is said to have produced a profit of $50,000 a year; the rubber tip on lead pencils has yielded a competence to the inventor; more than $1,000,000 has been earned by the gimlet-pointed screw, the inventor of which was so poor that he trudged on foot from Philadelphia to Washington to get his patent; the roller skate has yielded $1,000,000 after the patentee spent $125,000 in England fighting infringements; the dancing Jim Crow is set down for $75,000, and the copper tip for children's shoes at $2,000,000; the spring window roller pays $100,000 a year, the needle threader $10,000 a year; from the drive well $3,000,000 has been realized; the stylographic pen is credited with $100,000 a year; and the egg beater, the rubber stamp, and the marking pan for shading different colors with large sums. These are only a few examples among hundreds that might be cited. No wonder inventors are hopeful when they reflect that comfort for life and fortune for their children may come from a single fortunate idea.

Coal Exports.

Louis Windmueller in The North American Review.

The annual exports of coal and coke from Great Britain aggregate nearly 50,000,000 tons. Our exports probably will reach 8,000,000 tons for 1900, against 5,000,000 tons for 1899. We exported in the first nine months of 1900, to Europe alone, some 500,000 tons of coal, against 19,316 tons during the same period in 1899. In 1900 the cost of our coal was about $2.50, and the freight to the Mediterranean ports, where we have begun to compete with England, amounts to $5—in some cases to $5.75—per ton. These freights have been especially high, because the demand for steamers to carry coal has been greater than the supply. If a sufficient number of vessels could be found gradually to reduce the freight to normal rates, not only could we, in all probability, satisfy the urgent demand which prevails now, but the export of coal, which we can mine for less money than English operators, might permanently be extended to countries which heretofore have been supplied by England, and which England now finds it difficult to supply, since the demand for English coal by English manufacturers has increased. The price for English coal has gradually advanced in consequence.

Upward.

For off the mountaintops glimmer, the gloom of the storm-cloud gathers—
Slowly we rise from the lower, hardly the higher attain;
Were it not better to linger here on the hills of our fathers?
On the green slopes, won by our fathers, were it not well to remain?

Nay, 'tis the counsel of laggards, sighing for ease without ending,
Slothful of soul and ignoble, less kin to the peak than the plain—
Shall it be told that we halted, faln to be done with ascending,
Inglorious sons of our fathers, content to inherit their gain?

Let us, with stout hearts daunted by the arduous heights no longer,
Climb toward the distant summit nor faint on the upward way;
Throughout the toils we are now enduring our children will spring the stronger,
They will win triumphs to-morrow, if stanch we have striven to-day.
—A. C. MARTIN in Good Words.

The Dwarfs, Uganda.

From The Geographical Journal.

The Dwarfs are of two types—black-skinned, with a good deal of stiff, curling black hair about the body, and red or yellow skinned, with a tendency to redness in the hair of the head and yellowish-gray in the hair growing on the body. Some of the Dwarfs, especially when young, had quite hairy bodies, and the women not infrequently had incipient whiskers. Sir H. Johnston arrived at the conclusion that these Congo Dwarfs no longer speak an original language of their own, but talk in a slightly corrupted form the language of the taller negroes, in whose vicinity they dwell. All the Dwarfs examined by him spoke either the Mbuba or the Kibira language. The Kibira is a very debased form of Bantu speech, which is widely spoken by the forest tribes from near the Semliki River to the vicinity of the Congo. The Mbuba language, on the other hand, is not Bantu, but approximates more to the Soudan languages spoken to the north of the Bantu language field. But in speaking either language the Dwarfs introduce curious "hiatuses" into their pronunciation, which bear a strong resemblance to the clicks in Bushman and Hottentot. They also speak in a curious and very marked sing-song. Among physical features which specially distinguish them from their neighbors is the large size and flatness of the nose. This organ has scarcely any bridge, and the wings of the nose are very large. The Dwarfs also have a very long upper lip, which is scarcely, if at all, everted. In many other points they exhibit apelike features, but their intelligence is as a rule well developed, and though hideously ugly and often very apelike in appearance, they are usually of a winning and cheerful disposition, while their dances are so frolicsome and gay and full of pretty movements as to distinguish them markedly in that respect from the average negro. They also have a good idea of singing, and form themselves into little companies of minstrels, bearing a far-off resemblance to those of St. James's Hall. In these performances they generally prefer to remain seated, and in this position they dance with their arms and legs and backs and stomachs in the drollest fashion, singing loudly at the same time chants of a more or less pleasing nature.

"So On."

From Chambers's Journal.

Lady Dorothy Nevill, one of the wittiest women in London society, is well known to most Americans who visit London during the season. Some time ago there was a rich and ambitious man in society who went in for entertaining largely, and especially for making his parties interesting and representative. A marked falling off began to take place after a while in the quality of his guests. Lady Dorothy, commenting on this deterioration, said, "Once we used to meet Browning and Whistler and Henry James, and so on, there; but now we only meet—so on."

An Epitaph.

From Notes and Queries.

In the churchyard of Leigh, near Bolton, will be found a tombstone bearing the following amazing sentence: "A virtuous woman is 5s. to her husband." The explanation seems to be that space prevented "a crown" being cut in full, and the stonemason argued that a crown equals 5s.

The Doukhobortsi.

From The Gentleman's Magazine.

Like most of the Russian sectarians, the Doukhobortsi commit little or nothing to writing; indeed, it is related of them that until recently the only book dealing with their faith was a bitter satire written by an Orthodox professor of the University of Kief, which they in their simplicity accepted in all good faith as a concise statement of their doctrine, indeed as their Thirty-nine Articles, and were duly thankful for. When the press censor had prohibited the further sale of the pamphlet, on the ground that it was calculated to spread the heresy, they managed secretly to buy up all the unissued copies at a high premium, and so brought much grist to the mill of the man who had but tried to hold up their creed to ridicule. This absence of matter written by themselves of themselves renders it difficult for writers—even such as Leroy-Beaulieu, to whose "Empire of the Tsars" I am so much indebted for many of the facts here given—to arrive at the origin of the sect; but it is generally held that the main ideas which underlie their simple faith were imported from Western Europe about 150 years ago, but by whom or from what country authorities differ. Perhaps the most probable of all the origins suggested is that which assumes the teaching of Moravian or Puritan prisoners of war, who undoubtedly settled in the hamlets of Southeastern Tsarland. In his "Russian Peasantry" M. Dragomanov tells us that on the official discovery of the sect, in 1757, its leadera were asked by the police master how they came by their belief, and replied, from a certain military man who staid with them at Okhochee, in the Government of Kharkov, for many years, but had then gone away no one knew whither. Name, nor creed, nor nationality of this stranger was ever disclosed, but he is thought by many to have been a Quaker taken during the Seven Years' campaign.

The Hindu and Christianity.

Protap Chunder Mozoomdar in The Nineteenth Century.

During the last twenty-five years a great change is observable in the attitude of our people toward Christianity. They have certainly great reverence for the life and teachings of Christ; they have largely outgrown the old prejudice against studying the Bible. They do not, indeed, accept the Christ of popular theology, but they believe in the spirit of Christ. We hold that by worshipping God Christ teaches us how to worship, by loving God he teaches us the love of God and man, by devoutly suffering and dying he teaches us the great truth of resignation to the will of God. In no country as in India has there been such an apotheosis of great men. The warrior, the King, the saint—nay, whoever has shown any great excellence—is set down as divine, as the incarnation of God. The divinity of man therefore does not startle the Hindu mind. We believe, in the Brahmo Somaj, that the divinity of Christ is only an intensified form of that doctrine. If God's excellence dwells in every man more or less, the greatest human excellence, as it dwelt in Christ, is nothing more than the incarnation of the Deity in the highest sense. But every teacher is not the same as every other, and the divine humanity of Christ as the Son of God is not the same as the divine humanity of every other teacher, and God dwells in him as He dwelt in no other. Yet Christ is our kith and kin, very different in the degree of his perfection, but always imitable and attainable. We believe that the uniqueness of Christ does not lie in his being the Almighty Eternal Creator, but in his identification with what is deepest and divinest in every man and woman. The wisdom of the wise is strange to the ignorance of the foolish, the holiness of the saint repudiates the impurity of the sinner, but the light and love of Christ include the foolish and the fallen if they are only willing to receive His love. The Jew excluded the Gentile, the Hindu excluded the Mlechha, the Greek excluded the barbarian, but the Christ ideal embraces all races and all creeds alike. To many of us in the Brahmo Somaj the Christ ideal is the type of all human excellence. Nor do we believe Christ to be an abstract ideal only, but a historical and personal life. This life is the presence and force of God in the actual manhood of the world. It existed in men before Christ was born, and it has entered into men after Christ's death.

Victor Hugo, Artist.

Paul Meurice in Harper's Magazine.

Victor Hugo never learned how to draw. In 1825, at the time of his tour through Switzerland, he had taken on his album a few sketches, which he himself characterized as "naïfs," but these of course were merely souvenirs of travel.

He was more than thirty years old when, strolling one day with a friend toward the environs of Paris—to Monfort l'Amaury, I think—he stopped suddenly before a superb old crumbling tower.

"What a magnificent ruin!" he exclaimed. "It ought to be transferred to paper. I am going to sketch it this minute."

Seating himself on a stone, he took out his pencil.

"You know, then, how to draw?" asked the friend.

"My faith, no! Nevertheless, I shall make an attempt just the same."

The essay proved not altogether successful; in fact, it was decidedly naïf, wavering, and crude. The friend, who was looking over the amateur artist's shoulder, burst out laughing. Victor Hugo smiled himself as he destroyed the leaf containing the scrawl.

"You perceive that one must learn how," said the friend. "Without having been taught, how can you draw the lines correctly, place the light and shade, determine the plans, establish the perspective?"

"Very good," replied Victor Hugo. "But when one learns the art by himself it suffices to simply observe. Nature is, after all, the best teacher. It is necessary that I should draw; I will draw."

He possessed a strong will, as well as the gift of perception. In succeeding excursions he produced further drawings, that grew less and less imperfect and uncertain. After the tenth he no longer destroyed his sketch; after the twentieth he was sure of his point of view and sure of his hand. In short, he knew how to draw; he did draw.

The Unprepared Wife.

From The Woman's Home Companion.

The normal girl naturally looks forward to the time when she will have the care of home, husband, and children, yet sad to say, she is often wholly unprepared to assume the responsibilities when they come to her. To presume to make a home and care for a family without preparation is parallel to a physician attempting the practice of medicine without study, and with the expectation of gaining knowledge from experiments on his patients. We would be horrified at the temerity of such a physician, and yet we complacently leave our girls without instruction in reference to the highest, holiest duty of womanhood. Under these circumstances can we wonder that many homes are absolute failures?

One of the first things a girl should be taught is that wealth and social position count for nothing unless united with purity of thought and life and honesty of purpose. Until such standards are required by young women in choosing their husbands the marriage relation cannot be what God intended it to be—the highest type of earthly happiness.

Points for the Twentieth Century.

From The Saturday Review.

The Archbishop of Canterbury was as wise as he was humorous and modest when he said recently, in reply to a question as to what he thought the most dangerous tendency of the future, that he had not the slightest idea. In his New Year's sermon, however, he showed that his reticence in speaking of future evils, apprehended by some dispirited persons, was due to the fact that he himself is impressed much more by the promise and potency of active conscious efforts in changing present conditions in the direction of good, than he is by any prospect of an unconscious degradation into evil, or of an outbreak of purely destructive nihilism. He spoke of the hoped-for cessation of the conflict between science and religion, and of the approach of the time when the claims of Christianity on all the nations of the earth would have actually been presented by Christian missionaries. The thought seems to be this. During the past century in England, a progressive nation where scientific thought and all forms of speculation are free, Christianity has passed through one of the most serious conflicts between science and religion that it has ever encountered. In that conflict many extraneous ideas which were thought to be of the essence of the faith have disappeared, and merely vulgar and popular superetitions have perished. Christianity has no longer to act on the defensive against attacks supposed to be subversive of the very foundations of her system of doctrine. Probably for an indefinite period the energies of the Church will be relieved from the paralysis consequent on confirmed skepticism. It would follow from this that, as the Church in her ages of faith has always measured her faith by the fervor of her missionary spirit, now at the beginning of the twentieth century we should look for a great extension of missionary enterprise.

German Teachers.

From The National Review.

The German man is often a "teacher by the grace of God," and when he brings all his patience, pedagogical training, and innate sympathy with children to bear upon his task of teaching he is undoubtedly a success. I have been told by educational authorities in Germany—men, of course; the German women are not authorities—that women have neither the ability nor the necessary knowledge to rank with men in the teaching profession, and one often looks in vain for women teachers in the schools until one penetrates into the needlework classes. This practice of having men teachers in girls' schools has probably largely influenced the girls' answers. German men have conspired to discourage in every way female aspirations beyond the four walls of her own home, and to exalt, as the ideal of womanhood, the meek and docile housewife.

FINANCIAL.

$2,250,000 Stock
BRUNSWICK HOTEL COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

The Brunswick Hotel Company of New York proposes to purchase the old Brunswick property and adjacent estates on the corner of Fifth Avenue and Madison Square, New York, consisting of the entire frontage on Fifth Avenue and 130 feet deep on both 26th and 27th Streets, containing about 26,000 square feet, and construct thereon a first-class fire-proof, eighteen-story, 900-room, modern hotel, according to plans prepared by Henry Ives Cobb, Architect.

A lease of the property will be arranged for ninety-nine years at an annual rental of $285,000 and taxes, insurance, and repairs.

FINANCIAL PLAN.

Total investment, land, buildings, &c		$4,750,000
Mortgage	$2,500,000
22,500 shares at $100 each	2,250,000
		4,750,000
Rental		$285,000
4 per cent. interest on $2,500,000 mortgage	$100,000
5 per cent interest on $2,250,000 stock	112,500	$212,500
Surplus		$72,500

Or, the Directors may, if in their judgment it seems advisable, make a mortgage for $3,000,000 at 4 1-2 per cent., in which case the plan will be as follows:

Total investment, land, buildings, &c.		$4,750,000
Mortgage, $3,000,000 at 4 1-2 per cent.
Stock, 1,750,000
Net rental		$285,000
Interest on mortgage	$135,000
Interest on stock, 5 per cent	$7,500
	$222,500	222,500
Surplus		$62,500

Inasmuch as the tenant pays all expenses except the administration of the Company, the net surplus can be applied to a sinking fund that will probably retire the mortgage in less than twenty years, according to the first financial plan, and a few years longer by the second plan.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 26.—Boston trading was quiet; a feature was strong buying of Dominion Iron and Steel, carrying it up 1, to 23, while Dominion Coal rose 1, to 35½. The general market, while quiet, was firm. National Tube was bought well, and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy was in good request. Père Marquette preferred rose 1, to 77, and Boston Elevated 1½, to 164. Baltic Mining touched 34, rallying to 35, and Massachusetts Electric was strong at 24⅞.

Money loaned at the local Clearing House to-day at 3 per cent., with more offering than could be placed. New York funds sold at 5 and 8 cents premium. On call, money is easy at 3 per cent. to the best borrowers and 3½ per cent. to others. Time money ranged from 3½ to 4 per cent. on acceptable collateral for all dates. Year money is freely offered at 4 per cent., and the very choicest loans could be placed at 3½ per cent. for a year. In commercial paper the demand far exceeds the supply. Rates at 3¼@4 per cent.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 26.—The tone of the market to-day was moderately bullish save for a decline in Asphalt first fives to 60¼ near the end. Philadelphia Company common was the feature, advancing a point to 45, in anticipation of a 6 per cent. dividend rate. Marsden was firm, with a ¼ advance, the strength being attributed to the belief that new interests in the board and personnel of officers would result in much improvement. Philadelphia Electric held good around 7⅞. The Readings and Lehigh Valley were fractionally higher. Choctaw common was up to 38¼, and Bethlehem Iron sold at 60 for the first time in months.

As on yesterday the bond corner was in evidence, both firmness and activity being exhibited. Rates for money are ruling low, some loans for call money being made at 3½; 4 per cent. is the lowest quotation for time loans. The market's close was strong at the following bid and asked prices:

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

The security market is irregular. During the past week it has not been active. The professional talent of the Stock Exchange, including the regiment of lesser traders, hammered quotations vigorously, but they accomplished little. In so far as a market movement is concerned, no discernible influence has counted for much. The really big interests of the financial world seem content for a time to stay in repose, content to watch a laggard market for a while, content to see quotations see-saw over a slight range.

Wall Street has not lacked opportunities to interest itself, however, in matters of much consequence—each day having been abundantly supplied with sensational tales of impending deals of magnitude sandwiched 'twixt sensational representations of conflict between all the solvent interests of the country. J. P. Morgan, Mr. James J. Hill, Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Vanderbilt, Mr. Carnegie—and on through the list—have all been on the warpath during the recent romance days of the Street. It has chiefly pleased the rumor mongers to engage themselves with the iron and steel situation, and they have been able to expidit phenomenal collisions there—it being certain (if but one-half the current tales be true) that nothing like a profit could ever be hoped for in any branch of the iron and steel business from this time forward. Nine out of ten of these reports have been so ridiculous that it seems curious that any sane man in or out of Wall Street could give attention to the stuff; but there has been attention and there have been stock market effects, however much such results may seem strange.

The truth about the iron trade situation seems to be this: Some of the big iron and steel corporations have been treading upon one another's toes, and not at all unnaturally their managers have been awake each to his own interest, and under such circumstances there never yet was a time when competitors have not been disposed to swagger a little and make threats. Mr. Andrew Carnegie's intrusion upon this situation is in some ways exceptional. Strong enough to extend as he may choose in the iron and steel trade, he has suggested plans of development whose success would mean early bankruptcy for a number of lesser manufacturing corporations—and in some of the latter there are millions invested by eminent Wall Street financiers. Thus there has been hurried conclusion that Mr. Carnegie upon one side and Mr. Morgan and Mr. Rockefeller upon the other were about to engage in a bitter trade contest. Truthfully summarized, the fact is that all three of these gentlemen have from the start amply understood one another and have throughout been upon most amicable terms. Not one of them has ever made a penny fighting. All of them have fortunes made through cooperation, through the elimination of quarrelsome and conflicting factors, through the concentration of capital's opportunities. But from the stock market standpoint it has been just as well—so important financiers argue—for modifying theories to pass current, and we have had from no quarter any official denial of the foolish tales of Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Rockefeller willing to hurt themselves if only they could hurt one another.

Intrinsically the iron and steel trade has not at any time in the history of this country been in a condition so healthful as it is now.

Anthracite coal trade developments come slowly, but there is progress. Arrangements for a central selling agency are practically completed, and a net gain of thirty or fifty cents per ton can be added to the revenues of the coal properties—without the imposition of a single extra cent upon the price of coal to consumers.

Much Wall Street interest attaches to those negotiations which but recently were so much in evidence, but which later seemed wholly to disappear—having to do with the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad. St. Paul stock rose above 160 on Wall Street's belief that the common was to be benefited by a financial "deal," wherein Mr. Morgan, Mr. Rockefeller, and Mr. Hill were to bring the St. Paul and Great Northern and Northern Pacific roads, and probably two of the Eastern trunk lines, into one combination. Various reports were vouched for in Wall Street as to what was in prospect, the most popular representation having it that St. Paul common stock was to have a guarantee of six or seven per cent. dividends. But of a sudden "insiders" announced that no such deal had been undertaken, or had even been broached; and St. Paul stock fell twenty points. It has since recovered about half of its decline. The deal which was on at New Year's, and off a fortnight later, seems to be going again. Some official acknowledgment may be expected during the coming week.

What in this connection is of especial consequence would seem, however, to be this: That St. Paul stock has warrant for its rise in its own earnings. It is showing over ten per cent. upon its common stock. It does not need the Great Northern, or the Northern Pacific, or the Erie, to guarantee its dividends—it earns more than any of them, more than all of them. And in an important sense what is true of St. Paul is true of most of the other standard railway properties. If they enjoy advanced market values, there is the warrant of what they are earning, what on a dividend basis they actually stand for.

No record in business improvement has at any time in the history of this country ever approached the phenomenal exhibit of American railway earnings for the past year and more.

In the money market no adverse development is discoverable. Gold shipments occasion no distrubance, no anxiety.

CENTRAL NATIONAL BANK.

Announcement is made of the appointment to the Vice Presidency of the Central National Bank of William M. Woods, at present cashier of the National Citizens' Bank of this city and for some twenty years in the credit department of the Importers and Traders' National Bank. On the matter of credits Mr. Woods is said to be one of the best informed men in New York City. It is expected that he will relieve the President of the Central National Bank of many of the details that the growing business of that institution has added to the President's work.

The Vice Presidency to which Mr. Woods is appointed has been vacant since the retirement of the late William L. Strong when he was nominated for Mayor.

YESTERDAY'S MARKET.

Decided strength showed in the stock market yesterday under the leadership of St. Paul, which was bought aggressively throughout the morning by leading financial interests, who insist that the deal with the Northern Pacific-Great Northern is now practically completed, every obstacle being overcome. At the same time the continuing ease in money and the very favorable bank statement contributed to improve sentiment, while the evidences that the larger financial interests were again in the market had stimulating effect.

The opening was strong, notwithstanding the irregularity of the prices sent over by London, this strength gradually growing greater as the day progressed, until at the close buoyancy appeared, most of the final figures being the high for the day.

According to the gossip on the Street, the St. Paul deal was perfected on Friday afternoon by President Hill of Great Northern, the plan proposed including an exchange of the stock for bonds, though on what terms does not seem clear.

There was good buying of the local railway shares, though in Brooklyn Rapid Transit the rise seemed to be due largely to short covering, the Street continuing to show disappointment because the promised changes in the board were not made.

The steel stocks received better support than for some time, and it was declared that there was every possibility that the threatened trade war will be averted. Federal Steel was bought on the theory that, selling ex dividend of 5 per cent. to-morrow, it will look cheap.

All the Grangers and Pacifics were strong, largely, however, in sympathy with the six-point advance in St. Paul, for there were no news developments.

Operations of the pools in Missouri, Kansas and Texas and St. Louis and San Francisco were responsible for the advance in those securities.

As on recent previous days the bond market was very active and strong; the demand for good bonds being reported heavy.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

The bank statement issued yesterday shortly before the close of business was about what had been expected. Surplus reserves increased $3,522,850, specie $7,057,400, and legal tenders $394,400, this gain in cash, in the face of the gold exports during the week, being largely due to the continued influx of money from the interior. Loans showed an increase of $10,493,900, an enormous gain considering the exceptionally large increase of the week previous. Deposits gained $15,635,800.

The stock market, which had been strong preceding the publication of the figures, showed even greater strength subsequently, the statement generally being construed as favorable.

The week's averages of the banks compare as follows with the same date one and two years ago:

	1901.	1900.	1899.
Loans	$841,307,300	$688,332,800	$726,372,200

Legal tenders	73,445,000	66,647,000	61,156,500
Total res.	$265,155,200	$224,409,500	$254,641,000

MORE GOLD EXPORTS LIKELY.

Foreign exchange bankers generally look for further gold exports, in continuation of the movement begun last week. The strength of the exchange market, indeed, is such that it may be that this week alone several large shipments will be made to Paris, no profit as yet showing in any shipment that might be made to London.

Of the general situation G. Schumacher says:

"The exchange market ceased to be of any interest during the past week, owing to the fact that the market remains at the gold-export point, and demand for exchange in payment of returning stocks and bonds from abroad is met by the exports of gold.

"It looks as though foreign exchange will remain close to the gold-export point for a long time to come. Cotton and grain are being held back, therefore the supply of commercial bills grows less and less.

"Also, it looks to us as though there would be quite a number of new foreign loans, and as this country is the only country in the world that has abundance of gold, naturally these loans will be floated here, and consequently the demand for exchange will continue for a long time to come, and as our supply of commercial bills is inadequate, gold exports must continue indefinitely."

OBJECTING TO SOLICITING.

The Governing Committee of the New York Stock Exchange is again after those brokers who employ agents to solicit business. At a meeting on Friday the committee ratified this resolution:

That the employment of a clerk or clerks in a nominal position because of the business obtained by such clerk or clerks for their employer, is a violation of Articles 42 and 43 of the Constitution.

Some two months ago a resolution much along the same lines, warning members against employing solicitors in any form, was adopted, but so far as can be learned it has done little good. That resolution provided, among other things, not only against soliciting but against the payment of salaries regulated by the amount of business brought in by any employe of the firm.

The opinion on the Street seems to be that it is next to an impossibility to work any of the reforms or enforce any of the rules such as the committee seeks to do.

STRENGTH OF WALL STREET

Financial Outlook Not Affected by the Queen's Death.

Views on the Situation and Tributes to the Dead Sovereign and to Edward VII. by Bankers.

During the illness of Queen Victoria pessimists in Wall Street took delight in parading before the public all sorts of gruesome predictions as to the results, marketwise, that would surely follow upon the announcement of her death. When the announcement was made, the market continuing in the even tenor of its way, the same pessimists, not confounded, declared that the lull was but the calm before the storm—that prices would surely break in a day or two, because of the fears and possibilities of international complications. Instead, prices have actually developed buoyancy, and, according to predictions, are likely to do even better. Some opinions on the subject are herewith presented:

HENRY CLEWS—The first effect of the sickness of Queen Victoria was to impose a check on buying both at London and New York. Her decease, however, has been followed by renewed activity. The loss to the world of its noblest character and greatest monarch has had a remarkably sobering effect on political passion at the moment when it has risen to a pitch of unusual danger. Such an appeal to the higher sentiments, at a period of international jealousy inflamed to the verge of outburst, is invaluable as a restorer of public amities, and men feel that the unprecedented exhibition of sympathy which the Queen's death has evoked is worth no little for the cause of the world's peace and hope that it may initiate a reaction from the high political tension now prevailing among the leading powers. Many who had feared that the Queen's removal would mean an outbreak of international animosities now see in it a possible basis for the healing of political enmities. Under these circumstances, the great event has rather contributed to the consolidation of confidence in financial circles than to its unsettlement. I remember the financial effect produced by Abraham Lincoln's death and others of the world's rulers since, because I have very good reasons to remember most of them. The death of Lincoln had practically no effect on the stock market, because it occurred during a bear period, and only made conditions a little duller. The deaths of the Czar of Russia, of Emperors William and Frederick, and of President Carnot, and more recently the King of Italy, had no effect whatever. It was different in the case of President Garfield. Prices went tumbling down and down and down after his death, and we had a very good imitation of panicky times. The assassination of the President, however, was only the excuse for the decline in prices. Prices at all securities were too high and away beyond reason. A decline had to come some time, and the assassination of the President offered the occasion.

But the death of no one of the world's great rulers, including our own, caused anything like the depression in Wall Street which the threatened war with England over the Venezuelan trouble brought about. Cleveland did all that with his little hatchet, and it cost the people of this country at least $3,000,000,000, a sum equal to our National debt at the close of the civil war. I doubt very much if the death of any sovereign or chief magistrate in the world, should the death be either sudden or following an illness, would have any material effect in the United States upon the securities of the United States. In the first place, American securities are held in large amounts chiefly in England and in Germany. It has been said that the Empire of Austria-Hungary will go to pieces as soon as Franz Joseph dies. I very much doubt the truth of this statement, but even if it did the event would have practically no effect on our securities, because they hold comparatively none in Austria-Hungary. Suppose, on the other hand, the President of France should die, and the royalists succeeded in getting control of the Government. That would be something deeply to be regretted, because it would mean the death of a sister republic. But the event would have little material effect upon Wall Street. The same is true of any country in the world, with the exception of Germany and England. We have seen what the effect on our securities has been from the death of so illustrious and so great a sovereign as Queen Victoria. The effect has been practically nil. Some believe that the sudden taking off of the German Emperor

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

The stronger tone that showed in the market for outside securities on Friday was continued yesterday, and net gains were made in a number of issues. The market was not quite as active as on the previous day, but business was relatively large compared with the first days of the week. The general strength of the Stock Exchange market was a favorable influence, and helped to bring about the advances on the curb.

AMERICAN BRIDGE, for the first time in some days, was in fairly large demand, and ended the day with net gains. The common stock sold as high as 42½, and closed at 42⅜ bid, while the preferred advanced to 91¼. Both issues were more active than on any day recently.

AMERICAN SHEET STEEL suffered a reaction from the previous day's price, declining to 75½. It closed with a net loss of 1 point, at 75 bid. Trading in the stock was relatively small.

CRUCIBLE STEEL, though not very active, showed a considerable net gain. The common stock closed at 23¾ bid, an advance of more than a point. The preferred stock was not traded in.

HAVANA COMMERCIAL continued its advance of Friday, and scored net gains of 2 points or more on very light transactions. The common stock sold up to 14, and closed at 14 bid, a net gain of 1½ points. The preferred stock, which had closed at 49¾ bid, advanced to 53½ on the purchase of 200 shares, closing at the latter price. The new strength of these stocks does not seem to be due to any recent change in the condition of the company. The floating debt of the company, which it was announced last Summer amounted to about $1,500,000, was provided for last December by funds secured from stockholders of the company, but since that time it is stated no change has occurred in the affairs of the company. Its earnings are said to be satisfactory, but it is not believed that dividends on the preferred stock will be resumed until the debt referred to has been wiped out.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA preferred was traded in to the extent of only a few hundred shares, all of which sold at 30. At the close the stock was offered at this price, with 29 the best bid, a decline of 1 point. The common stock remained unchanged.

UNITED RAILWAYS OF ST. LOUIS securities showed considerable strength, and all the issues made net gains for the day. Trading, however, was not as heavy as on recent days.

STANDARD OIL sold up to 709½ and odd lots changed hands as high as 800. It closed at 797 bid, a net gain of 2 points.

GENERAL CARRIAGE was again very active. After selling up to nearly 5, it declined again to 4¼, and closed at 4⅛ bid, a slight net loss.

AN ALABAMA BANK FAILS.

New York Correspondents Refused Its Checks and Suspension Followed.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 26.—The Josiah Morris Bank, one of the oldest private banking institutions in Alabama, failed to open its doors for business to-day. The capital stock of the bank is $100,000. Deposits are believed to be heavy. The assets and liabilities are not yet known. At the hour of opening the following announcement was posted on the door:

"Yesterday some of our checks in New York, for which we had made provision, were temporarily refused by our correspondents, though they were afterward paid. This information came to us late after the close of banking hours. Since then a number of inquiries have been made and the apprehension created convinces us that, in justice to creditors, we ought to suspend payment. This condition of affairs has arisen from inability to make quick realization on cash and the shrinkage of assets. It is hoped that the assets prudently arranged will pay creditors in full."

Large crowds assembled around the bank, and much excitement prevailed. No legal steps have yet been taken. This county has about $200,000 deposited in the bank, and the City of Montgomery also was a large depositor. The county is partially secured by the bond of the County Treasurer, made with a Maryland company, for $120,000. The bank itself was surety on the Treasurer's bond. The bank was a depositor for many of the railroads entering Montgomery.

Extradition of Sigmund Hertz.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The State Department has delivered to Mr. Frazee, designated as the agent of the State of New York, the papers to secure the extradition of Sigmund Hertz, a confidential clerk charged with a heavy embezzlement in New York. Hertz is now under detention by the British authorities in London.

IMPORTS FOR THE WEEK.

The imports of dry goods and general merchandise for the week were valued at $11,100,233. The imports of specie amounted to $131,993, and the exports of specie to $5,316,100.

GET-RICH-QUICKLY SCHEME

Happy Thought of "George Otis, Editor;" Also Philanthropist.

He Tells How Anybody Can Own a Newspaper and Get Free Passes from Railroads and Theatres.

Be an editor and secure free passes from railroads, theatres, &c.—I will furnish you a completely printed paper free of charge after you have had ten lessons at $1 each; your name will appear thereon as editor and publisher. Send $1 for first lesson and particulars to George Otis, editor, Room 2, 225 Broadway.

This advertisement appeared a few days ago in one of the morning newspapers. Desirous of learning the "particulars," but unwilling to pay the advance fee of $1, a reporter for THE NEW YORK TIMES, without disclosing his identity, called on "George Otis, editor," and expressed a desire to learn the secret which would make him an editor and open up prospects of unlimited railroad passes and theatre tickets.

On the door of Room 2, 225 Broadway, which is an ante-room to a larger and at that time unoccupied office, appear in plain black letters the words, "The Anti-Department Store Journal" and "George Otis." Within there were a number of desks, at one of which sat a man apparently middle aged, with gray beard and hair and small, sharp eyes. He was well dressed and pleasant mannered. In oily tones he asked the visitor to take a chair.

"I came in regard to an advertisement—" began the reporter.

"Oh, yes," broke in Mr. Otis, "now that's a very attractive proposition. You see, my idea is that there are lots of young men who would like to go into journalism. Now, in order to save them the grind which they would have to go through on a big paper, I am willing to give them my experience in a few lessons and establish them with a paper of their own at a comparatively small cost. My proposition is only to young men in country towns, who might run a paper as an aside undertaking. You see, being an editor and owning a paper gives a man a lot of standing in small communities. Now, this is my proposition. But first look at this," and George Otis, editor, handed his visitor a sixteen-page paper with the heading:

THE ANTI-DEPARTMENT STORE JOURNAL. Vol. III., No. 5 $2.00 a year.
Boston and New York, January, 1901.

This paper contained on the first and last pages a harangue against the department stores and the outline of a bill to be introduced in the Legislature, both of these ending with an appeal for subscriptions to the paper. The other fourteen pages were filled with various reprints from other papers and a few advertisements. Having watched the impression on the reporter, which seemed favorable, George Otis, editor, began again.

"Now, my proposition is to print for you an exact duplicate of this paper, except that the title will be changed to suit the locality, and your name inserted as editor on these conditions: For each issue of the paper, which is to be monthly, you are to pay me $2 to cover costs. Then I will furnish you with as many copies as you wish, at 5 cents a copy. Once or twice a year, if you want to make a special splurge, I'll make a reduction to 2 cents a copy. You only have to buy enough to hand to your subscribers, but I'll fix it your circulation at any figure you may want. That's your private business. You are supposed to get subscriptions at $2 a year, of which you give me half. If you want any special local news printed, I'll insert them at 15 cents an inch. For all advertisements you get, you pay me half."

"But where do I come in?" asked the reporter.

"Oh," answered George Otis, editor, magnanimously, "First, you'll get the credit of being an editor, and then you get half the proceeds from advertising and from subscriptions, and besides, you can get all the railroad passes and theatre tickets you want free, by sending a copy of your paper with a request. These you can sell at a reduced price. Why, when I started this thing in Boston I got out in three suburban towns three papers identically the same, except the title. Of course, one has to change the title or they would get on to the scheme. Why, I used to get sets of tickets from every theatre in Boston for every one of these papers, and I peddled them at half price, and I made a snug little profit every week," and Mr. George Otis, editor, chuckled at the recollection of the success of his brilliant idea in simple-minded Boston.

"But that isn't all," he continued. "I have another proposition, which can be worked together with the other one or separately, as you please. Now, look at this," and he produced a circular printed on paper bearing the Anti-Department Store Journal heading, and signed "George Otis, Manager." It is sent to persons who reply to the advertisement, and reads in part as follows:

We have a remarkably profitable business proposition, one among a thousand, and one that will last for a decade at least. We represent an organized movement against department stores, and are going to get half a million signers this year to our petitions in favor of a law against them to present to the Legislature. It is easy to get signers, for every retailer, property owner, real estate and insurance man is crazy to sign, and we allow you 50 cents for each one you can secure. In Brooklyn I have got from thirty to forty a day for the last three months, and you ought to do half as well, which would give you a profit of from $15 to $20 a day.

But before going into further particulars, and thereby giving away my business to possible rivals, I will state that no person's application for an agency will be considered unless he shows interest enough in the cause to become a subscriber to our paper, The Anti-Department Store Journal, at $2 a year. This is intended to and will scare off those who do not know what they want and those who do not know a good thing when they see it.

On receipt of your subscription and $2 we will then write you fully. If you are all right, and the sort of man we suppose you to be, here is the chance for you to make $2,000 to $3,000 before Jan. 1, 1902. You do not want to waste much time on this for there will be lot applicants for each point in that we shall be able to confer.

Many states desire to have our paper, and we will allow you to take subscriptions from those who sign the petition and allow you one-half, so that you can make at least $5 a day from this source alone.

"The great thing about the petition," explained George Otis, editor, "is that it contains a clause making each signer liable for $3 to pay for the expenses of introducing the bill, payment to be made when the bill is introduced. Most people who sign don't read the whole petition, and if they do notice it it can be cut out if they won't accept an explanation. I have been getting petitions in Brooklyn among the storekeepers on Myrtle Avenue and other streets, and of course they're all good for the amount. I expect to make quite a little money out of it. No, I can't let you have any part of New York city; I've reserved that for myself. But if you want to start in in some country town, all right. You can think it over and let me know. I am going to Boston next week to get out my February number, but I'll be back in two weeks, and I'll be glad to see you. Good day."

MOVE AGAINST EXPECTORATORS.

The Board of Health Issues a New Notice to be Posted Up.

The Board of Health has renewed with more activity than ever before its crusade against spitters in public places. Yesterday morning President Murphy directed that a copy of a form of notice in respect to expectorating in public be posted in a conspicuous place in all public conveyances and buildings. The form of notice is as follows:

"Spitting on the floor of this car (or ferryboat) is a misdemeanor; $500 fine, or imprisonment, or both, may be the punishment therefor. Section 194 of the Sanitary Code and Section 15 of the Penal Code."

It was announced by the counsel of the board that violations of these laws would be vigorously prosecuted in every case.

YOUNG BRIDEGROOM ARRESTED.

Married but Three Weeks, He Is Charged with Passing a Bad Check.

A young bridegroom was taken yesterday from the side of his bride of a few weeks and arraigned in the Gates Avenue Police Court, Brooklyn, on a charge of passing a bad check. The prisoner was John H. Meyerholz, twenty-one years old, of 1,346 St. Mark's Avenue.

August Meier, a manufacturer of paper bags at 1,700 Dean Street, accused Meyerholz of passing a worthless check for $100 upon him. Meyerholz, who is in the real estate business in Montague Street, is said to have been married only three weeks ago. He was at home with his wife when arrested. In court he pleaded not guilty to the charge against him and was held for examination on Feb. 6.

SOUTH CAROLINA EXPOSITION.

Arrangements for Erecting the Buildings and Laying Out the Grounds Completed.

The managers of the South Carolina Inter-State and West Indian Exposition, which will be opened at Charleston on Dec. 1 next, have completed arrangements for the erection of the different buildings and the laying out of the grounds.

The site of the exposition will be on the eastern bank of the Ashley River, close to the business centre of the city. The grounds are beautifully situated and should lend themselves to the most artistic treatment. One-half of the grounds will be devoted to the main exposition buildings, the Midway concessions and the Administration offices. The rest of the grounds will be devoted to the buildings and exhibits made by the Government and several States of the Union.

The grounds are divided into two main sections, one consisting of the old Washington racecourse property and the other of the Wagener farm, formerly the Lowndes place. The main buildings surround a grand court at the western extremity of the old racecourse. This court will be in the shape of an elongated horseshoe, with the Cotton Palace occupying the toe of the shoe and the Commerce Palace and Agricultural Palace on either side. These buildings, with their connecting colonnades, will extend for the distance of about a mile. Within the horseshoe there will be a sunken garden, covering several acres, with a lake in the centre.

The Cotton Palace will be the most imposing of all the buildings. It will cover upward of 50,000 feet of floor space, will be 550 feet in length, and at least 100 feet in width. In the centre of the building will rise an imposing dome to a height of more than 150 feet. In the building will be exhibited the products of the cotton mills of the country.

The Palaces of Agriculture and Commerce will each contain about 40,000 square feet of floor area in addition to their connecting arcades, which will contain in all about 20,000 square feet. Each of these buildings will have a central dome and small turrets at the corners.

Other buildings will be the Mining and Forestry buildings, the Auditorium, the Machinery and Transport building, the United States Government building, the Woman's building, the several State and city buildings, and the Negro department.

HIS MEMORY AGAINST HIM.

Professional Beggar Might Have Got a Good Job in a Poolroom, but Couldn't Remember Faces.

It was a rainy day and there was a small group of people gathered about the placard in one corner of the Post Office in which the United States Government sets forth the manifold advantages of being a soldier in its service. The centre of the group was a tall, thin young man, poorly but neatly dressed, who was addressing the rest of the group in a husky voice with a decidedly English accent.

"Yes," he said, waving a long arm toward the picture on the placard in which was depicted a cavalryman with a big mustache and yellow plumes in his helmet talking to a splendid individual on foot with a complicated arrangement of gold braid across his broad chest; "yes, that's what I'm going to be. I ought to have enlisted long ago. I suppose that's all I'm good for. Here I have been struggling along trying to get work for the past eight months, nearly starving."

Here the husky voice of the young man choked with emotion, and he stopped speaking for a moment, while the group waited in sympathetic silence.

"I tell you, gentlemen," he continued, "it's a hard thing for an English gentleman to make his way in this country. I know that they'll be glad to have me in the army, though. I've served through two campaigns as an officer in the Eighth Kings. I know Roberts like a brother. I would write to him now only I'm too proud to let him know how low I have fallen. It's pretty hard for a Sandhurst man to bring himself to enlist as a common private, and that's what I've got to do. If my people in England knew about it, it would break their hearts.

By this time the young man was completely overcome by the mournful picture created by his own eloquence, and his auditors were gazing at him with evident compassion.

"I'm nearly starving," he said, "and I'll have to do something to keep alive."

"Don't worry," said a fat man, with a red nose, who had been scrutinizing the young man with a very peculiar expression of countenance. "You'll get good grub in the army. They'll feed you all right there. You'd look good dressed up like those fellers, too."

"Yes," said the young man, sadly. "I know they'll feed me. But the recruiting station up on the Bowery is shut up now, and I can't enlist till to-morrow. I haven't a cent, and I'll have to spend the night in the streets without a bite to eat or any place to sleep. Look how it's raining, too. If any of you gentlemen could spare—"

At this moment the young man was interrupted by a sudden movement in the group gathered about him as his hearers scattered in all directions. The only person who remained near him was the man with the red nose, and he seized him by the arm and drew him to one side.

"Look here, young feller," he said, "I've been in the city for seven years, and I've been knocking up against you regular every month or so. I want to ask you two questions. The first is, what's the matter with your memory? You've been meeting me every little while for the past seven years, and you don't never seem to know me. A man in your line of business ought to be more careful. The first time I met you, when you told me you was a Church of England clergyman looking for the St. George Society, I thought you was on the level. I give you fifty cents, and I won fifty dollars on a horse the next day; so you give me good luck. You struck me with another yarn the next week, and I remembered you. Some fellers would have plugged you in the jaw then, but I give you another half dollar, because I remembered the good luck you give me the other time. Why don't you learn to remember faces? What's the matter with your memory?"

The young man looked at his questioner with tears in his eyes.

"If you knew how you were hurting my feelings," he said, "you wouldn't talk that way. I never saw you before in my life, and I have never stooped so low as to ask for money until now. You couldn't have seen me seven years ago, for I was in Australia then."

"All right," said the man with the red nose, "I'll leave that without an answer and ask another question. Where do you learn all the stories you tell? If I was you I would take to writing dime novels. There's more money in it. The first time I saw you you was a minister. Then you was a farmer from Devonshire goin' to a ranch in New Mexico, and had lost your railroad ticket. Then you was a young man who had been disowned by your father, the Earl, and had worked your passage across and wanted to get home again. I can't remember all your yarns, but they was all peaches. How do you come to think of them?"

"You must take me for some one else," said the young man. "I never saw you in my life before."

"All right," said the red-nosed man, throwing away his cigar in disgust, "I asked you civil questions and you lost a good chance by not answerin' them. If you had been on the level I would have given you a job in a poolroom I'm runnin' up town, but there's no use in talkin' to you. I'm disappointed, for I liked your looks."

The man with the red nose turned up his coat collar and went out into the rain, while the young man resumed his station before the placard to wait for another group to collect around him.

SUIT AGAINST POLICE CHIEF.

Effort to Recover for Slot Machines Seized in Jersey City.

Some time ago a number of slot machines offered for sale by George W. Beecher at 76 Montgomery Street, Jersey City, were seized by the police and destroyed on the allegation that they were gambling devices. Leon Abbett, counsel for Mr. Beecher, yesterday began suit in the Hudson County Supreme Court against Chief of Police Benjamin Murphy to recover the value of the machines on the ground that the seizure was illegal, no preliminary complaint having been made and also because the act under which the seizure was made conflicts with the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law.

Justice Collins, who heard the argument, said that as an appeal would probably be taken, no matter what the result might be, he would at once certify the case to the Supreme Court of the State for review. In this way, he said, the matter could be settled with the least possible delay.

The Best Restaurant in Brooklyn.

Frederick Loeser & Co.

BROOKLYN.

No Better Candy Made Than Ours

The Truth Will Always Out.

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle says: "Frederick Loeser & Co. has always made a specialty of fine laces, and through its European connections this house is enabled to give the first showing in this vicinity of these new laces, and they form an uncommonly attractive and beautiful display." An unprejudiced news item on one branch of our business—a notable exhibition of the season's new laces weeks before they are to be seen anywhere else. But every branch of the business of this great store is just as thoroughly in keeping with the most progressive methods of modern merchandising. Of vital importance, too, is this alertness and forehandedness, especially in the matter of dress—for exclusiveness is one of the pleasures if not necessities of every well dressed woman.

Herein comes the true measure of value—for a slaughtered price on an out-of-date article is a simple proposition compared with a genuinely under the market price on something that's known to be the very cream of newness. Thus do our prices (and those of every true meaning merchant) for goods that are the exclusiveness of new, constantly meet the prices of goods that are the exclusiveness of old. Real comparison, article with article, is the safest guide when you wish to be sure you are getting the value you are entitled to.

MAY LEASE NEW HOTEL.

The Fifth Avenue and Twenty-sixth Street Syndicate Makes an Offer to Holland House Proprietor.

Gustav Baumann, proprietor of the Holland House, may become the lessee of the new eighteen-story five-million-dollar hotel, with nine hundred rooms, which is to be erected on the site of the Hotel Brunswick, at Fifth Avenue and Twenty-sixth Street.

"The rumor," said Mr. Baumann last night, "that I have been offered the lease of the new Brunswick Hotel is based on fact. But the real estate deal was only consummated last week, and it is little premature to talk about the matter. The negotiations with me by the interested capitalists have not got beyond the tentative stage of an offer on their part and a promise to consider the matter on mine.

"It is of course very flattering to me to have such an offer made. The gentlemen, too, who came to me said that they did not care to begin business with the hotel ready for guests by experimenting until the right man was found. They told me I was to have free scope, and to have a say in the building of the hotel. All they wanted, they insisted, was the right man, and that's why they came to me.

Mr. Baumann went on to say that he judged from what the capitalists said that they would prefer a long lease to a short one, and that all they expected was a fair return on the investment.

"The proposition," he added, "falls in with my ideas that I would like to have a hotel with larger accommodations than the Holland House; 150 more rooms, at least, for instance. While I have some reason to feel satisfied with the patronage that the Holland House has received and with my prosperity since I took hold of it in 1891, I am convinced that I could do as well with the superb hotel that it is planned to put up. I have eight more years before my present lease expires, but I would hardly care to conduct two hotels at the same time. I will not, however, I believe, have any difficulty in arranging to turn my interests here over to another. There is plenty of time to look after this. At the earliest the New Brunswick could not be opened for guests before the Fall of 1902.

"I am yet a young man, and perhaps I may accept the offer. If I do I guarantee that New York will have another hotel of which she may be proud."

MRS. ANNE LETTAU BURIED.

She Was a Survivor of the Minnesota Indian Massacre of 1862.

Mrs. Anne Lettau, who was a survivor of the Indian massacre of August, 1862, in Minnesota, and who died on Tuesday, was buried yesterday afternoon, in Greenwood Cemetery, Brooklyn. She lived at 149 Fourteenth Street, that borough, and was eighty-one years old.

Mrs. Lettau lived in Minnesota, with her husband and children, at the time of the massacre. The Sioux, led by Little Crow, killed hundreds of pioneer white settlers and plundered and burned their homes. Mrs. Lettau saw her husband and two-year-old child murdered in their home. She escaped, and, with her six-months-old child in her arms and her four-year-old daughter by her side, reached Fort Ridgley, forty miles distant, after suffering terrible hardships.

At the fort she found two others of her children—Frederick, twelve years old, and August, fourteen years old—who had also escaped from the Indians and fled to the fort with their dog.

MR. SCANNELL ANGRY.

He Writes a Letter to Controller Coler Condemning His Methods.

A small hole in 100 feet of rubber hose has caused Fire Commissioner Scannell to get angry and write a caustic letter to Controller Coler. Commissioner Scannell has another grievance. Controller Coler wrote to a subordinate in the Fire Department for 100 feet of a 10,000-foot lot of hose to be tested as to quality. Commissioner Scannell claims that Controller Coler should carry on all his corespondence with the head of the Fire Department alone.

The facts are that bids were opened recently for 10,000 feet of hose to be used in the Brooklyn Fire Department. The lowest bidder was the Peerless Rubber Manufacturing Company.

A question arose as to the quality of the hose, and Controller Coler's Inspectors called at the repair shops and presented a letter signed by Controller Coler requesting the loan of a 100-foot length of hose furnished by the successful bidder. The claim made by Commissioner Scannell is that the hose was then submitted to a rival bidder, and was returned in a mutilated condition.

Commissioner Scannell then wrote to Controller Coler in part as follows:

"The procedure on the part of your employe seems to me to be without warrant, unnecessary, and calculated rather to injure than to assist in determining what your department requires, viz., knowledge as to the character and quality of goods furnished under a contract."

Another paragraph of Commissioner Scannell's letter is as follows:

I object to letters addressed to employes of this department asking them to give to Inspectors of the Finance Department samples of goods or information concerning the purchase of same. I, as Fire Commissioner, am the head of the department, and as such am entitled to be the recipient of all correspondence, and it comes in bad grace for the head of a department of the City Government to address a subordinate of any other department requesting from him information, without the knowledge of the head of the department itself, who is the one responsible.

MINISTER FRANCIS'S SEND-OFF.

A Number of His Friends Accompany His Steamer on a Revenue Cutter.

Charles S. Francis, editor of The Troy Times, who was recently appointed Minister to Greece, Roumania, and Servia, was given an enthusiastic send-off by a number of friends when he sailed for his new post on the North German Lloyd liner Hohenzollern, yesterday morning.

In the party who accompanied the Hohenzollern as far as the Narrows on the revenue Cutter Manhattan were ex-Gov. Frank S. Black, Mayor Daniel E. Conley of Troy, State Senator Michael Russell, Congressman-elect William H. Draper, M. E. Worden, Chairman of the Rensselaer County Republican Committee; Judge Henry T. Nason, and E. C. Lee, E. A. Fuertes, and H. Morse Stephens, professors in Cornell University, and D. N. Potassi, the Greek Consul General.

NOTES OF ART.

The Washington Statue Proposed for Brooklyn—Origin of Berlin's Gallery.

Brooklyn Borough is to be congratulated on a Register who uses the fees of his office to add to the attractions of the Eastern District an equestrian statue of Washington. Such public spirit is rare among millionaires and probably stands alone in the records of office holders. But the committee should labor with the good Register to change his purpose with regard to the monument, so far as relates to a replica of the statue by Clark Mills at Washington. It is not worthy of Brooklyn's art associations and art amateurs; it is not worthy of the great city the borough has become, to erect any other than an original statue. Mr. Howe may not have had time to realize that when people see a copy of a statue both the original and the replica fall in estimation. Moreover, hereafter it will seem a confession that we had no sculptors today as good as Clark Mills, whereas in the history of American sculpture that artist holds a very subordinate rank. He belongs to the artists for whom allowances have to be made, because of the slender advantages of early training he had. As a matter of fact which any foreign expert will corroborate, we have more sculptors of the first class to-day than at any time in our history. So much impressed were the French by this fact that they gave the very best places at the exposition to St. Gaudens, MacMonnies, Trench, Dallin, and other Americans. It would be a matter for regret hereafter on the part of Register Howe if the money so generously offered should be expended on a copy of a monument in Washington, rather than on a fresh creation representing the marvelous advance that our sculpture has made since the days of Clark Mills.

The National Gallery at Berlin did not own its origin to the Hohenzollern family, but to a certain Mr. Wagener, Consul for Sweden, who took a great deal of pleasure in painting, more especially the landscapes and anecdote pictures of the Duesseldorf school. Wagner died in 1861 and left the 526 pictures of his collection to the Prussian Crown, asking that the public and especially artists should be permitted to visit them. King William, afterward Emperor William, had them placed in the Academy of Art on the Linden, and hinted broadly that he would be glad of accessions from other sources, whilst turning over his own stock of modern German paintings to swell their number. The greatly augmented collection is now housed by itself in the classical building which bears the name of the National Gallery.

Elliott Daingerfield will exhibit a number of his paintings at the Kraushaar Gallery, 260 Fifth Avenue, which has been moved over from Broadway. His masterpiece is a "Holy Family." Daingerfield has a strong but limited color sense and for some years has painted religious pictures which are remarkable for the mellow color in which often the figures are bathed.

A set of those curious and, to our taste, well-nigh impossible drinking vessels, Bristol blackjacks made of leather, are to be seen at Lanthier's old curiosity shop. One might almost as well drink from greasy boots; yet these unsavory, clumsy things of smelly black leather were used for ale. When the pothouse roisterer became pugnacious he could throw his leathern mug about without fear of breaking it or his fellow toper's head.

OPPOSED TO NAVY PLAN.

City Officials Do Not Want a Drill Ground on Blackwell's Island.

Controller Coler, Charities Commissioner Keller, and Commissioner of Corrections Lantry are opposed to the plan of the Navy Department to make a public park and drill ground of the property at the northern end of Blackwell's Island. Controller Coler said yesterday that, instead of a park, a hospital should be established there, as the present institutions under the control of the Charities Department are overcrowded. Controller Coler also said:

"The idea is very nice to have a public park, but at the same time the city is in need of greater hospital facilities. The insane pavilion on Blackwell's Island should be turned into a hospital when it is vacated in April. This could be done very easily."

The question arose yesterday as to how the United States Government could get possession of the property. Deputy Controller Levy said that the matter would have to come before the Sinking Fund Commissioner, or the Municipal Assembly. If the Navy Department wanted the city to cede the property for Government use, an act of the Legislature would be necessary. If the Navy Department wanted to buy the land, an appropriation would have to be approved by Congress.

Commissioner of Corrections Lantry said yesterday:

"The city now needs Blackwell's Island for charitable and correctional institutions. The quarries there are workable for at least twenty years more, and this affords an opportunity to the penitentiary authorities to keep the men employed and give them helpful occupation without interfering with honest labor. The United States Government ought to be satisfied to take Hart's Island or Riker's Island, both of which are larger and more adaptable to their needs. Hart's Island is now only a Potter's Field and Riker's Island is merely a dumping ground."

Mayor Van Wyck did not make known his views about the matter yesterday.

One of the gentlemen interested in the project, in speaking of the proposed use of Blackwell's Island for the Navy Department, said that the article, as published in THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday, was satisfactory, excepting where it stated that the request was for this city to cede the property. "The Navy Department," he said, "does not want the city to cede the property, but merely to grant permission for its use for drill and recreation purposes, the island to be under the control of the city and subject to the rules and regulations prescribed by the Park Department. The whole idea is to make it a park for the benefit of the people, with the advantage of a place of drill for the navy, which will be an additional attraction for the people."

BATTLESHIP ALABAMA SAILS.

She Leaves for Pensacola to Join the North Atlantic Squadron.

The United States battleship Alabama sailed for Pensacola yesterday. On her arrival in Southern waters she will be attached to the North Atlantic Squadron, which is now on its Winter cruise in the South

Various slight defects in her machinery delayed the battleship's departure some days ago. When Capt. Willard A. Brownson, who commands the Alabama, reports to Admiral Farquhar, commanding the squadron, the fleet will have three first-class battleships, the other two being the Kearsarge, which is the flagship, and the Massachusetts.

MR. BIND AND THE BARKEEPER.

A Question of Barroom Etiquette Touching on False Teeth Puzzles Magistrate Teale.

Magistrate Teale was called upon yesterday in the Myrtle Avenue Police Court, Brooklyn, to pass upon an interesting question in barroom etiquette. The question was: Is it good form to remove your false teeth and place them on the bar when gorging yourself with smoked herring and pickled pig's knuckles at the free lunch counter?

The settlement of this point affected the disposition of a charge of disorderly conduct preferred against John Bind, a tall, slim darky, by Bryan O'Donnell, a saloon keeper at 620 Fulton Street. According to the complaint, Bind entered O'Donnell's saloon and had a drink. Then he calmly took out his false teeth, and, depositing them on the bar, made a bee line for the free lunch counter. Several gentlemen with red noses who were holding up the bar looked around, saw the gleaming molars and incisors, and passed their hands over their eyes in a troubled way. O'Donnell contemplated the teeth for a moment with indignation too deep for utterance.

"Hey, you," he ejaculated finally, addressing Bind, "put them bones back in yer face."

Bind, who had tackled a big pig's knuckle and secured a half-Nelson on it, looked around.

"Wha' yo' say?" he asked, with some difficulty of expression, having a mouth full of pickled pig's meat.

"I say chuck them grinders back in yer jowls. We don't want any loan exhibits of dental work here."

"Ah can't eat wif mah teef," protested Bind with an injured air. "Ah'd swallow 'em."

This polite repartee continued until the saloon keeper finally had Bind arrested.

"I don't want to press the charge against this man," said O'Donnell in court; "but I don't think it was right for him to be leaving his teeth around on my bar. I'll leave it to your Honor."

Magistrate Teale studied over the matter for some time, realizing the ticklishness of the point at issue, and then decided that Bind had been guilty of a breach of good form. Sentence was suspended.

RELENTLESS AMATEUR SLEUTH.

Has for Two Years Tracked Man Who Robbed Him—Thinks He Has Him.

Charles Schmitt, proprietor of the Eagle Hotel, 116 Fourteenth Street, Hoboken, was arrested yesterday on complaint of Herman Weiller of North Third Street, Philadelphia, who alleges that two years ago Schmitt, under the name of Ronsheimer, bought liquors to the amount of $676.76 on credit. Ronsheimer, so Weiller alleges, sold the liquors to a saloon keeper for

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE STARTLES PHYSICIANS

Prayers and Baked Apples Substituted for Their Treatment.

Indignant, They Leave Patient's House —Recalled When Too Late—Will Report to County Medical Society.

The practice of Christian Science is declared to have had much to do with the death of the young wife of Frank L. Hopper of 2,085 Ryer Avenue, Bronx Borough, and the matter is to be brought to the attention of the County Medical Society for investigation. For twenty-four hours during the most critical period of Mrs. Hopper's illness a female member of the Christian Scientists sat at her bedside, prayed, and, it is said, administered baked apples to the patient instead of the medicine and nourishment prescribed by the attending physicians. On finding a Christian Scientist there, both the physicians and the nurses left the house, but were finally induced to return twenty-four hours later, when it was too late to be of any service.

The dead woman, who was twenty-two years of age, was formerly Miss Grace Wall. She married Hopper about seventeen months ago, and as far as her family knows, was never a believer in Christian Science. About two weeks ago she gave birth to a boy. Dr. N. B. Van Etten of Tremont and Anthony Avenues attended the case, and when he discovered that blood poisoning had developed and the woman's condition became alarming he called Dr. Isaac M. Heller and Dr. John Cabot in consultation. Two nurses were engaged, one from New York Hospital and the other from Mount Sinai Hospital, to care for the patient. Notwithstanding the constant attendance of the physicians and nurses, the woman grew rapidly worse.

On the arrival of Dr. Van Etten at the house one morning he was greatly surprised to find a strange woman sitting at Mrs. Hopper's bedside reading from a book containing Biblical quotations. He questioned her and learned that she was a Christian Scientist who had been requested by the family to come to the house and use her good influence in prayer for the recovery of the woman. During the presence of the woman in the house the doctor learned that his orders regarding the administration of medicine and nourishment to the patient had been disregarded entirely, and that nothing, either liquid or solid, except baked apples, had passed her lips. Dr. Van Etten questioned the family, but got no satisfactory explanation, and abandoned the case and left the house. The two nurses followed him, saying that they could not remain, as they did not believe in Christian Science as a healing power. No effort was made to detain them.

For twenty-four hours the stranger remained at Mrs. Hopper's bedside praying and administering the baked apples, it is said. Then the husband went to Dr. Van Etten and begged him to return, saying that his wife's life was in the balance. At first Dr. Van Etten refused, saying that the introduction of a Christian Scientist at a time when the life of his wife hung by a thread was a matter not to be countenanced. Other appeals were made to Dr. Van Etten, who finally resumed the case and found the patient very low. Every possible effort was made to save her life, but in twelve hours she was dead. At first Dr. Van Etten and his colleagues were inclined to report the matter to the Board of Health for investigation, but they finally decided to lay the matter before the County Medical Society and let it take such action as it deemed necessary.

When seen yesterday Dr. Van Etten was reluctant to talk about the case, but said that on several occasions during the young woman's illness members of the family had suggested the calling of a Christian Scientist. He told them that he had had some experience with them and did not think it advisable to have them interfere in such a serious case. In conclusion, he said that he would make a full report of the case to the society.

The husband of the dead woman, who is employed in a jewelry house at Thirty-fifth Street and Broadway, said that his wife was not a Christian Scientist, although she believed in some of its doctrines. When asked about the presence of the Christian Scientist at his wife's bedside, he refused to give the "healer's" name, but said that his wife had requested that she be called in and he, considering it as a dying wish and in view of the fact that the physicians gave little hope for her recovery, could not refuse her. He does not believe that the presence of the woman had anything to do with the death of his wife.

KERR'S FATHER CRITICALLY ILL.

At Point of Death from Typhoid Pneumonia and Worry About His Son.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 27.—Hugh Kerr, the father of George J. Kerr, who is awaiting trial in the county jail on a charge of murder, in connection with the death of Jennie Bosschieter, is at the point of death. The doctors say the chances of his recovery are very slight.

He is suffering from typhoid pneumonia, but the friends of the family insist that the position in which his son has been placed through his connection with McAllister, Death, and Campbell, the three men already convicted in the case, broke Mr. Kerr's heart, that he was slowly wasting away, and was so feeble and weak when attacked by the disease that he was unable to fight against it.

Mr. Kerr is seventy years of age. He has been a resident of the city almost all his life. He is wealthy and influential. His sons, too, were prominent, one of them having attained a considerable reputation as a lawyer and Judge.

Punitive Expeditions in Manchuria.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—"The Russians in Manchuria," says the St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times, "continue their punitive expeditions against the 'Hungs,' (brigands,) just as the allies under Count von Waldersee continue them against the Boxers. A new feature of the Manchurian campaign is the engagement of the celebrated Col. Alikhanoff, from the Caucasus, for this work of retribution and the destruction of Chinese banditti."

Elmira Physician Found Dead.

ELMIRA, Jan. 27.—Dr. H. D. Reardon, a prominent physician, was found dead in bed this afternoon. Death was due to an overdose of chloroform, which the physician was in the habit of inhaling.

DENOUNCES TRADERS IN CHINA.

Bishop Potter Says They Caused All the Trouble—It Is the Foreigners Who Should Be Converted.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 27.—Bishop Potter of New York City preached in St. Paul's Church this evening on "Missions." While the Bishop spoke highly of the work of Christian missionaries in the Orient, he was outspoken in his condemnation of the tradesmen, bankers, travelers, and promoters who have flocked to the East from Europe and this country. He said, in part:

"If I were to be asked to-night to hold a brief for either of the contestants in the struggle between China and the great powers, I would take the side of China. I say this advisedly and with assurance. The treatment of the Chinese and the Orientals in general by so-called Christian foreigners has been a disgrace to the Christian religion. We have sent men in there who have trampled on the religion of the people, who have ridiculed their finest traditions, who have torn down their temples, who have made light of their ancestor worship, and who have treated the Chinese from the start with a savagery that they have come to associate with Christianity. We ought to be thoroughly ashamed of ourselves.

"Do you wonder that the Chinese have rebelled and risen up against the foreigners? We would do the same thing in their places. While I do not want to bring international politics into this pulpit, yet I want to say that we can never bring the world to a peaceful basis until we put more Christianity into our actions. Before we set out to convert the heathen let us convert our tradesmen and our business men who go into the Orient. It is there that the whole trouble lies. In spite of blunders, our missionaries, every man and woman of them, have gone there to give; our tradesmen and promoters have gone there to get what they could.

"We should set out to create a public sentiment that will lift up the whole treatment of pagan peoples by so-called Christians. Let us treat them as we do not treat them now, as brothers, and then we will be able to bring them to something better. The whole Eastern situation has been brought about by the savagery of so-called Christians. Let us begin at home in our missionary work."

KILLED BY MOONSHINERS.

Deputy Marshal and One of His Posse Shot—Another Man Held as a Prisoner.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Jan. 27.—Deputy United States Marshal James Hollifield and Simon Combs of his posse are killed, Rufus Weston is wounded in the arm and leg, and Ambrose Amburgy has flesh wounds in the leg, as the result of an attempt of a posse of five men to capture a gang of moonshiners on Elkhorn Creek, in Pike County, on the edge of the Cumberland Mountains. The battle was one of the fiercest which has ever occurred in the State, the moonshiners firing from ambush on the revenue officers. All but one of the party, Blaine Combs, was either killed or wounded, and he is now in the hands of the illicit distillers.

The battle occurred on the morning of Jan. 25, but on account of the remoteness of the place and the fact that the entire force of revenue men was disabled, the news was not received by revenue officials until to-day. The people of the entire county are wild with excitement, and it is stated that a large posse will be dispatched at once to the scene.

Elkhorn Creek is ten miles from Hindman, and thirty miles from Jackson, the nearest railway station on the Lexington and Eastern Railroad.

DETECTIVE PEARSON DEAD.

Expires from a Fracture of the Skull at the J. Hood Wright Hospital.

Detective Everett H. Pearson of 236 West One Hundred and Twenty-first Street, who was Capt. Moynihan's "wardman," at the West Twentieth Street Station, died last night in the J. Hood Wright Hospital from a fracture of the base of the skull. According to Capt. Moynihan's story Pearson left the West Twentieth Street Station at 11:20 o'clock on the evening of January 19th. It was raining and the streets were slippery. Boarding an Eighth Avenue car for his home, he got as far as One Hundred and Twenty-first Street when, jumping off the moving car, he slipped and fell. His head hit the pavement. Though partly stunned he managed to get up and started for home. He got to the steps of 260 West One Hundred and Twenty-first Street where he became unconscious. A policeman found him and removed him to the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station. His letters and badge identified him. Detective Kehoe from the West Twentieth Street Station went up and had Pearson taken home in a cab. In the meantime a surgeon from the J. Hood Wright Hospital pronounced his injury a trivial scalp wound.

Later, when he did not recover, Mrs. Pearson called in Police Department Surgeon Palmer and her family physician and they found Pearson's skull to be fractured. He was then taken to the hospital. He left a widow and three small children. They are practically destitute, Capt. Moynihan said.

MINERS FEAR A STRIKE.

Think a Demand for Higher Wages Would Result in a Lock-Out.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., Jan. 27.—The anthracite coal operators and miners of this section were much stirred up to-day by the reports sent out from Indianapolis that the United Mine Workers now holding their National Convention in that city had decided to invite the operators of the anthracite region to meet their miners in conference and decide upon a new wage scale, which would call for an advance of 10 per cent. over the wages paid at present.

Many think that this is a forerunner of another strike in the hard coal regions, as it is believed the operators will not consent to meet the miners in conference. Even if this were the only obstacle, a demand for a further increase in wages would probably be sure to bring about a lock-out.

KNOCKED INTO RIVER BY TRAIN.

Woman Was Fished Out and Taken to Hospital, but Was Not Much Hurt.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Jan. 27.—Mrs. Catherine Donovan, thirty-eight years old, of Highland, while walking on the West Shore Railroad track yesterday afternoon was struck by a north-bound freight train. She was hurled into the river. Fortunately the water was shallow, and the railroad men had no difficulty in rescuing her.

She was taken on the same train that struck her to the Kingston Hospital, where it was said to-night that she is only slightly bruised, and will recover in a few days.

BABY KILLED IN FOLDING BED.

William Smith Forgot It Was There and Shut It Up.

Mrs. Thomas Landsberg, living at Lebanon Avenue and West Farms Road, in the Borough of the Bronx, took her three months' old baby Thomas yesterday and went to the home of William Smith, two doors away, for a visit. She was received in the front room, where there was a folding bed. The bed was taken down and the baby deposited in it. The room was rather chilly, and at Mr. Smith's suggestion the party went to the kitchen until he could build a fire. The baby was left on the bed as it was well covered.

After warming up the room Smith forgot all about the baby and shut the bed. A few minutes later he called the others in. When Mrs. Landsberg saw the bed and no trace of the baby she became hysterical. The bed was opened, but the baby was dead from suffocation. Smith was locked up, charged with homicide. The child's father offered bail for him, but the police declined to accept it, the arrest having been ordered by Coroner Burns.

TWO DROWNED WHILE SKATING

Thirty Boys and Girls Precipitated Into the Icy Water.

The Lives of Fifty Persons Imperilled on a Pond Back of Evergreen Cemetery, Near Williamsburg.

Two boys were drowned and the lives of about fifty others were imperilled yesterday afternoon, while skating on a pond back of the Evergreen Cemetery, just over the border line of Williamsburg. The accident was caused by the ice giving way. Of the number, about thirty, including several young girls, were thrown into the icy water and rescued with great difficulty. It is feared that the exposure they were subjected to will result in the deaths of some of them.

One of the drowned boys was William Schwadel, eleven years old, and the other was Philip Fleck, eleven years old, both residing at 355 Linden Street, Brooklyn. Both bodies were removed to Ruoff's morgue, in Queens County.

The pond where the children were skating adjoins the lampblack factory of James Lyons, and is about 200 feet wide, and the same number of feet long. It is a body of water fed from the Ridgewood Reservoir, and in some places it is twelve feet deep. During the recent cold spell there was much skating upon the pond.

Yesterday afternoon, about fifty boys and girls went to the pond to skate. They were advised by some of the men in the lampblack factory not to venture too near the middle of the pond, as the ice was thin. Little or no attention was paid to the warning given. Shortly before 4 o'clock, while the merry crowd were skating about, the ice gave way and precipitated about thirty of the number into the icy water.

The screams of the drowning boys and girls were heard for some distance, and men hurried to the scene from different directions. The first to reach the struggling mass was a number of men employed in the lampblack factory. They secured planks and other articles to rescue them. Word was also telephoned to the Hamburg Avenue Police Station, and Capt. Gaus immediately ordered out the patrol wagon, and, with a dozen policemen, hastened with all possible speed to the pond.

When they reached there, two of the boys had disappeared under the ice, while others had become so benumbed from the icy water that they were fast losing consciousness, and were about to sink when the Captain shouted to them to keep up courage for a few minutes longer. With the aid of hooks the struggling boys and girls were brought from the water, and those who were able hurried to their homes, while the others were assisted there.

The bodies of the two drowned boys were secured and removed to the morgue. The pond was searched, as it was feared that others had been drowned, but no other bodies were found. Those who suffered most severely from exposure were attended by an ambulance surgeon from St. Catherine's Hospital and given stimulants before being sent home.

SKATER FALLS THROUGH.

Nicholas Young Gets a Cold Ducking in Cromwell Creek.

While skating on Cromwell Creek, an outlet of the Harlem River, near One Hundred and Sixty-second Street, yesterday afternoon, a crowd of boys and men were startled by the cracking of the ice. There was a wild scamper for safety, but several of the lads went through.

Only one of them, Nicholas Young, twenty-three years old, of One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Street and Amsterdam Avenue, disappeared through the ice. The youth struggled to save himself, and Richard Terhune attempted to help him by throwing him one end of his coat.

He would have been lost, however, but for Mrs. J. F. Schafhauser, the wife of the manager of Huber's Hotel, which overlooks the pond. She saw the accident from a window, and threw out a coil of fire escape rope. Young caught it, and was pulled to safety. He was taken into the hotel, and, after being thawed out, went home.

Drowned While "Stealing" a Sailor.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Jan. 27.—Joseph Bartlett, a runner for a sailors' boarding house, was drowned in the river before daylight Friday morning. The investigation developed to-day that Bartlett, with a companion, was attempting to "steal" a sailor from the Italian barkentine Letiza. They were in a small boat alongside the vessel. The sailor's kit had been lowered, and the man was about to follow, when the ship's watchman, seeing what was up, dropped a short, heavy piece of iron into the boat. It knocked a hole through the bottom, swamping the frail craft. Bartlett was drowned. His companion swam ashore.

HARVARD MAN EXONERATED.

Autopsy Shows Crane, Who Was Killed In a Boxing Bout, Died of Heart Disease.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 27.—George R. Ainsworth, the young Harvard student, whose blow while boxing yesterday resulted in the death of Curtis L. Crane, was entirely exonorated from any blame in the matter to-day by the autopsy held by Medical Examiner Swan of Cambridge. Chronic heart disease was the cause of the young man's death. It was not brought about by the force of Ainsworth's blow.

Examiner Swan, in his report, says that Crane had chronic valvular trouble of the heart, which caused an obstruction of the aorta. He says the excitement of the exercise may have resulted in Crane's death, but he states emphatically that Ainsworth cannut be blamed. The fact that Crane had been troubled with his heart for some time was brought out by the statement of a Brookline doctor, who said that he had warned the young man frequently against violent exercise, and especially against boxing.

There has been considerable conjecture in Cambridge to-day as to the action Harvard authorities will take in regard to the affair. Ten years ago a similar tragedy resulted in boxing being prohibited at Harvard for a long time. Some similar action may be taken in the present case, but it is extremely doubtful, for Crane was not a Harvard man, and the accident did not occur in a college dormitory. Dean Shaler of the Lawrence Scientific School, in which Ainsworth is a student, was one of the first to reach the scene after the accident, and he also took entire charge of matters following. His explanation will probably be sufficient for the authorities.

Peoria Robbers Got $31,976 in Stamps.

PEORIA, Ill., Jan. 27.—The exact loss sustained by the revenue office from the visit of the robbers last Friday night has been determined to be $31,976. The plunder taken consists of revenue stamps of various denominations, carried off by the robbers in the original package. The weight of the plunder was nearly 300 pounds. No clue has as yet been discovered that throws the slightest light on the matter. J. W. McGinnis, revenue agent of this district, is here, as well as several of the secret service men from Washington and Chicago, who are at work on the case, but apparently with little hope of success.

HUGE SEAS SWEEP A SHIP.

Hole Knocked In the Deck of La Gascogne and Two Lifeboats Smashed —Passengers in a Panic.

Two terrific seas, mountainous in size and herculean in strength, staggered the French liner La Gascogne, smashed two of her lifeboats, twisted and broke the rails on her starboard quarter, frightened her 400 steerage passengers almost out of their wits, and gave to her saloon passengers a feeling of terror which will cause them to remember for many days to come the transatlantic voyage that ended at the French piers, on North River, yesterday afternoon. When La Gascogne left Havre she had not been headed westward many hours when the first of the bad weather developed. It came in the shape of gales from many points of the compass, and lasted for thirty-five hours.

When the first of the series of gales that were to cross her path during the passage abated, the vessel was found to have weathered it without having sustained any appreciable damage. From this on until she arrived off the Banks last Friday morning shortly after midnight La Gascogne was favored with what may be termed good weather, at least for this season of the year. The only unpleasant thing noticeable was the heavy swells and at times seas of a size above the average that would occasionally cause her to have an uncomfortable kind of roll that was not conducive to the good health of many of the passengers, especially those who were making their maiden trip across the Atlantic.

The first of the gales during the weathering of which a great sea swept across the liner was encountered early Friday morning. It was from the east-southeast, and in a short time after it began to blow its strength had so increased in fury that the vessel was rolled and pitched in making her way through the terrifically high waves. It was shortly before 3 o'clock when the sea that was to inflict considerable damage to the ship swept across her port side forward. Lifeboat No. 1 was caught by the wave as it swept over the decks, the boat tackle of the davits was snapped as if it was made of glass, and a tremor went through the vessel from bow to stern.

When the gale finally abated and all on board were beginning to feel that the rest of the voyage was to be a pleasant one, at noon the following day—Saturday—the wind shifted, and from the west-northwest a second storm began to gather. As in the case of the previous one, the wind rapidly increased in strength, and what the already seasick passengers had hoped was to be only a mild repetition of the other gale was in an incredibly short time blowing almost a hurricane.

When the second of the great seas, the impact of whose fury against the vessel's side nearly frightened the steerage passengers into a panic and made the more favored contingent in the cabin wish they were on terra firma, struck the Gascogne the minute hand of the clock was at 3:45 in the afternoon. The sea struck the liner on the starboard quarter, caught Lifeboat No. 2, wrecking and rendering it useless; smashed the chocks that kept her steady, broke the davits flush with the deck, twisted all the railings on the starboard side out of shape, and, as a finale, managed to knock a hole about four feet square through the turtle deck.

When the gap was made in the turtle deck the water rushed through, and, falling on the spar deck, caused a mighty noise, which drove the steerage passengers almost wild, the women especially being nearly overcome, so terrific was the shock and so terrible the sound that resulted from the havoc played by the furious sea when it swept across the great liner. When the weather abated this time the ship had a clear passage for the few hours necessary to make port, and nothing of an unpleasant nature marred the remainder of the voyage. From Capt. Poncelet to the lowest ranking man in the crew, the passengers had only words of high praise, and did not fail to compliment in every way the seamanship of each of them.

MILWAUKEE'S ACTIVE OLD MAN.

Over 93 Years of Age, but Building Sixteen-Story Business Block.

Special to The New York Times.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 27.—Daniel Wells is probably the most enterprising man of his age in the United States. Although past ninety-three, he is building a sixteen-story business block at the corner of Wisconsin and Milwaukee Streets, which is to cover 100 by 120 feet frontage and have walls of pure white glazed terra cotta.

Although carrying the weight of nearly a century on his shoulders, Mr. Wells is giving his personal attention to the great white monument he is erecting to his own memory. The Wells block is "on the hill," where the old Post Office used to stand, and when the walls are inclosed it will be the most conspicuous building in the city.

Daniel Wells came to Milwaukee when it was a trading post, and was the associate of Solomon Juneau. He has watched the city grow from a few log cabins to a great metropolis. His white office building is destined to become famous, as it is believed to be the only one of the kind in the country.

MRS. NATION HESITATES.

Does Not Want to Attack Topeka Saloons Single-Handed.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 27.—Mrs. Carrie Nation addressed a large audience at the United Brethren and First Christian Churches in this city to-night. She told the story of her work, and how she had come to start on the crusade.

"It is a pleasure," she said, "to speak here. Usually I am prevented from talking by the proprietors of these murderous whisky shops. This issue in Kansas is 'Down with the Whisky Trust.' The best rocks to throw are votes. We women cannot vote, but you men with your ballots and we women with our hatchets will clean up this awful traffic."

Mrs. Nation will probably address the meeting of the Kansas Women's Christian Temperance Union organization, which will be held here to-morrow. An attempt is also being made to have her speak to the Legislature on the subject of temperance. Mrs. Nation says she will not attempt to break up the saloons in Topeka single-handed, but if the women of the town will aid her she will start out "joint smashing" to-morrow.

DEAL IN SLEEPING CARS.

Syndicate Said to be Negotiating for Control of All Companies.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—The Chronicle will say to-morrow:

"It is now rumored that the Harriman-Morgan-Vanderbilt railroad syndicate is planning to buy out the Pullman Car Company and absorb, so far as possible, all the private car companies.

"For some time, it is said, the syndicate has been negotiating for the purchase of a controlling interest in the Pullman Company. Just how far the negotiations for the absorption of the sleeping car concern have progressed cannot be learned, but it is the prevailing opinion that the deal is on.

"The Pullman Company controls the sleeping-car privileges of every railroad in the United States except the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul and the New York, New Haven and Hartford. In the general plan of consolidation the two companies doing business on these roads will also be purchased."

DASHED FIRE ENGINE INTO ELEVATED PILLAR

Driver Trittenback's Heroic Act Saved Cabman's Life.

Two Men in Rear of the Machine Badly Hurt—Crowd Cheered Firemen and Tried to Lynch Cabman.

Fire Engine No. 8 from East Fifty-first Street, answering an alarm for a fire in the flat house at 980 Third Avenue last night, in an effort to avoid a collision with a hansom cab which got right in the engine's way, was driven into an elevated pillar near Fifty-eighth Street.

Engineer Peter Martin and Lieut. Edward F. Ryan were on the back of the engine. Driver George Trittenback was strapped to the seat. The concussion threw Martin's head against the safety valve and almost tore off his upper lip. Dr. Ramsdell of the Fire Department later had to put ten stitches into it. Lieut. Ryan was jerked against the machinery and severely shaken. The driver escaped with slight injuries.

Almost on top of the engine, and like it going at full speed, was a tender driven by Samuel Hague. By some skillful work Hague managed to swerve to the right and ran his vehicle into the curb. He was not hurt.

The fire was in the apartments on the second floor, occupied by Harry L. Holmes and F. W. Shaeffer. The damage was $750. Somebody sent in an alarm from the nearest box. In the meantime a crowd gathered. The hansom cab was near. Policeman Rogers ordered the crowd out of the way as the engines were coming. The driver of the cab swung his horse around rather tardily and just in time to get into Engine 8's way.

It was either hit the cab or elevated pillar. To hit the cab meant probable death to the cab's driver. The alternative meant either a similar fate for Trittenback and his companions or injury. True to the department's traditions, Trittenback decided on risking his own life. The heavy team of three horses were deliberately run into the iron column. The horses, one on one side of the pillar, the two others on the other, crashed to the sidewalk. The pole was smashed into splinters. When his engine stopped, Trittenback's legs were less than six inches from the iron barrier. His escape from the accident, and somebody, supposing a number of men must have been hurt, sent calls for police reserves and ambulances. The reserves arrived just in time to save the cabman from being lynched. The crowd declared he was drunk, and he was getting mauled when the reserves rescued him. He proved to be John McGrorey, twenty-nine years old, of 360 East Fifty-seventh Street, employed, he said, in a stable at 157 East Fifty-fifth Street. He was locked up on charges of being drunk and driving recklessly. There were several friends at the station later to get him out, but bail was declined. The Sergeant said he was too drunk to let him out.

The heroic act of the fireman was cheered again and again. The engine was put out of commission, but Lieut. Ryan, though injured enough to have put many men in a hospital, scrambled to his feet and, dashing to a 'phone, sent in a second alarm. The fire was easily extinguished.

Several people called at Engine 8's house and complimented the driver on his courage.

DANGER FROM RUMMAGE SALES.

Orange Board of Health Thinks They Have Caused Diphtheria.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Jan. 27.—The Orange Board of Health, which some time ago discovered sources of danger from clothing washed in Chinese laundries, has now declared that "rummage sales" are a productive source of contagion. Since the first of these sales of cast-off articles for charity a year ago, there has been a score of such enterprises in the Oranges.

Recently, two cases of diphtheria were discovered in a building where one of these sales had taken place. The health officers could not trace the source of the disease, and finally they concluded that it must have originated from the rummage sale. Hereafter those conducting these sales must have the clothing and other articles fumigated before the sale begins.

STATE CONTROL OF WATER.

Residents of East Orange Have Prepared Such an Act.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Jan. 27.—Residents of East Orange, headed by Dr. J. M. W. Kitchen, have begun a movement looking toward State control of the potable waters of the State. They have prepared an act which will be introduced in the Legislature to-morrow, setting forth that the increase in population has occasioned the pollution to a large extent of the waters of the State and that it is necessary that immediate provision be made for the economical storage and proper distribution of the rainfall and for its purification.

The act provides for the appointment of a commission of five citizens to serve without compensation, to make inquiry into the advisability of acquiring by the State a supply of pure water for the use of its inhabitants, and requiring the commission to report to the Legislature what legislation is needed in order to enable the State to procure such a supply and distribute it.

East Orange Rector Resigns.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Jan. 27.—The Rev. John W. Williams has resigned the rectorship of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, East Orange, to take effect May 1. He will then become associate rector of the Church of the Ascension, Atlantic City. Mr. Williams is a graduate of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., and of Oxford University. Before he came to East Orange, nine years ago, he was connected with St. John's Chapel, Trinity Parish.

Proposed Orange Mountain Borough.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Jan. 27.—Residents of Orange Mountain are taking steps to have that portion of the town of West Orange set off as a separate municipality under the name of the Borough of Orange Mountain. The proposed borough would include the residences of many well-known people, including John Crosby Brown, banker; Douglas Robinson, the estate of George V. Hecker, Gen. George B. McClellan's residence, now owned by Judge Gottfried Krueger of the Court of Errors and Appeals; Miss Marian Davis Collamore, besides a considerable portion of Llewellyn Park.

Stand of Colors for Filipino Cavalry.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Jan. 27.—On the recommendation of Dr. Maxwell S. Simpson, who left Plainfield two years ago to become a Surgeon with the United States troops in the Philippine Islands, the members of the New Jersey Naval Militia have started a movement to raise funds with which to purchase a stand of colors, including United States flag, regimental standard, and troop guidons, for the Macabebe cavalry, which is composed of native Filipinos. This body of soldiers is commanded by New Jerseymen, Dr. Simpson being Surgeon, with rank of Captain. Major Batson, the commander of the cavalry, is a resident of Newark when in this country.

MATAWAN SWEPT BY FIRE.

Principal Business Section of the New Jersey Village Wiped Out—Incendiarism Suspected.

MATAWAN, N. J., Jan. 27.—Fire wiped out the principal business section of this place last night, causing a loss of over $100,000. The flames would have destroyed the entire village but for the aid given to local firemen by the Keyport brigade.

The fire started in the harness shop of Roland Crawford in Commercial Block, on Main Street. It was discovered about 1 o'clock by Mrs. Mary Mays, a dressmaker living in one of the apartments over the stores which occupied the ground floor. She gave the alarm at once, but so rapidly did the flames spread that the occupants of the living apartments were driven out in their night clothing.

As soon as possible the firemen rallied to the scene, but by that time every part of Commercial Block was blazing. The wind was blowing a stiff gale, and drove the flames in every direction. They leaped across an intervening street and took hold of the Matawan Opera House. This was one of the largest buildings in the village, and was built of brick. It was soon in ruins. Its solid brick wall saved the buildings beyond it from taking fire, but meanwhile the flames were traveling in the other direction and eating their way steadily along the street.

Almost the whole population of the village, reinforced by the farmers for miles around, helped the firemen. When the conflagration was at its worst the only steamer owned in the village, to everybody's dismay, broke down and the firemen were crippled. They and the onlookers formed bucket brigades and fought the advancing flames desperately, but their efforts had little effect. When things looked worst the engine from Keyport came tearing up amid the frantic cheers of the people, and taking station ahead of the fire got several streams at work with the result that the flames were speedily held in check.

While working on the fire William A. Rogers and George Mackey, two firemen, had narrow escapes from being crushed to death under a falling wall. They were directly beneath it when it began to sag, but did not realize their danger until a section of the wall fell to one side of them. Then they ran, and the whole wall fell and piled up where they had been at work.

In all ten buildings were destroyed and several others were damaged. The principal losers are E. J. Brown, who owned four of the buildings in Commercial Block, and the J. D. White estate, which owned the opera house. Among the other losers are E. B. Flnston, Benjamin E. Griggs, F. H. Slater, B. Tice, Charles E. Guerin, and Bedell & Son.

The cause of the fire is not known, but it is generally believed the flames were started by an incendiary. There have been a number of fires recently which appeared to be of incendiary origin. This theory is further strengthened by the fact that this morning the house of R. W. Dayton was mysteriously burned. This, following so quickly upon the big fire of a few hours before, has caused much agitation and the authorities are making an investigation.

MR. WOODRUFF HAS A SCARE.

Trained Skunk Jumps from a Pie and Lands in Lieutenant Governor's Lap at a Boston Dinner.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 27.—It was an extraordinary pie which was brought into the Hotel Brunswick dining room during the Megantic Fish and Game Club's annual dinner last night and placed in front of the President, A. W. Gleason of New York, and in close proximity to the guests of the evening, Lieut. Gov. Woodruff of New York and Lieut. Gov. Bates of Massachusetts. When, with a fine burst of rhetoric, Mr. Gleason cut open the pie, out jumped a skunk.

The party, that is, the members of the club, were looking for something out of the ordinary to happen, for it is the habit of this association of wealthy Nimrods to "cut up" at its dinners; but the guests were totally unprepared, and when the skunk bolted for Mr. Woodruff's lap, both he and his Bay State confrere were badly scared. But the beast was tame—had been trained for the performance evidently, and as soon as the company had exhausted its laughter and it had been allowed to roam the floor of the dining room as long as it cared to, it was taken down stairs.

Lieut. Gov. Woodruff was greeted with cheers when called upon to speak. He said he was always glad to come to Boston. He had always recognized Boston as the centre of education. And this was never better illustrated than in the splendid conduct of the skunk.

TENNESSEE'S VOTE IS LATE.

Result of Action of Electors Has Not Yet Reached Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—There has been some rapid-fire telegraphing between the Tennessee delegation in Congress and the State authorities in Tennessee to-night, and as a result a journey at the expense of the United States Government is in prospect for some employe of the State Department. The time in which the Electoral votes of the various States should be sent to Washington expires to-morrow. The votes of all the States except Tennessee are in, and through some unexplained mistake or delay that State has failed to send hers, although her Electors voted Jan. 14.

The President pro tem. of the Senate, Mr. Frye, informed the Tennessee delegation of this to-night, and it has been making herculean efforts to find out the cause of the delay and to ascertain whether the certificate is on its way and will be here to-morrow. So far it has not succeeded. If the certificate is not received to-morrow Secretary Hay will have to send a special messenger to Tennessee to get the certificate, in order that the Electoral vote of the State may be counted with the rest on Feb. 13. The law does not permit him to wait any longer for the certificate.

SAYS TOWNE IS NOT A SENATOR.

His Term Expired When Mr. Clapp Was Elected, Secretary Bennett Maintains.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The Post to-morrow will say that a fine point has been raised over the right of Mr. Towne to continue to hold his seat in the Senate now that Mr. Clapp has been given a certificate of election by the Governor of Minnesota. It says that Mr. Bennett, the Secretary of the Senate, holds that Mr. Towne ceased to draw his salary on Wednesday, Jan. 23, when a certificate of election was given to Mr. Clapp by the Governor.

Mr. Towne on Friday introduced a resolution favorable to the independence of the Filipinos and was recognized by the Chair for that purpose. He gave notice that he would address the Senate on it to-morrow, and as a result of telegraphic correspondence Mr. Clapp agreed not to present his credentials and be sworn in until after the delivery of the speech, but Secretary Bennett has raised a question as to whether Mr. Clapp is not now Senator.

Inauguration of "Florida and Atlanta Fast Mail."

On January 26th the Seaboard Air Line Railway inaugurated the fastest schedule between the East and Atlanta and Florida, leaving daily from 23d St. Ferry, Pennsylvania R. Rs. at 12:10 midnight, Desbrosses and Cortlandt Sts. 12:15 midnight, arriving Southern Pines, N. C., 6:57 P. M.; Camden, S. C., 10:12 P. M.; Columbia, S. C., 10:30 P. M.; Savannah, Ga., 3:00 A. M.; Jacksonville, Fla., 7:30 A. M., making connection for all Florida points, Cuba, and Nassau, with through Pullman drawing room, sleeping car New York to Jacksonville. This train also carries a Pullman drawing room, sleeping car New York to Atlanta, arriving there 5:25 the second morning, making close connection for New Orleans, Nashville, Tenn., and points Southwest.

The "Florida and Metropolitan Limited" leaves daily from 23d St. 12:55 P. M. and Cortlandt and Desbrosses Sts. 1:00 P. M.

COLER AFTER THE FIRE DEPARTMENT

Has Made an Investigation of the Contracts for Supplies.

"AGENT" MARKS'S BIG FORTUNE

His Close Friendship with Commissioner Scannell—Contracts for a Peculiar Kind of Hose.

A small hole in 100 feet of rubber hose is destined to cause startling exposures of the methods of certain contractors in furnishing supplies in the City of New York.

The hole was placed in the 100 feet of hose by experts to whom the 100-foot length was submitted by investigators of the Finance Department. It was a part of a 10,000-foot lot furnished for the use of the Fire Department in Brooklyn.

The notice of Controller Coler has been called during the past two years to the matter of supplies furnished on special orders without competition from Fire Commissioner Scannell. The Finance Department experts found a man suddenly growing rich. His income was from $40,000 to $50,000 a year. He claimed to have influence with the officials of the Fire Department, and it is alleged that he found it easy to obtain from 10 to 20 per cent. on all contracts for supplies furnished to the department over which John J. Scannell is the head.

The contractor—or agent—as he was known to all the firms in New York dealing in Fire Department supplies, is the man who a year ago gave a dinner at the Democratic Club. His name is William L. Marks, and the business directory shows that he is in the Fire Department supply business at 320 Broadway.

The dinner at the Democratic Club cost $135 a plate. There were twenty people present. Among the number were Fire Commissioner John J. Scannell, Corporation Counsel John Whalen, two Justices of the Supreme Court, and the remainder of the guests were Tammany politicians. The souvenirs of the dinner were most elaborate. Miniature fire engines costing $50 apiece, were given out. The facts of this elaborate dinner given by "Agent" Marks were kept a secret, but the members of the Democratic Club who were not invited talked about the feast and the news was soon out.

The wonder at that time was how a comparatively unknown man in the Democratic Club could give such a magnificent banquet. "Agent" Marks became well-known character at once. His hand was shaken whenever he came to the club, and he was recognized as one of the most successful members of the organization.

The experts in the Finance Department have been watching the contracts which "Agent" Marks has secured from the city. In addition to acting for many firms in supplying goods to the Fire Department, Mr. Marks organized a company of his own, known as the Powers Manufacturing and Supply Company.

Controller Coler's investigators found that "Agent" Marks had represented to a dozen firms which could supply the Fire Department with materials such as engines, rubber hose, nozzles, and all the paraphernalia for the fire fighters of New York, that the best way to get contracts was to give him the power to negotiate with the Fire Department.

said Controller Coler. "I told Commissioner Scannell that such a violation of official etiquette was wrong, and that it would not happen again. It is right that all official communications should be directed to the head of the department."

Controller Coler, when urged to discuss the matter, said:

"I want to say that the New York Fire Department contains the bravest men in the world. They will take their lives in their hands to save others. These men are entitled to the best supplies which the best manufacturers can furnish. The city is paying a very high price for supplies for the Fire Department, and I have become convinced that the city is not getting its money's worth."

It was found that Controller Coler's experts have affidavits and official reports which he refused to make public last night.

DR. SIMPSON'S SUICIDE.

No Cause Yet Discovered to Account for His Act—His Relatives Arrive.

No explanation which was given yesterday concerning the suicide of Dr. William L. Simpson, who shot himself in the head in the Hotel Gerard at noon on Saturday, explained the cause for the act. The body was removed from the hotel to the Curran undertaking establishment, at 464 West Fifty-first Street, late on Saturday night. During the night Mrs. Ida B. Sperry, mother of Mrs. Simpson, arrived from Boston, and late yesterday afternoon Charles Simpson, a brother of the deceased, also reached here. The latter will take charge of the funeral arrangements.

The letters which were written by Dr. Simpson before he shot himself remain undisclosed. They are in the possession of the Coroner, who will turn them over to the persons to whom they are addressed.

The contents of the letters are known to several persons. Immediately after the suicide, Mrs. Simpson read them aloud in the private office of the hotel, where there were at the time the Hambien brothers, proprietors of the house, and Detective Lyons. Those who heard them read say that they contained principally directions for the disposition of the insurance on Dr. Simpson's life. The Hambiens denied that a woman other than Mrs. Simpson was mentioned in these letters.

Numerous reasons were ascribed for Dr. Simpson's suicide, but none of them could be proved. Dr. H. T. Harvey repeated his assertion that Dr. Simpson had been for a long time a sufferer from appendicitis, and that the pain caused him to express the wish that he were dead.

GRIP AFFECTED HIS EYESIGHT.

Dr. Nehrbas of Flatbush Nearly Went Blind as a Result.

Dr. Frederick M. Nehrbas of 190 Clarkson Street, Flatbush, Brooklyn, has become partially blind as a result of an attack of the grip. He was taken ill with the disease about a month ago, and a week later his eyesight began to fail. For the past two weeks the doctor's sight has been so affected that he has been unable to read or write, and has had difficulty in distinguishing the faces of the different members of his family.

The physician is being treated by oculists, and he said last night that he was gradually recovering his eyesight. He expected that it would be fully restored to him within two or three weeks. The doctor said that his sight began to fail him on a day when his head felt particularly bad. He has experienced no pain, only a dimness of vision which becomes worse when he attempts to use his eyes, over which he wears a bandage most of the time.

KEPT AFLOAT BY HIS COAT.

Man Had Jumped Into the Harlem After a Quarrel at Home.

John Buchanan, forty-five years old, living at 949 East One Hundred and Forty-second Street, quarrelled last night with his sister-in-law. Then he walked down to the Madison Avenue Bridge and jumped into the Harlem River. The policeman stationed on the bridge heard the splash, but could see nothing. He called to Engineer A. arue Gibson of the bridge, who put out in his rowboat.

After a search of twenty minutes Allison saw a dark object near by in the water. It was Buchanan. The man had been buoyed by his overcoat. It had spread out parachute-like as he dropped.

He was benumbed. They took him to the Harlem Hospital, where he told why he had jumped, and then sank into coma. The physicians said he would have about one out of a hundred chances of surviving the shock of his long exposure in the icy water.

THREW POTATOES AT HIM.

So the Discharged Chef of the Democratic Club Complains.

Joseph Spettel, chef at the Democratic Club; Robert Denver, who had charge of the oyster counter, and three other employes have been discharged as the result of trouble with Superintendent David Ross in the kitchen last week.

President Randolph Guggenheimer of the City Council was dining a few friends when fault was found by Ross with the potatoes and the oysters. Spettel alleges, and he is corroborated by Denver, that Ross threw the potatoes at Spettel and followed them with the platter, which cut Spettel's nose. Spettel threatens legal proceedings.

Superintendent Ross was reported at the clubhouse last night to have gone out for the evening. One of his friends there denied the version of the affray given by Spettel and Denver.

VANCOUVER WRECK-STREWN.

TACOMA, Washington, Jan. 27.—The revenue cutter Grant, Capt. D. F. Lozier, will start Monday morning on one of the most perilous voyages ever undertaken in search of missing vessels and distressed mariners. Twenty-five vessels bound for Puget Sound and the coast are missing, supposedly driven north.

Vessels from Alaska report the entire coast of Vancouver Island, 250 miles of rocks and reefs, strewn with wreckage. The Grant will examine every mile of Vancouver coast as far north as Cape Scott in steamboats and launches, and will search over every piece of wreckage for identification. The Treasury Department is highly commended by shipping men for sending the cutter.

Fire in Willard's Hotel In Washington.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Fire broke out about 2:30 o'clock this morning in a small room on the first floor of the old portion of the building occupied by Willard's Hotel, and which adjoins the new structure now in course of construction. The flames were confined to this room and the halls immediately adjoining, and the property loss will not exceed $1,000, but a half-hundred guests, including several Congressmen and their wives, were badly frightened. All, however, managed to escape in safety.

Killed by His Own Truck.

John Miller, thirty years old, of 313 East Ninety-third Street, died in the Presbyterian Hospital yesterday from injuries received on Saturday when he was run over by the truck he was driving. Miller was driving up Sixth Avenue and was about to turn into One Hundred and Sixteenth Street, when one his horses stumbled. He was pulled from his seat and fell to the pavement, and then one of the wheels pased over his abdomen.

Fell from Car, Fractured Skull.

An unidentified man fell off a car at Broadway and Eightieth Street last night and fractured his skull. He was taken to Roosevelt Hospital. He is about thirty-five years old. On him were letters addressed to "Dear Dan" and signed "Kate." He had a pawn ticket for a ring on which Pawnbroker Levy of 361 West Forty-second Street advanced him $1. The ticket was made out in the name of "Rafferty."

New York Farmer Mysteriously Shot.

TROY, N. Y., Jan. 27.—A special to The Record from Schaghticoke says: "Lebbena Rise, a farmer of this place, was shot through the head this evening while sitting with his family in the parlor and can live only a few hours. The story told by the family is that the bullet was fired through a front window. The assassin stood only a few feet from where Mr. Rise was sitting. The murderer is unknown, but a man by the name of William Clapperton who worked for Rise last October, and who made threats against him, is suspected, and the authorities are searching for him.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Jan. 27.—A fire at 3 o'clock this morning in the livery stable of Matthew Talivan destroyed the stable and two horses. The loss will reach $5,000. The house of J. D. Cole, at New Bridge, was damaged by fire late last night to the extent of $5,000. The house was occupied by J. H. Hunt.

GOVERNOR'S TAX BILLS NOT HARD FOUGHT

Surprise at Albany that So Little Opposition Has Developed.

Corporations Were Expected to Make Hard Fight Against the Measures—No Hearing Asked for Yet.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 27.—So far as surface indications go, the corporations seem to be rather indifferent to Gov. Odell's tax measures, designed to put an additional burden of $9,000,000 annually upon them. That they contemplate no resistance to the Governor's plan to abolish the State direct tax by making them furnish the required revenue for the needs of the State is a hope which even the Governor does not entertain. On the night the first batch of the measures went to the Legislature the Governor remarked:

"We will make the best fight we know how to pass them." He expected opposition to the measures, and was prepared to meet it. That this opposition has not developed to the extent which was anticipated has occasioned surprise. Senator Krum, when asked if a day had been set for a hearing upon any of the measures, said that no hearing as yet had been requested. Probably the opposition will show a determined front later, but at present the leaders in the Legislature are puzzled as to the tactics which the corporations intend to pursue with regard to the measures.

The only formal protest which has yet been received here against any of the proposed tax legislation is that of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation to the Tax list bill which was introduced by Assemblyman Smith. This is not one of the measures which is embraced in the list of what are known as "the Governor's bills." Nevertheless, it is a bill drawn up to meet the recommendations of the State Controller for legislation which would lead to a more accurate listing of personal property. The bill provides that every taxpayer in the State shall deliver to the Assessors a statement in writing, and in detail, verified by the oath of the person making it of all personal property owned or held by him or her on the first day of May, then next preceding, together with a statement of the value thereof.

These inventories shall be used by the Assessors as a basis for the assessment of personal property, but the Assessors shall themselves assess such property at its full and true value, according to the best information which they can secure. The Assessors are given the power to subpoena the person making the statement, and put him or her upon cross-examination, and they may also subpoena and cross-examine other persons who they believe can furnish information upon the statement in question. In its protest against the passage of this bill the Board of Trade and Transportation says:

"The true effect of this bill should be, an act to discourage commerce and manufactures in the State of New York, and such will be its effect. Many of our large manufacturers now find it to their advantage to have their factories in New Jersey. Pass this bill and the number of such will be largely increased."

In his recent report to the Legislature the State Controller said:

"The attention of your honorable body is again called to the great disparity between the assessed valuations of real and personal property, as appears from the returns to the Supervisors last year. The assessed valuation of real property was $4,811,593,039, while the assessed valuation of personal property was but $649,709,193. The assessed valuation of real property has been increased during the year about $400,000,000, which amount it is estimated that $75,000,000 has been added through the working of the special franchise act, so called, while the assessed valuation of personal property has decreased nearly $25,000,000."

The Controller further remarks that while in 1870 personal property bore 22 per cent. of the burden of taxation, which he says was a small portion, in 1900 it bore but half as much, which, he adds, "is certainly out of all proportion to the known increase in the value of the vast amount of personal property in this State."

As a matter of significance in this connection, the Controller calls attention to the fact that the aggregate deposits, capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits of the fifty-nine trust companies operating in New York were on July 1, 1900, $778,933,113, or $190,000,000 greater than the total assessed valuation of the personal property in the State. As a further comparison, he mentions the fact that the total deposits, capital stock and surplus of the sixty-three banks in the New York City Clearing House alone, on Nov. 24, 1900, were $1,015,727,900, an amount $400,000,000 more than the total assessed valuation of the personal property of the State.

The Controller's comment upon these figures is that they "show the returns of the personal property of the State for the purpose of assessment to be ridiculously small." His conclusion is that no question can be raised as to the inadequacy of the present taxing statutes to reach all the property of the State which is properly taxable.

THE SWEATSHOP PROBLEM.

Report to the Legislature by State Factory Inspector—16,059 Licenses in Force.

ALBANY, Jan. 27.—The sweatshop problem, the conditions existing in the tenement houses of New York City, and the effect of the new license law for dwellings in which articles are manufactured are treated at length by State Factory Inspector Williams in his report to the Legislature. Among other things he says:

"The utilization of tenement labor in some branches of manufacture is very extensive, especially in Greater New York. This is undoubtedly due to the cheapness of this form of labor. It is nevertheless a sad commentary upon the spirit of the age that at the dawn of the twentieth century men who hold their heads high in the business world, and presumably some also in the religious world, indirectly traffic in the very lifeblood of their fellow-men.

"Under the tenement house system of manufacture, our beneficent laws restricting the hours of labor for all women and minors and prohibiting the employment of children are set at naught.

"The close of the present report year sees a vastly improved condition in thousands of tenement and dwelling workshops. Every part of this law has been tested and found effective. There is but one drawback of consequence noted at this time, and that is the difficulty of obtaining correct and reliable information from many of those employed in tenements under a license. The law should be amended by adding a provision requiring the owners of articles manufactured in tenements, in whole or in part, to attach to each such article, before it is placed in the tenement apartment, the correct name and address of the owner or his agent, for purposes of identification, until such time as the article is returned to the owner.

"During the year the department carefully investigated 22,801 applications for licenses received from the territory of Greater New York. Our investigations established the right of 16,519 applicants to manufacture in their apartments, workrooms, &c., and licenses were accordingly granted to them, as required by law, while 6,082 were denied the privilege owing to unlawful conditions existing in or about their premises. During the same period 2,354 licenses were revoked; still, we have remaining and in full force at the close of the report year 16,059 licenses.

"Goods were tagged in about 1,100 instances during the year in Greater New York. The value of this provision of the statute, especially in the metropolis, cannot be overestimated. The inspectors have on several occasions taken clothing in process of manufacture from between the folds of unkempt and unclean bedding, and affixed thereto that most feared of all emblems, the 'tenement-made' tag."

Unconscious in Bryant Park.

An unknown man was found unconscious sitting in Bryant Park on a bench facing the site for the new Public Library Building. He was taken to the New York Hospital in an ambulance, but died there shortly after his arrival, showing symptoms of morphine poisoning. The man was about thirty-seven years of age. He had a dark mustache, and was well dressed. No papers were found in the clothing, and the body was sent to the Morgue.

OPPOSED TO PERSONAL PROPERTY LISTING.

Merchants' Association Will Work Against "Assembly Bill 119."

The Merchants' Association is mailing 12,000 copies of a circular to all merchants in the city, calling attention to the dangers of the Personal Property Listing bill, recently introduced in the Assembly by Assemblyman S. W. Smith, from Columbia County, and known as Assembly Bill 119. This bill, they claim, is a revival of the old Listing bill in its worst form. Its ostensible object is to ascertain facts for assessment.

The Merchants' Association is also mailing 35,000 copies of a circular to all merchants, manufacturers, and business men generally throughout the entire State of New York, calling their attention to this bill, and requesting them to move against it through the Assemblymen and Senators from their respective districts. The old bill of the same character was fought out in the Legislature about ten years ago by the commercial interests of New York through what was known as the "Wholesale Merchants' Committee," which was the predecessor of the Merchants' Association. The late ex-Mayor W. L. Strong was the Chairman of that committee, and William F. King, now the President of the Merchants' Association, was its Secretary. The fight maintained by that committee in Albany and throughout the State was one of the hardest known in legislative history.

The committee conducted an educational campaign in every county, and organized delegations from all parts of the State to visit Albany and appear before the committees of the Legislature in opposition to the bill. The bill was finally defeated. The same methods will be pursued in this case.

The day upon which the papers noted that this bill had been introduced the Merchants' Association wrote to Albany for a copy of it. As soon as it received the copy it ordered 50,000 copies printed for distribution with its circulars throughout the State and to all merchants in the city.

In a circular the Merchants' Association claims that "the effect of a bill of this kind will be to drive capital out of the State. There are enough vicious laws on the statute books which react upon the commercial interests, and which have already driven hundreds of millions of capital into other States, where the taxes are paid by that capital, but upon which taxes ought to be paid in this State, and which would be paid here if attacks of this kind were not being frequently made. It is impossible to calculate the indirect effect of the vicious legislation which has been aimed at business interests in times past, or to estimate even in a moderate degree the effect that a bill of this character would have should it become a law."

The Merchants' Association further says:

"The bill requires that you shall list all your personal property, place a valuation upon it, verify it by oath, and file it with the Assessors for purposes of taxation. The list must include all stocks and bonds, par value and market value; all mortgages upon property, real and personal, with full details; all promissory notes in detail; all money in hand or in bank; all accounts receivable, and all merchandise and other assets.

"Four distinct and excessive penalties are provided to enforce its provisions. It creates a wholly artificial offense, and in effect proposes to confiscate your property without constitutional right. If this bill becomes law it will inflict enormous harm on the business interests of the entire State."

WU REPLIES TO CRITICS

China's Minister Answers Strictures of American Clergy.

Says That in Ridiculing Confucianism They Do Just What They Ask Him Not to Do.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 27.—Wu-Ting-Fang, China's Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States, replied to his critics to-day in the course of a lecture on "Confucius and Mencius" delivered before the Society of Ethical Culture at Horticultural Hall. Every available inch of both seating and standing room was occupied by an audience which, attracted by the protest and criticism raised by Minister Wu's recent utterances in New York City on the subject of Christianity, listened with much interest to the speaker. The Chinese Minister's statements were, however, extremely conservative. S. Burns Weston, Director of the society, introduced Minister Wu, who said:

"Twenty-four centuries have rolled by since Confucius walked this earth. His influence is as great to-day among his countrymen as it ever was before. Never was his name held in greater veneration than it is now. Throughout the length and breadth of the Chinese Empire, everywhere, are temples erected in his memory. Every schoolboy acknowledges him as the supreme teacher of the Chinese race. His spirit pervades a nation of 400,000,000, and his work is recognized as law to the most august Emperor on the throne as well as to the meanest peasant at the plow. Thus is Confucius enthroned in the hearts of his countrymen."

At the close of his address the speaker said: "I find that the address on Confucianism I delivered last month at Carnegie Hall in New York has attracted a great deal of attention. It is a source of gratification to me that the remarks made on that occasion have elecited comments from the American press which are generally very favorable, and also expressions of approval from persons in different parts of the country. But, on the other hand, I have seen in the newspapers some adverse criticism on my address from a number of clergymen. But, lest a false impression may have gone forth in regard to that address, I take this opportunity to say a few words about it by way of explanation."

Minister Wu then quoted an extract from the sermon of the Rev. Dr. Wayland Hoyt of this city, on Sunday, Dec. 16, in which the latter spoke of Li-Hung-Chang's high tribute to the work of the Christian missionaries in China, and asked what reply the Chinese Minister could make.

"Dr. Hoyt has done me, though doubtless unwittingly, a great injustice," continued Mr. Wu. "Since he wants a reply, I have no hesitation in giving him one. I indorse every word that Earl Li has said on the subject of foreign missionaries, as cited by the doctor. To prove that I am sincere in what I say, I beg to refer the doctor to the address I delivered in December last before the American Academy of Political and Social Science in Philadelphia on 'Causes of the Unpopularity of Foreigners in China.' I suppose the doctor had not read that address, or if he had read it he has forgotten it. In any case, I would not believe that an eminent divine could be capable of purposely misrepresenting us.

"Again, Dr. Hoyt and some other clergymen, from their addresses, seemed to think that I charged all missionaries with crying out for vengeance. Let me read the exact words I used. 'Love your enemy, is Christ's command, but at this moment some Christian missionaries are crying out for vengeance and bloodshed.' Note that I used the word 'some.'

"I am inclined to think that the reason why some clergymen—and I am glad to say that there are not many—took offense at what I said in my address on "Confucianism" is that it took the liberty of instituting a comparison between Confucianism and Christianity, which they supposed was done to the disparagement of the latter. There was certainly no intention on my part to make an attack upon Christianity. Surely, it is no discredit to say that Christianity is too high and elevated for frail humanity, and that all Christians are not acting up to its tenets, just as it is no disgrace to acknowledge that the Confucianists in China do not live up to the teachings of Confucius.

"It seems strange that some clergymen should resent any attempt to compare Christianity with other systems of belief, while they themselves do not scruple to attack other religions. In other words, they do just what they do not want others to do. Since my address on 'Confucius' was delivered I have seen Confucianism condemned right and left. It has been called a failure. It has been dubbed 'effete,' 'vague,' 'unworthy of attention,' 'rotten to the core,' 'tottering to its fall,' and the like. I do not, however, quarrel with those who apply such opprobrious epithets to our creed.

"If Confucianism were as bad as its detractors try to make it out to be, it is strange that after twenty-four centuries it should be able to count millions and millions of people as its adherents. The noble and sublime teachings of Christianity need not fear criticism, much less friendly comparison.

"I believe that all religions teach men to be good. If every man would really try to act up to the doctrines enjoined by his religion the world would be far better. It would be well if priests and clergymen of every faith and creed would do their best to promote this desirable end. Thus these words of Confucius will be fulfilled, 'Let us all live in peace as brothers.'"

BOWERY BRANCH Y. M. C. A.

Twenty-ninth Anniversary of the Institution Celebrated—The Report.

The twenty-ninth anniversary of the Bowery Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association was celebrated yesterday. There were no special exercises at the headquarters, 153 Bowery, but the annual report of the branch was presented to about fifty of the leading congregations in this city, the pastors making special reference to the work from their pulpits. In some of these churches the Bowery Branch was represented by delegates from its management.

The Bowery Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association is the oldest organization doing mission and relief work in the city. It was established in 1872, and has since then been the relief station of the organization in New York. Its purpose has been to render temporary assistance to men without a home in the metropolis. Such men are given lodging and two meals a day for two weeks, if necessary, while they at the same time are assisted to obtain employment.

During the last year 3,093 different men have been sheltered and fed as guests of the organization. As many more have received meals and other temporary assistance. In all, 23,159 nights' lodgings have been given, and 86,044 meals supplied. Situations have been secured for 2,533 men.

In addition to this, the annual report shows that other relief has been afforded in a great number of cases. In addition to the relief work, a regular mission work has been carried on. This mission work, according to the report, has been attended with great success. Among those cared for have been many clergymen, lawyers, physicians, professors, and college graduates.

The organization is badly handicapped by the inadequate equipment at its disposal. The demands in the last years have been so great that a building three times the size of the one it occupies at present could be used to advantage. An effort is being made by the organization to raise funds for the purpose of extending its work.

A WOMAN ON UNIVERSALISM.

What the Rev. Mrs. Nina Vail Said from Her Husband's Pulpit.

The Rev. Mrs. Nina Vail, wife of the Rev. Charles H. Vail, pastor of the First Universalist Church, Jersey City, again occupied the pulpit yesterday in the absence of her husband, who is the Social Democratic candidate for Governor of New Jersey. Mrs. Vail's sermon was a doctrinal discourse entitled: "The Message of Universalism." Her text was from Luke, ii., 10, "I bring you tidings of great joy which shall be to all people."

"The Universalist Church," said Mrs. Vail, "proclaims the unity of God. We affirm the divine unity as a truth of reason and science. Science reveals absolute unity in God. Regarding Jesus, we do not believe or teach that Jesus was God. We cannot conceive the possibility of a being both man and God. We believe in Jesus as the son of God, but not in any supernatural sense. We believe the human race is an incarnation of the divine spirit. We are God's offspring. For this reason we cannot believe in the total depravity of man.

"Our heredity from God makes us all brothers. This oneness of humanity teaches us the identity of human interests. We teach that the Bible is a revelation from God, but not the only revelation. We reject the theory of the infallibility of the Bible. We look upon it as literature, and we read it in the same way that we read any other book, accepting the wheat and casting out the chaff.

"It is said of us that we teach a loose doctrine in regard to salvation, that we believe all are to be saved. Those who say this either do not or will not understand our teachings. We are the only ones who teach the surety of punishment. We have no scheme whereby a man may live as he pleases and on his deathbed repent, and by confessing Christ enter heaven on an equality with the best of men. The remission of sin is not the remission of punishment. We must bear our own punishment. We must reap as we sow.

"We look upon death as simply an open gateway by which we enter into a larger and a higher life. This equality of man, this unity, this brotherhood, based on the Fatherhood of God, will ultimately bring about a universal religion. This is the message of Universalism."

ALLEN MEMORIAL CHURCH.

Services Are Held in Celebration of Its Ninetieth Anniversary.

The Allen Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, 91 Rivington Street, yesterday celebrated its ninetieth anniversary. The church was dedicated Jan. 1, 1811. The church, which now stands almost in the heart of the "Red Light" District, was, at the time of its dedication, the centre of one of the most exclusive residence portions of the city. Rivington Street, now closely walled on both sides with tenement houses, was then a thoroughfare between two rows of handsome private residences. It was known as the "Old Stone Church" for many years, and had a large congregation.

In 1836, the records show, there was a membership of 600, while the present membership numbers but 78. The church was rebuilt and rededicated in 1837. This was followed by a period of great prosperity, the membership increasing to 1,225 in 1842.

The services yesterday were conducted in the forenoon by the Rev. Dr. Pullmann, Presiding Elder of the New York East District.

TO ROOT OUT CITY'S EVIL.

What Dr. Eaton Said of the West Side of Town.

During the course of a sermon on the means by which New York could be made a morally clean city, the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Eaton of the Church of the Divine Paternity, Central Park West and Seventy-sixth Street, last evening, delivered a scathing invective against the rich, and made the assertion that the city could only be purified by striking at the root of evil, which he declared lay, not on the east side, but in Fifth Avenue and the upper west side.

Dr. Eaton's sermon was ostensibly a review of the book, "The Resurrection," by Tolstoi, but with a sub-title of "How May New York be Made a Pure City." In speaking of the book and the vice-ridden victims mentioned therein, Dr. Eaton said that as many victims were being sacrificed to Baal in New York to-day as in any city in the olden days.

"This," he said, "is caused by the social evil. You may appoint your committees of fifteen, and do very well; Tammany Hall may appoint its committees, and do equally well; you may change the head of the Police Department and give it either greater or less power, or you may put a new Mayor in the City Hall, but if you go no further you will have accomplished nothing.

"You have not put your hand on the right lever to accomplish anything. The right lever is the individual soul. Every citizen of New York has a solemn obligation to go to the root of this evil and kill it; to begin at the bottom and root it out, and the source of the sensualness of this city is in Fifth Avenue and the west side, where the wealthy and the sons of the wealthy live in idleness.

"They have nothing else to do but follow their sensual inclinations. If they are suppressed the root of the evil will be reached."

SALVATION OF THE CITY.

Permanent Reform Possible Only by Education, Says Dr. Van de Water.

"The Salvation of the City" was the theme of the Rev. Dr. George R. Van de Water's sermon in St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Church of Harlem, yesterday morning. In part he said:

"In common with all who make any profession to be good and do right, I have sympathy with anything that is reform, and with any person who is a reasonable reformer. I will do my utmost, as I have ever done, to effect by political methods the betterment of conditions in the community. But anything like a permanent reformation, the suppression of vice, the cessation of plunder by public officials, by any other means than the education of the people is quite impossible.

"The time will come, in my judgment, when Christian people will refuse to rent their property for liquor saloons, when one making any pretense to be refined will not frequent barrooms, when those who wish to be regarded as honest will desist from gambling, when public officials will be ashamed to live in a community where nobody can tell how they became independently rich, when places of ignoble amusement and sinful revel will be patronized only by those who have lost all sense of shame."

Registration by Proxy.

SYRACUSE, Jan. 27.—The Legislative Committee of the Commercial Travelers' National League has prepared a bill which will be introduced in the Legislature this week, providing for the registration for election by proxy.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST—Rain or snow probable, high northwesterly winds.

Threatening conditions obtain throughout the Atlantic States, and rain or snow is probable, with brisk and high northwesterly winds and probably gales on the coast. Rain or snow is also indicated for the Upper Ohio Valley and the lake regions; elsewhere generally fair weather will obtain. No decided changes in temperature are indicated. Storm warnings are displayed on the Atlantic Coast from Jacksonville to Eastport, and on the Gulf Coast from Port Eads to Punta Gorda, Fla.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES's thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau is as follows:

	—Weather Bureau—TIMES. 1900.	1901.	1901.
3 A. M.	16	24	28
6 A. M.	16	24	28
9 A. M.	18	26	33
12 M.	22	31	37
3 P. M.	27	33	37
6 P. M.	26	31	35
9 P. M.	26	30	32
12 P. M.	26	29	31

THE TIMES's thermometer is 6 feet above the street level; that of the Weather Bureau is 285 feet above the street level.

Average temperatures yesterday were as follows:

Printing House Square	32½
Weather Bureau	29
Corresponding date 1900	29
Corresponding date for last 25 years	34

The maximum temperature yesterday was 35 degrees at 2 P. M., and the minimum was 23 degrees at 6:15 A. M. At 8 A. M. the barometer registered 29.44, and at 8 P. M. it registered 29.17. There was 74 per cent. of humidity at 8 A. M., and 57 per cent. at 8 P. M.

A WOMAN OF MANY IDEAS

Housefurnishing and Shopping Her Chief Delights.

Just Now She Is Washing Down a House—How She Works for Others and What She Can Do.

"Just now," said the woman of all trades, "I am engaged in washing down a house. Cleaning house? No, not a bit of it. That is a favorite work of mine, but I call it by the old name. This house I am putting in order is a handsome brownstone which had become streaked on the outside as such houses will, and I am washing it. Not literally doing this myself, but it is being done under my direction and by my order.

"It is a little aside from my regular work, but then I never hesitate at anything, and when a woman for whom I have done other things asked if I could not find an ordinary man who would do it I said 'Yes' and 'No.' I could find the right man who would do the work well and not charge exorbitantly, but not an ordinary man. Work like that must be done by a stone-mason who understands his business. Any one who did not would leave more streaks than he took off, and the last state of that house would be worse than the first. So now I am figuratively washing down a house.

"The way in which I became a Jack-of-all-trades was through the advice of a friend. 'Now,' she said to me, 'when any one asks if you can do anything, don't say that you will try to do it and will do it to the best of your ability, but say you can do it and then keep your promise. You can do anything you will undertake.' I have never forgotten her words, and I find that when I put my mind to it, there is not much I cannot do. When I am in doubt as to the first step, I take a walk, stop at a shop window for a minute, or look at a painting, then the idea comes to me and I can't get home fast enough to carry it out.

"I have bought everything that any one could possibly use, from a piano to a shoestring. I love shopping, and I have bought and had made beautiful costumes for women I have never seen. They send me certain directions and an old gown to work by, and I do the rest. Just now I am about to escort a couple of wealthy women from the West around the city. It is surprising how entirely at sea a woman will feel upon coming to New York. She is not familiar with the city or its city ways, and she is afraid to take the initiative in anything and goes home without seeing the things that are best worth seeing in the city. It is the same with shopping, when women wish to make the best use of a short time. The shops are never the same. They change from day to day, and the things that are the attractions one day are gone the next. I make a trip by myself when I am to take a woman shopping, after learning just what she wishes to buy. Going alone, I can get around quickly, and then I am prepared to make the most of the time when we go together.

"But furnishing houses is a delight, and cleaning is one of my greatest pleasures. My work is like that of a housekeeper on a large scale, and one must be resourceful, keep in touch with many different things, and know how everything can be done in the best way.

"In furnishing a house I frequently begin at the first principles, the paperhanging and painting. I show my samples of paper, and we decide what will be the most satisfactory to use if the owner of the house likes to take any individual thought for it. Then I go on with the rest of the work. I buy the furniture, select the rugs, get the curtains, make them, have them put up, and put the house in entire readiness for the occupant. When there is furniture I plan to put it to the best advantage, and where there are carpets I use them as they are or make them over into rugs.

"One house that I put into readiness for the occupants I so well arranged that when they arrived the table was set in the dining room and the cook in the kitchen was preparing dinner. That was a country house, and I had several months in which to get ready while the owners were in Europe enjoying their honeymoon. There I used chiefly furniture taken from the storehouse, old family furniture, and only bought the necessary things, trying to do it as reasonably as possible, and sending in my bills, which were promptly paid. I unpacked twenty-nine barrels of china and pottery for that house, I remember.

"One special direction I received from the bride's father. I had my work well under way when he sent

ENGLAND'S PRELATES LAUD THE DEAD QUEEN

Memorial Services in the Churches of London and Cowes.

Royal Personages Attend at the Latter Place—Immense Throng at St. Paul's and Westminster.

COWES, Isle of Wight, Jan. 27.—Lord Roberts and Mr. William St. John Brodrick, Secretary of State for War, were present at morning prayers in Whippingham Church at 11 o'clock to-day. An hour later King Edward, Queen Alexandra, and all the royal personages now at Osborne arrived at the church for the memorial service. This was a simple function, the hymns being sung by an unsurpliced choir of school children. Sir Walter Parratt, private organist to the late Queen and organist to St. George's Chapel Royal, played several funeral excerpts.

The Bishop of Winchester, who was the preacher for the occasion, delivered an eloquent panegyric upon Victoria, and declared that Emperor William's action in coming to her deathbed had touched the hearts of the British people, and cemented the unity and friendship of the two kindred nations.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—Yesterday throughout the kingdom all places of worship held services in memory of Queen Victoria. At St. Paul's Cathedral there was an unusual scene. Before 9 o'clock in the morning an enormous crowd attired in black streamed to the vast edifice from all directions, and by 10 o'clock it was packed. Thousands, unable to obtain admission, stood vainly waiting on the steps and around listening to the low organ strains and muffled peal. The service began at 10:30. The Most Rev. Frederick Temple, Primate and Archbishop of Canterbury, preached a most touching sermon.

There was a similar scene at Westminster Abbey, where all the services throughout the day were attended by enormous congregations. The large assemblage in the Chapel Royal at St. James's Palace included Princess Frederica of Hanover, Prince Francis of Teck, a host of titled people, many members of the Cabinet, and other distinguished persons.

All the Roman Catholic and foreign churches in London held special memorial services. The members of the French Embassy attended the French Church, and very elaborate services were held at the chapel of the Russian Embassy by command of Emperor Nicholas.

Everywhere particular attention was paid to the musical portion of the service. For instance, at Lincoln's Inn Chapel, Brahms's "Requiem" was performed.

The venerable William Macdonald Sinclair, Archdeacon of London and Canon of St. Paul's Cathedral, preached a commemorative discourse at Canterbury Cathedral.

Special sermons were preached in St. George's Chapel at Windsor.

Earl Cadogan, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, accompanied by the Countess, attended an afternoon service at St. Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin.

Everywhere cathedrals and churches were draped and hung with mourning emblems. Telegrams from the colonies and from all the principal cities abroad where British subjects reside report memorial services. Sir Alfred Milner attended the service at the cathedral in Cape Town.

NAVAL DISPLAY AT SPITHEAD.

Arrangements Attending the Removal of Victoria's Body.

COWES, Isle of Wight, Jan. 28.—The programme of the naval display at Spithead has not yet been prepared, but it is now understood that the British fleet will extend in a single line, following the north side of the navigable channel, from Cowes to Spithead, and thence to Portsmouth, while the foreign warships will follow a corresponding line on the south side.

It is believed that the body of Queen Victoria will be removed from Osborne at 3 o'clock Friday afternoon and will be conveyed on board the Alberta, escorted by eight torpedo boats and followed by all the royal yachts and probably the Hohenzollern. The body will remain on the Alberta for the night and be taken to London Saturday morning. It is understood that the Queen left the most detailed instructions regarding the disposal of her body and the attendant ceremonies. She is said to have expressed a wish that Chopin's and Mendelssohn's funeral marches should be performed in reference to the Dead March in "Saul."

PARIS, Jan. 27.—The French Minister of Marine, M. De Lanessen, has ordered the armored cruiser Dupuy de Lôme to represent France at the naval assemblage off Spithead on the occasion of the removal of Queen Victoria's body from Osborne to Portsmouth.

SERVICES IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Queen Victoria's life, reign, and death formed the theme in many Washington pulpits to-day, while in most of the local churches of all denominations fitting reference was made to the demise of the ruler of the British empire. At Epiphany Church an elaborate service in memoriam was celebrated at 11 o'clock. Rev. Dr. Randolph H. McKim, the rector, delivered a sermon on the life and death of the Queen. A special musical programme was arranged for the service.

Lord Pauncefote, the British Ambassador, attended the service, accompanied by Lady Pauncefote and the Misses Pauncefote. Gerard A. Lowther, the First Secretary; H. C. Norman, Third Secretary, and Mr. Burton-Alexander, honorary attaché of the Embassy. Members of the Sons of St. George were conspicuous among the congregation. The service was one of marked solemnity.

BRITISH PRINCE'S EQUERRY HERE.

Col. Larking Learns of Queen's Death on Landing from the St. Louis.

Among the passengers who arrived on the American liner St. Louis yesterday was Col. Cuthbert Larking of the Queen's Household, and who is an Equerry to the Duke of Connaught, third son of Queen Victoria. When he landed a cablegram was handed to him informing him of the Queen's demise.

"I feel the Queen's death most sincerely," said Col. Larking. "I have been of her household for more than twenty years. Every person in the empire, from the highest to the most lowly, has sustained a great personal loss in the death of the great and good woman who for so many years ruled the English nation."

Col. Larking had intended to spend several weeks in America as the guest of friends, among them Clement A. Griscom, President of the International Navigation Company. The death of the Queen will necessitate his early return, however, and he will only remain about two weeks. He was last in America about ten years ago.

CHURCH PARADE DEPRECATED.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The suggestion by "A Scot" of a church parade in commemoration of the death of our beloved Queen is a good one, but the writer knows from past experience that Englishmen are not in favor of parades. They consider that they show their devotion quite as much in attending the memorial service.

On Saturday next, Feb. 2, the day our deeply lamented sovereign will be laid to rest in the mausoleum at Frogmore, a memorial service will be held at Trinity Church, but as the church will hold but 1000, only a tithe of the number of British residents in New York will be able to gain admission, and a movement is now on foot to hold a special memorial service for the many British societies and others on Sunday, Feb. 3, at St. James's Church, Seventy-first Street and Madison Avenue, by permission of the Rev. Edward Walpole Warren, which, when arrangements are completed, will be duly announced in the daily papers. HENRY JAMES BULL,
Late Secretary Queen's Diamond Jubilee (New York) Celebration.
New York, Jan. 26, 1901.

Memorial Services for the Queen.

At the morning service yesterday at Grace Church the announcement was made that a memorial service will be held there on Saturday, the day of the Queen's funeral, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The service will be coincident with the one to be held in Old Trinity, and the rector of the church, the Rev. Dr. Huntington, will officiate. A memorial service will also be held at St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Church, Harlem.

MOURNING FOR VERDI.

Tribute from the King and Queen of Italy—Will Directs That Funeral be "Very Modest."

MILAN, Jan. 27.—Although preceded by a struggle for life that lasted two days, Verdi's death when it came was peaceful. He did not regain consciousness. When he passed away he was surrounded by relatives and intimate friends.

The announcement of his death caused great emotion. Theatres, pleasure resorts, and many stores were closed, and nearly all the prominent residences were draped. To-day the city authorities published a eulogistic proclamation, which was posted throughout Milan.

King Victor Emmanuel sent to the family a telegram of condolence on behalf of himself and Queen Helena, saying:

"We join in the homage, regrets, and admiration offered by Italy and the civilized world to the immortal memory of Verdi. The nation and the glorious art of our country have suffered a loss so serious that it is beyond repair."

In his will Verdi asks that the funeral may be "very modest." He suggests that it take place either at daybreak or eventide, and that the ceremony be without music. "The chanting of two priests, two candles, and a cross will suffice," he wrote.

Many legacies were left to friends.

The date of the funeral has not been fixed, but it probably will be Wednesday or Thursday, and the interment will be in the Chapel of the Retreat for Indigent Musicians, which Verdi established, notwithstanding the fact that the City Council adopted a resolution to-day offering to place the body of the composer in the Municipal Cemetery among the illustrious citizens of Milan there interred. King Victor Emmanuel will be represented at the funeral by the Crown Prince.

The Scala Theatre will reopen after the funeral of Verdi with a performance in aid of the monument fund.

ROME, Jan. 27.—To-day's session of the Italian Senate was devoted to eulogies of Verdi by the President of the Senate and Signor Saracco, the Premier.

"The death of Verdi," said the Premier, "has caused universal sorrow in Italy, a sorrow felt from the royal palace to the lowest cottage in the capital, and from Rome to the humblest hamlet in the country. The Government joins in these sentiments."

Signor Saracco announced that a marble bust of the composer would be placed in the Senate Chamber, and that an official delegation would be sent to attend the funeral.

HORSE TOOK HIM TO HOSPITAL.

Cabman Found in Alcoholic Coma Inside His Cab When the Outfit Entered Bellevue Yard.

Early yesterday morning before break of day a horse drawing a very old and much-dilapidated cab, and without a driver, ambled through Twenty-sixth Street, and as the gates were opened turned into Bellevue Hospital yard and stopped in front of the reception hospital, where ambulances usually discharge their contents.

The horse stood there for some time before it was discovered by Night Policeman McHale. He made inquiries, but nobody knew of any person having been taken from the cab. Then it was discovered that a man in an alcoholic coma was in the vehicle. He was carried into the hospital and placed in the alcoholic ward, while a good feed was given to the horse.

Late last night the man came to his senses and said he was William Charles, thirty-two years old, of 313 West Twenty-first Street. He said he had been in Sixth Avenue twenty-four hours before, but as business was dull he had taken "a drink or two to warm up me insides," and then gone to sleep in the cab.

"I used to work for a cab company," he explained, "but I got tired of that lay and decided to get into business for meself. I bought this old cab at auction, and got me old horse in the same way."

The ambulance men thought they recognized the horse as one used in the Bellevue stables four years ago.

WOMAN'S STRANGE ACT.

She Accuses Two Men of Stealing Her Jewelry.

As the audience which attended the Sunday night concert at the Metropolitan Opera House was leaving last night, a well-dressed woman ran up to a man in the crowd and accused him of having robbed her of her jewels. The man was protesting, and a crowd had collected, when another man came out of the opera house and ran after a Broadway cable car.

The woman released her first victim, and dashing after the runner called him to stop. The fugitive heard that he was called and halted. The woman caught up to him and hit him in the face with her fist, and, as before, began screaming that the man had stolen her jewelry.

A policeman came up and took the woman in charge. At the station house in West Thirtieth Street she said her name was Mary Costello, and that she lived at 110 East Nineteenth Street. She was locked up for disorderly conduct.

FIGHT MAY END FATALLY.

Man Found Terribly Injured at Foot of Lodging House Stairs.

William McClellan, a machinist, thirty-nine years old, lives in the lodging house at 300 Bowery. Last night he wandered into the lodging house kept by Frank G. Schirmer at 262 Bowery. He thought he was in his own place. When Schirmer and Tony Giullo, the latter's porter, tried to convince him to the contrary, there was a fight.

Later a policeman found the machinist lying at the foot of the stairs with a fractured skull, several broken ribs, and internal injuries which at Bellevue Hospital it was said would probably cause his death.

Schirmer and Giulle were locked up on a charge of felonious assault.

RIVERSIDE PARK GRASS AFIRE.

Fire was discovered in the grass in the north end of Riverside Park just before 12 o'clock last night by Policeman Conges of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Stret Station. How the fire started is not known, but it spread through the dry grass, about six inches in length, with great rapidity, and burned from its starting place, near One Hundred and Twenty-second Street, north to One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, before it could be extinguished by the men of Engine Company No. 37, stationed at Amsterdam Avenue and Lawrence Street.

The burned area is about two acres. The burning grass made a very pretty spectacle and caused a big crowd to gather on the hill near by. The firemen turned most of their attention to keeping the fire from spreading to the stables and outbuildings around the Claremont Hotel, just a short distance north of Grant's Tomb.

FIVE HORSES BURNED TO DEATH.

Heat Drove Back Firemen Who Tried to Rescue the Animals.

Five horses were burned to death in an early morning fire yesterday in a three-story frame stable, at 599 East One Hundred and Forty-fourth Street. The stable was burned to the ground, the total loss being over $1,000. It belonged to Mrs. Eliza Norge, and was in the rear of her residence, at the number given. The animals were the property of grocers and tradesmen with places of business nearby.

The fire was first discovered about 2 o'clock by two men who were passing, and who gave the alarm. The stable doors were broken open by the firemen, and every effort made to get the horses out, but the heat was such that the firemen had to abandon them.

Fire on West Twenty-third Street.

The four-story building at 67 West Twenty-third Street was damaged by fire last night to the extent of $3,000. The tenants in the building were Benjamin Dlau, corset manufacturer, who occupied the first, third, and fourth floors, and with his employes, lived there; Dr. Brandford and his wife, on the second floor, makers of cold creams. Tyne's Café is in the basement. The fire burned through an airshaft and destroyed the roof, a portion of which fell in.

Woman Dies Suddenly on the Street.

Mrs. Eliza Franklin and her husband, Gabriel, who is a butcher and lives at 1,632 Amsterdam Avenue, got off a One Hundred and Tenth Street car last night on their way home from a visit to their son, at 69 West One Hundred and Fifteenth Street. While waiting for an Amsterdam Avenue car the woman complained of faintness. She was assisted to a near-by coal box and died almost instantly. A physician from the J. Hood Wright Hospital said heart disease had caused death.

VICTORIA EULOGIZED IN MANY PULPITS

Mayor Van Wyck Condemned for Failing to Half-Mast the Flag on City Hall.

Glowing eulogies of Queen Victoria were delivered in churches of all denominations throughout the city yesterday, in many of which the pulpits were draped with the British and American flags and mourning emblems. In some churches prayers were offered for King Edward VII. Mayor Van Wyck came in for criticism for failing to half-mast the flag on the City Hall when the news of the Queen's death was received. Following are extracts from some of the addresses:

The Rev. Dr. DONALD SAGE MACKAY, Fifth Avenue Collegiate Church.—Never in human history has the death of a woman struck a note of sympathy so wide or touched a chord of sorrow so universal as this death of Queen Victoria. Humanity becomes a great democracy this morning, as it stands in common sympathy beside her bier. Peoples and Kings, Princes and peasants, rich and poor, the humble and the great, are united in the bonds of their common humanity, as they mourn the death of one of God's true women. And it is from that standpoint, the standpoint of Victoria the woman, wife, and mother, rather than of Victoria Empress and Queen, that outside of her own dominion her name sways the suffrage of the world's respect.

The Rev. Dr. R. S. MACARTHUR, Calvary Baptist Church.—New York City has been humiliated in the sight of the civilized world by the refusal of its Mayor to make official recognition to the respect felt by all true citizens and patriotic Americans for the Queen. It is only an instance of the narrowness of the man and the organization whose Mayor he is and over which he presides. Such men are not worth honor. The enthusiastic lovers of republicanism were always ready to utter the prayer song, "God Save the Queen." She was loved not because she wore the crown of the greatest empire of the world, but rather because she wore the crown of a pure, noble, loving, and queenly womanhood.

The Rev. Dr. ABBOTT E. KITTREDGE, Madison Avenue Reformed Church.—The proper inscription for the world's tribute is not "Victoria the Great," but "Victoria the Good." Though she became a Queen by the accident of birth, it was her personal character which was her richest crown. It was her noble womanhood, which united the fear of God, the love of home, and devotion to humanity, which gave strength to the empire and won the warm and undying affection of all the English-speaking people.

The Rev. Dr. MORGAN DIX, Trinity Church.—Never before in history was the passing away of a life so deeply mourned in all countries. The death of the Queen—for that is the way we love to speak of her—speaks volumes for the betterment of man all over the world and for the cementing of the brotherhood of man. Men have become more closely bound together by the death of this noble woman. She had the wisdom of all the changes that had been wrought by time. She did not attempt to go against the tide, but she lost none of her dignity in anything that she did.

Rev. Dr. CHARLES H. EATON, Church of the Divine Paternity.—In all the elements of the higher civilization, in the establishment of religious liberty, in the purifying of Court life, and the establishment of Constitutional government, the services of the Queen have been effective. She has exercised a direct control both external and internal over the kingdom. American and English motives are essentially the same. We have for the most part the same laws, literature, and laws, for the entire Victorian period both nations have advanced in almost equal strides in national prosperity and the growth of a true democracy, while the sentiments of friendship have waxed strong.

The Rev. Dr. HOWARD DUFFIELD, Old First Church.—America has shared the benediction of her life. America joins in the universal tribute of affectionate sorrow at her passing away. Life would not lower the flag has lowered himself. We make public and formal record of our loving gratitude that God should have enabled the Queen to build up so noble a character and wield so regal an influence over so many human lives. We bow with sorrow at the thought that such a beneficent life force has been withdrawn from the world. We humbly pray that he who has come to wear her crown and whose veins throb with her blood, may inherit her spirit of profound reverence for God and loyalty to the highest welfare of his fellow-men.

The Rev. Dr. DAVID G. WYLIE, Scotch Presbyterian Church—Victoria was rich in womanly sympathy, and the world will not soon forget her tenderness toward Empress Eugenie and Mrs. Garfield, who, like the Queen, had felt deep and poignant grief. Then, too, she was interested in everything which tended to elevate woman. She was a queen in her home, and believed that home was pre-eminently woman's real sphere, where she should shine as a queen. We offer our tribute of love and homage to her simplicity and purity of life, to her illustrious virtue, and, to her high Christian character, which will be to coming generations a perpetual benediction and inspiration.

The Rev. Dr. S. P. CADMAN, Central Metropolitan Temple—Many women have done virtuously, but Victoria has excelled them all. Not only was she a good woman, but she was every inch a Queen, with rare funds of sagacity, wisdom, and zeal. Although she was a limited constitutional monarch, she was the greatest factor of the century in the politics of the world. She has stood for more of good and grace and peace than we can picture. In her death true statesmanship has lost its chief and most illustrious figure.

The Rev. Dr. J. M. PHILPUTT, Lenox Avenue Union Church—The Queen's reign was a most remarkable one, one that if we could look back upon a hundred years from now we would do so with wonder, and the chances are with disbelief. Her reign will probably be the most illustrious one in history. Her good influence had much to do with the wonderful strides made in the advancement of the world.

The Rev. DONALD MACDOUGALL, Caledonian Presbyterian Church.—We are mourning in common with the British Empire the loss of the beloved Queen. It is a loss felt not only by 400,000,000 subjects, but by the whole Anglo-Saxon race. The heart of America beats with that of England and with the Continent of Europe and the islands of the sea. Never was a death so greatly felt. Other Queens have done virtuously, but thou, Victoria, ideal wife, ideal mother, ideal widow, ideal woman, hast excelled them all.

The Rev. Dr. WILLIAM C. STINSON, Bloomingdale Reformed Church—Many changes have come about during the reign of Victoria, and not the least notable is the ascendancy of woman. This is due in very large measure to England's sovereign Queen. She was not, indeed, just the sort of a woman that would be called a woman's rights woman. She did not argue and clamor for equality with men, but she fairly proved woman's ability to rule in the most important affairs of mankind. Victoria was a worthy type and representative of her sex.

The Rev. Dr. P. N. WATTERS, Grace Methodist Episcopal Church.—Victoria was one of the best of Britain's rulers, and ranked high with the world's noble women. Not only is she mourned sincerely by her own subjects, but she passed to her reward cherished by all the peoples of the world. Britain has lost her Queen, but the world has lost one of its best and greatest women.

The Rev. Dr. GEORGE R. VAN DE WATER, St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Church of Harlem—There has passed from us the most noted woman of the last century; noted throughout the world no less for her goodness than her greatness. The Queen was not only in name but in reality the Defender of the Faith. Her character in all respects attested her high principles.

The Rev. Dr. J. F. CARSON, Central Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn—The qualities of character and the features of rulership which bound Queen Victoria to the people of her own realm have endeared her to the people of the civilized world, and to no people more, if quite as much, as the people of America. Because she possessed those qualities which America recognizes as worthy of admiration, and because her influence was always exerted for the preservation of friendly relations between the two English-speaking nations—peoples one in origin, one in thought, one in language—Queen Victoria is esteemed and respected in the United States. Her name has long been accepted here as a part of that heritage of race which the two Anglo-Saxon peoples share in common.

The Rev. Dr. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS, Plymouth Church, Brooklyn—Other eras have been praised by virtue of their splendor, for art and literature. We speak of the age of Pericles. We have much to say of the Emperors of Rome. We speak in praise and wonder of the Renaissance. But when we have made the most of these eras it remains for us to confess that no era was more glorious than that of Victoria, by virtue of the rise and reign of the common people and the progress of the people in the principles of liberty. The Queen has kept a simple, modest home. She has loved truth and justice, has been full of generosity to the poor, and has stood for the stability of Christian institutions.

Mayor Hissed by Colored Worshippers.

An audience of Afro-Americans which assembled in the Bridge Street African Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, yesterday, hissed Mayor Van Wyck, while Dr. H. C. C. Astwood, formerly United States Consul to Santo Domingo and now pastor of the church, denounced the Mayor for his refusal to lower the City Hall flag upon the occasion of the Queen's death. Dr. Astwood declared that by his attitude on the flag matter the Mayor had brought upon him the contempt of all good citizens. At the conclusion of his address resolutions were presented by the official board of the church expressing sympathy with British subjects at the loss of their Queen and praying for "a continuation of her glorious and righteous reign." The resolutions were adopted by a rising vote and they will be forwarded to King Edward VII. through the British Ambassador at Washington.

A BRITISH ROYAL MYSTERY.

Question Whether George IV. Left a Child May Now Be Settled.

One of the interesting questions raised by the death of Queen Victoria is as to what disposition will be made by King Edward VII. of the great English royal mystery. This mystery has now existed for over a century, and, if the new King wishes, it can be cleared up in a few minutes.

All that King Edward has to do, if he wishes to satisfy the curiosity of those of his subjects, and other persons abroad, who are interested in the matter, is to direct that a certain batch of papers lying in Coutts's Bank, in London, be made public. These papers relate to the marriage of George IV. to Mrs. Fitzherbert, and will, it is believed, settle once and for all the question of whether there was issue from that marriage.

Of course, even if a male child were born of the marriage, and if that child had male children in turn, the title of the present King to his Crown would not be threatened. A Prince of the royal blood cannot marry a subject, and even if Mrs. Fitzherbert had herself been of royal blood her marriage would have been legally invalid by reason of the circumstance that she was a Roman Catholic. But, on the other hand, a direct descendant in the male line of George IV. could not but hold a position of some distinction were he to be acknowledged, and it is within the bounds of possibility that were all the documents to be made public a great change in circumstances would await one or more American citizens.

For it has long been reported that there actually was a male child from the marriage of George IV. to the beautiful commoner, and that the child in question emigrated to America, settled in Washington, and died there some years ago. The person in question lived very quietly, but in good style, and the source of his income was a mystery. It was frequently reported of him during his lifetime that he was a son of George IV. and Mrs. Fitzherbert, and it was declared that the Society of Jesus had proof of his birth. It has even been said that a secret fund exists in London, the interest of which is paid to the descendants of the marriage.

The papers which were placed in Coutts's bank by Mrs. Fitzherbert are, so far as is known, the certificate of the marriage, a letter from George IV. relating to the marriage, a will written by George IV., the mortgage on the palace at Brighton, and a memorandum by Mrs. Fitzherbert. It is the last named which, unless there are other papers of which no memorandum was made, will, it is expected, clear up the mystery.

That there is a mystery behind it all seems certain from the extraordinary amount of caution exercised by those who had it in their power at one time to make public the documents. The papers were placed by Mrs. Fitzherbert in the bank, indorsed as follows:

These papers are placed by Mrs. Fitzherbert at Messrs. Coutts & Co., at the disposal of the Earl of Albemarle and Lord Stourton, according to a memorandum dated the 24th of August, 1833.
WELLINGTON,
ALBEMARLE, STOURTON.

In 1835 the Hon. Charles Langdale wrote a spirited defense of Mrs. Fitzherbert. He was a brother of the eighteenth Lord Stourton, who had died in 1846, and, the fourth Earl of Albemarle being also dead, Mr. Langdale applied to the Rev. and Hon. E. S. Keppel, his Lordship's fourth son and executor, for permission to make the papers public. This permission Mr. Keppel declined to give, stating as his reason the fact that the making public of the papers would "pander to the bad feelings of the great world, without doing any good." This reason certainly seems altogether insufficient, and the natural conclusion seems to be that there is considerably more than the mere proof of the marriage—which is now admitted to have taken place by almost all historians—to conceal.

If nothing else were needed to prove the marriage, the treatment of Mrs. Fitzherbert by William IV. when he succeeded George IV. would be enough to prove it. William offered to make Mrs. Fitzherbert a Duchess, introduced her to his family, and authorized her to wear mourning for George IV.

It seems certain that the persons who now have the papers in their keeping will not make them public without express authorization from the ruler of the United Kingdom, and that is why the new King's attitude to this vexed question will be awaited with interest.

The position of a descendent of a royal morganatic marriage is an anomalous but a good one. Col. Fitz-George, for instance, who is a son of the Duke of Cambridge, is one of the most popular men in London society. The Duke married an actress, who was afterward known as Mrs. Fitz-George.

TWO HOLIDAYS FOR CANADA.

Empire Day on the Late Queen's Birthday and Thanksgiving on the King's.

From The Toronto (Ont.) Mail and Empire.

The death of the Queen does not cancel the holiday this country always takes on the 24th of May. We have observed it regularly for sixty-four years, a long period in a history so short as ours. Nor is there merely long usage to sanction, and, we might say, hallow it. There is, first, the undying memory of the good Queen whose birthday it was. There is next the pleasant season. The 24th is usually a lively day. Nature has by that date got herself dressed in her most attractive colors, and the world smiles.

Undoubtedly no small part of the popularity the holiday enjoys is due to the time it falls. That time is usually as convenient as it is pleasant, plowing having been finished and haying not yet having been begun. Without the observance of the 24th of May, by sports and gayeties, it would be felt, not only in rural, but also in urban parts, that there was a long blank in the late spring. It is perhaps profitless to attempt to analyze the popularity of the day any further than to say it is dear to the people as Victoria's birthday, and that we have come to have a prescriptive title to it as a holiday. The habit of spending it enjoyably has got deeply rooted in our national life. Of all the people in this country there are few old enough to remember a time when there were no attractions on the 24th of May.

Until the law is changed, the day will continue a bank holiday. Let the law remain unchanged. If it is not considered that there is any remaining raison d'être for a holiday, it will not be difficult to suggest one. A new holiday has been adopted of late—that is, Empire Day. It has been twice observed already, and on both occasions on the 25th of May. Let it be transferred to the 24th, thus perpetuating the observance of the Queen's birthday, and making one holiday serve for two. It is fitting that the day of the late Queen's birth should be lastingly associated with the inculcation of imperial sentiment.

But the birthday of the King must be celebrated. Here we have another chance to economize by merging two holidays in one. His birthday falls on Nov. 7. Could we not also, out of compliment to him, fix that as the date for Thanksgiving, instead of continuing Thanksgiving as a movable feast?

KAISER A FIELD MARSHAL

Raised to an Exalted Rank in the British Army.

CELEBRATES HIS BIRTHDAY

Receives Royalties on His Yacht Hohenzollern at Cowes—Gift from the Late Queen.

COWES, Isle of Wight, Jan. 27.—This morning Emperor William received from the hand of the Duke of Connaught his sword on his appointment as a Field Marshal of the British Army. In the presence of the households of King Edward and the dead Queen, as well as a number of British and German naval officers, his Majesty has expressed great delight at the appointment. To-day he celebrated his forty-second birthday at Osborne. Shortly after 8 o'clock this morning the members of the German Embassy, who arrived from London yesterday, proceeded to Osborne and tendered congratulations to Emperor William upon his birthday. The Emperor, accompanied by the Crown Prince, met them in the reception room. There were no formal speeches.

After the memorial service in Whippingham Church Emperor William and the Crown Prince went directly to the Hohenzollern, receiving a salute of twenty-one guns. His Majesty took luncheon there, the guests including Lord Kintone, Col. Carrington, who is attached to his Majesty's staff while in England, the members of the German Embassy, and others.

Crown Prince Frederick William proposed the Emperor's health, which was drunk with "Hochs." The Kaiser then drank the health of King Edward, the entire company standing.

Then his Majesty donned the uniform of a British Admiral to receive visitors who might call to tender congratulations. Among those who came were King Edward, in the uniform of an Admiral, the Duke of Connaught, Prince Christian, and other royal personages and Lord Roberts and Mr. Brodrick, all in full uniforms.

The Emperor received the King at the gangway. The yacht was rolling heavily, owing to the gale, so that the Queen and the royal ladies were prevented from accompanying the King. After tea had been served the royal party returned to Osborne House, Emperor William and the Crown Prince immediately returning the visit and dining with the King.

In addition to the sword of a Field Marshal, King Edward has presented to Emperor William, already a Knight of the Garter, the insignia of the order in diamonds. The fact that this gift was ordered by the late Queen, with the intention of presenting it on the Kaiser's birthday, gave a pathetic interest to the presentation.

Emperor William, on learning of the King's intention to appoint him a Field Marshal, sent the following telegram to Lord Salisbury:

"The King, my august uncle, confers upon me the rank of a Field Marshal in his army and informs me that my appointment will be published on my birthday. I hasten to apprise you of my deep appreciation of so signal a mark of his Majesty's affection for me, and I rejoice to think that I shall be numbered among those of the highest rank in his Majesty's gallant army.
"WILLIAM, R."

The Emperor sent a fac simile of the dispatch to Lord Roberts. Lord Salisbury replied as follows:

"I beg with most profound respect to tender to your Imperial Majesty my thanks for your telegram, and my sincere congratulations upon the anniversary of your Majesty's birthday and upon the appointment to the exalted rank of Field Marshal which my august sovereign, the King, has been pleased to confer upon your Imperial Majesty, and I am convinced that your acceptance of the office will give the liveliest gratification to all classes of the nation, who have been deeply touched by the consideration and kindly feeling exhibited in your gracious visit on this solemn occasion."

Lord Roberts responded in the following terms: "I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Majesty's gracious telegram, giving me the joyful tidings that his Majesty, King Edward, has conferred upon your Majesty the rank of Field Marshal. I would beg, Sir, that I may be allowed to offer on behalf of myself and the army I have the honor to command, our most heartfelt and respectful congratulations on this mark of our sovereign's affection and appreciation of your Majesty's great and soldierly qualities.

"All ranks will be very proud to think that your Majesty will henceforth be even more closely associated with them than hitherto and will feel that the army is highly honored by your Majesty's name being enrolled among the Field Marshals of Great Britain."

It is stated here that at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, in the presence of Emperor William and the members of the British royal family, King Edward will confer upon Crown Prince Frederick William the Order of the Garter.

The Hohenzollern will take part in the naval display at Spithead.

The Emperor will accompany the King to London and Windsor, and will return to Germany immediately after the funeral.

BERLIN, Jan. 27.—Most of the Berlin papers, as well as those throughout the empire, utter a few words of eloquent eulogy of Emperor William on the occasion of his birthday. On many buildings, however, the flags are at half-mast in tribute to Queen Victoria. The Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung says:

"Congratulations to the Emperor will be all the more deeply felt by him since he and the Crown Prince are absent from the country, and in mourning for England's Queen."

The Berliner Post, in remarking upon King Edward's knowledge of statecraft, recalls numerous instances, especially in 1864, when Queen Victoria exercised a "great influence for the benefit of Germany," and it says that Germans ought to be grateful for her opposition to the proposed Anglo-French alliance.

There was the usual reveille this morning for Emperor William's birthday, and the troops were given a day's parole. At noon the Military Governor of Berlin celebrated the anniversary at the Zeughaus, or Arsenal.

COMMENT OF THE PRESS.

Britons Hope Contact of the Kaiser with British People Will Remove "a Great Misunderstanding."

LONDON, Jan. 28.—All the morning papers comment with keen satisfaction upon the exchange of courtesies between King Edward and Emperor William and the telegraphic correspondence between the Kaiser and Lord Salisbury and Lord Roberts, pointing out that all this will bind more firmly the Anglo-German friendship.

"History is being made with lightning speed in these days," says The Daily Telegraph. "Days crowded with majestic and epoch-making incidents, which can never cease to impress the imagination of the world, and perhaps to affect its fortunes.

"Throughout this rapid process of transforming events it is still the German Emperor's sojourn among us which most impresses the nation. There is not a single Briton but cherishes the hope and the confidence that the meeting and moving contact which Emperor William and the British people have been brought will result in the absolute removal of a great misunderstanding."

THE DAY IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

A Fountain, the Gift of the Kaiser, Dedicated—Officials Present.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 27.—The special service held at the German Church in Constantinople to-day on the anniversary of the birth of Emperor William was followed by the inauguration in Hippodrome Square of the fountain presented by the Kaiser, the ceremony taking place in the presence of the members of the German Embassy, Tewfik Pasha, Ottoman Minister of Foreign Affairs; other members of the Turkish Cabinet, and many high officials of the Government, as well as deputations from the German training ship Moltke and the German station ship Loreley, formerly the Mohican.

Turkish troops were massed around the square, and there was a large concourse of spectators. The ceremony was imposing. Adbul Hamid sent two silver ewers to be filled with water and sealed, one for Emperor William and the other for himself.

A Permanent Memorial in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—The first contributions toward a fund for a permanent memorial in Chicago to Queen Victoria were made to-night at the services held in the Trinity Episcopal Church. A large sum was realized, which will be held by the Treasurer of Trinity Church until the character and the form of the memorial are decided upon.

CRAZY SNAKE CAPTURED

Leader of Discontented Creek Indians Taken in His Camp.

Two Men, Noted for Daring, Effected the Seizure—Indians Refused to Confer with a Posse.

HENRIETTA, Indian Territory, Jan. 27.—Deputy Marshal Grant Johnson and Bunnie McIntosh of Eufaula, two men noted for their bravery and daring in hazardous expeditions against outlaws, made a dash upon the encampment of Snake Indians near Eufaula to-day and captured Chitto Harjo, (Crazy Snake.) After an exciting escape from the hostile Creek camp, they managed to land their prisoner at this place this evening, and he is now held captive under a strong guard of soldiers under the command of Lieut. Dixon.

The capture of the central figure of the uprising and the show of force which the troops will make will likely put an end to the threatened outbreak.

Lieut. Dixon and his troops will move out of this place to-morrow, upon the encampment of Snakes, near Eufaula. It is not likely that a forced march will be made, and it will be Tuesday before the Snakes' stronghold is reached. Deprived of their leader, it is not thought probable that they will make any resistance, but will lay down their arms and yield to the inevitable.

BRISTOW, Indian Territory, Jan. 27.—Major G. W. Bible, "Pawnee Bill," with a posse, including Capt. Edmund Harry of the Creek Light Horsemen, United States Marshals Dean, Hogan, and Churchwell, and Indian Policemen Keyes, Howell, and Saunders, visited the hostile Creeks' camping ground, six miles south of this place, at noon to-day. The Indians, who were holding a big feast, refused the posse admittance and declined to confer with them in any manner.

Many of the full-bloods, who have been in the habit of wearing white man's apparel, were dressed in full Indian regalia. They are most bitter in their denunciation of the Marshals who arrested Tom Tiger, Captain of the insurgent light horsemen, who left at dark in charge of United States Marshals Dean, Hogan, and a posse for Muskegee, as it was feared an attempt would be made during the night to release him if held here. Last night thirty-two citizens of Bristow watched the prisoner, and about as many more guarded the town. At 3 o'clock this morning the weird chant of the Indian dance and beat of the tom-tom were plainly heard by the guards on the south line of town.

Late last night a telegram was received from Marshal Bennett authorizing the Mayor and Council here to arm and swear in all able-bodied citizens to protect their property until soldiers could be sent here from Henrietta.

GUTHRIE, Oklahoma, Jan. 27.—Reports received here at the United States Marshal's office to-day say that the home of John Bartram, a ranchman living sixteen miles east of Bristow, I. T., was burned by belligerent Snake Indians last night. A band of thirty Indians, all drunk, made a demonstration. Bartram ordered them away. This enraged the Indians. The band rode away, and Bartram, fearing violence, moved his family to Bristow. Later his home and all the buildings on the premises were in flames. The report cannot be confirmed. If true, it is the first overt act committed by the Creeks.

UPRISING MAY BE SPREADING.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Indian Commissioner Jones has received the following dispatch of yesterday's date from Agent Shoenfelt, at Muskogee, Indian Territory, regarding the Indian troubles:

Marshall Bennett will leave to-morrow with a force of deputies and Indian police. Will meet troops at Henrietta. Late dispatches indicate the uprising in Choctaw Nation is spreading. Disaffected Indians have sworn in 450 light horsemen, and are attempting to carry out their laws and threaten to destroy property. Have just ordered

50,000 Yards of WOOL CHALLIS

At Twenty-eight Cents a Yard!

WORTH 50c?—yes; and no.

They're new this season. Hundreds of thousands of yards that you'll think identical will be sold in the next two or three months at fifty cents a yard. The cloth is exactly the same, and it is perfect. The printing is from the same blocks, with the same dyes; same designs, same color combinations. "Then why not the same?"—you will ask; and you'll still ask it when you see the goods, for you'll find no fault with them. But experts know they are not just like the perfect pieces, and the manufacturer could not mix them with his perfect goods. Neither do we want you to buy them without knowing just what they are, so you can judge them for yourself. Here is the reason for the price: Some of the printings are not exact; some pieces did not take as much of the dye as the model, and came out a less dense shade. If any have worse defects, we have not seen them. But here's the warning; and there is no defect that your own eyes cannot detect. There is no danger of defective cloth at all. They are soft, dainty and beautiful as wool challis are famed to be; and we know you will say we have no real right to call them imperfect.

It just makes a difference of 22c a yard in your favor. Thrifty and tasteful women will take the best part of them in three days, or probably two. We expect to be able to fill all mail orders that are sent to-day. Plenty of polka-dots and the new rings that will be so popular this season, as well as stripes and figures in white and colors on grounds of navy, light and cadet blues, gray, pink, heliotrope and white. Splendid variety—bright and new—a remarkable offering at 28c a yard.

Ample selling space on Main aisle counters and in the Rotunda to display the patterns fully, and make the buying comfortable even with the rapid selling of which they are certain.

Those GINGHAMS

Did you read about them, or see them last week? They're the most beautiful ginghams we ever sold for

12½c a yard

Regular 25c goods of the coming season. Half price on fresh, new goods that have no superiors at their regular price. People were incredulous, and didn't come freely on Friday; they were enthusiastic on Saturday; and to-day enough will tell their neighbors, to storm the counters that hold the ginghams all day long. But we've provided ample space, and there is an abundance of the ginghams for to-day and probably to-morrow. They're bright, new and perfect—fine as the imported goods, with dainty cords in most of them; and some lace stripes; full 32 inches wide; the most desirable colorings and wide variety. Prompt mail orders will be in time. Rotunda.

Handkerchiefs

"Seconds" of men's and women's handkerchiefs—and "seconds" at Wanamaker's mean goods without real hurts. When really damaged handkerchiefs are found we take them out—as was the case a couple of months ago in such a lot as this, when we discovered a deception, and sold the bad handkerchiefs at 5c, though the "seconds" sold in a jiffy at 12½c. To-day's offering contains these:

100 Dozen Women's Embroidered and Lace-trimmed Handkerchiefs—here and there will be a drop stitch in the embroidery or a small pin spot in the linen lawn, so small that they could be easily placed among regular goods. Handkerchiefs easily worth 50c, 75c or $1 each when perfect.

100 Dozen Men's Plain White Linen Hemstitched Handkerchiefs, with misweaves only—heavy threads—no holes; assorted widths of hems. Qualities that sell for 35c to 50c each when perfect.

Choose from either lot—Men's or Women's,

White APRONS
Under-price

Neatness, protection, or daintiness—all the purposes of these useful articles of attire are expressed by the various sorts in this collection of manufacturers' samples, which we set before you to-day at a little price. Only 720 aprons in all, of white lawn; some with bretelles, some embroidered, plaited, or otherwise trimmed; various sizes. Worth 50c to $1.50. Now at

40c Each

Broadway.

PORTIERES

A dozen qualities, embracing splendid satin, tapestry, moire and mercerized portieres, are all displayed with new price-marks this morning. Reductions of a third, except where they're even more. Handsome patterns and colorings. Some corded, some fringed top and bottom, some plain.

Were $6, $6.25, $9.50, and up to $14.50 a pair. Prices are now $4 to $9.75. Third floor.

Framed Pictures

Platino prints. Your quick appreciation of a recent similar offering induced us to plan for this. We have secured a large number of these neatly framed and matted prints, and the prices are, as on the previous lot, remarkably little. Chief among this collection are the copies of Boston library's frieze of "The Prophets." They're much sought for just now, and will rarely be obtained for so little as these—45c. They were very reasonably priced at 75c. Size 4x22 in.

Numerous other good subjects. Some 8x10 pictures at 20c, instead of 25c; 10x12 in., at 25c, instead of 40c; 11x14 in., at 25c, instead of 50c; some combinations—3 pictures framed together, at 45c, instead of 65c. Fifth floor.

The Economy of Luxury in FURS

There have been shown in our Fur Store this season some of the most sumptuous garments possible to produce.

For instance, a full-length coat made from fine pelts of the Russian sable—the little animal, about the size of a cat, that is nature's aristocrat in clothes, having the finest, thickest fur with which any creature is endowed, to brave the cold of its arctic or sub-arctic home, in Russia or Siberia. Not only are the pelts choice; but they have had the most expert treatment all the way through until the garment is so beautifully pieced and matched that it looks like one vast skin. Its original valuation was $5,000; but we do not count in value the usual furrier's protection against carrying such a royal robe until the proper customer appears, and we marked it a fair mercantile price, $4,000. To-day it is offered for $2,500; and is certainly one of the most elegant garments obtainable in America to-day.

Among the other specimens of fur elegance, now offered at great concessions in price, are these:

$600, from $1,000—Persian Lamb Ulster with bodice of chinchilla.
$200, from $265 and $275—Seal Coats.
$60, from $90—Persian Lamb Coats.
$35, from $60—Astrakhan Coats.
Capes of Irkutz Sable, $15 to $37.50, according to length; were $30 to $75.

Napkins, in various good patterns, half dozen lots only, at one-quarter to a third lower than former moderate prices.

OVERCOATS
To Order at Under-price

The most positive bargain a man can buy is this: where the garment is made up fresh, new, and to his measure, at a radical concession in price. Nothing is sacrificed to procure the saving in cost.

We want to keep our tailors busy, dispose of our winter overcoat fabrics, and incidentally show you how well we make clothes for men. You can be sure we shall not slight your overcoat with this object in mind.

The materials to choose from are Oxford-mixed cheviots, blue and black kerseys, brown-mixed and black cheviots; also blue and black chinchilla. The coat to be made up with all-wool body lining, and black satin shoulders—the most serviceable linings made.

Prices have been $30 to $45. To your order to-day for $25

As good an investment for next year as this.

MANY SPEEDWAY BRUSHES

Runaway Trotter Cleverly Stopped by Mounted Policeman Austen.

ALICE BARNES BEAT ROBERT J.

Bel Esprit Won a Fast Three-Cornered Tilt with Alietta and Barney Kirkland—Cobwebs Was Jogged.

There was a large and representative gathering of New York City's light harness horsemen on the Harlem River Speedway yesterday. The moderate weather brought them out in full force, and they found the roadbed in excellent condition. Several exciting incidents served to vary the regular order of brushes, which became so numerous toward noon that they were hard to keep track of. While the speeding was at its height and the roadway was crowded with vehicles, a shout of "Runaway, clear the road!" was echoed down the line of spectators. Instantly every horse was turned toward the curb in order to give the runaway a clear road. Then when everybody had sought a position of comparative safety a frightened animal was seen rushing down the middle of the stretch with Mounted Policeman McKeon in full chase. It was soon discovered that the runaway was the trotter Ding Dong, 2:26¼, owned by J. Cartwright. The driver sawed at the bit in a vain effort to pull the horse up, and several times McKeon reached out to catch the animal. But the trotter was too fast. Just at the half-mile post McKeon pulled up suddenly, to the great astonishment of the crowd, who thought he had abondoned the chase, but an instant later his manoeuvre was explained, for standing in the middle of the road ready to make a dash for the frightened horse was Mounted Policeman Austen. As the horse came almost abreast of him Austen dug the spurs into his own animal, and an instant later he had Ding Dong by the bit. A short, sharp struggle ensued, and the runaway was brought to a standstill, while the crowd gave a rousing cheer in approbation of Austen's good horsemanship.

Among the early arrivals was Nathan Straus, driving the old favorite Cobwebs, 2:12, who, after being given two or three jogs, was found to be somewhat out of condition, and he was sent back to the sheds, Mr. Straus taking the reins behind the pacer Robert J., 2:01¾. A few minutes later E. E. Smathers appeared, driving the trotting queen of the Speedway, Alice Barnes, 2:11¾, closely followed by George Spear, behind Queen Wilkes, also owned by Mr. Smathers. The crowd clamored for a brush between this trio of cracks, and they were jogged up the stretch and turned to a good start. Alice Barnes at once took the lead, but before a quarter had been covered Robert J. was on even terms with her, and gaining gradually. Queen Wilkes was half a length in the rear. All three came down the stretch under the whip, Mr. Straus leaning over the dashboard and urging Robert J. who had a lead of half a length, to his utmost speed. Alice Barnes endeavored to recover lost ground by making a spurt, but broke in the attempt, and spoiled her chances of winning. She recovered her footing, however, in time to beat Queen Wilkes by a narrow margin. In a second brush between Robert J. and Alice Barnes, which was as exciting as the first while it lasted, Robert J. broke just at the wrong moment, and lost the race to Alice Barnes by a length.

The crack pacer Edward W., 2:21¼, driven by George Coleman, did some fast work, and carried off the honors in several hot half-mile contests. One remarkably fast brush which the pacer won easily was with the trotter Freeland, 2:17¼, driven by David Goodman, and Sprightly, driven by T. S. Russell. It was either horse's race until the head of the stretch was reached, when Edward W. made a spurt that landed him a head in front of his competitors, and Sprightly in attempting to follow the lead, broke.

One of the liveliest three-cornered brushes of the morning was between the trotter Bel Esprit, 2:12½, driven by his owner, Charles Reilly; Barney Kirkland, 2:22¼, driven by M. Fluckinger, and Alietta, 2:15¼. Some difficulty was experienced in getting the three off, but they were finally started on fairly even terms. The first quarter was covered with all close up, each striving for a lead, but apparently unable to gain it. Alietta, on being touched with the whip, gained half a length by making a desperate spurt. Both Barney Kirkland and Bel Esprit were equal to the occasion, and as they reached the head of the stretch a blanket would have covered all three. Within fifty yards of the finish line Bel Esprit took the lead, and won by a head from Alietta.

One of the prettiest and closest brushes of the morning was between Alice Barnes, 2:11½, and her stable mate, Queen Wilkes, who was unusually fast yesterday. Queen Wilkes had the best of the start, and Alice Barnes, in trying to close the gap, made a break. It was a handy one, however, and when she caught she came with a rush that soon brought her on nearly even terms. No Grand Circuit finish was ever better contested, but Queen Wilkes kept her head in front, and won so closely that it looked to many directly on the finish line like a dead heat. On the next trip down the pair were started again, but this time, although Queen Wilkes made a hard race, Alice Barnes had a half length to the good at the finish.

Among the many who witnessed the sport was George Huber, driving the chestnut pacer Prince Altara; J. Childs, driving the trotter Tom Cole, 2:19½; M. Zahn, driving Dundess, 2:23¾; Elmer Stevens, behind Peppina; J. W. Cornish, driving the bay trotter David B., 2:24¾; C. Jarvis, behind The Dude, 2:21¾; Hugh Reilly, driving Commodore Porter, 2:14; Louis Kahn, driving the pacer George Wallace, 2:17¼; Dr. H. D. Gill, driving Parkville Prince; G. W. Wilder, driving the pacer Girlie; W. E. Durando, driving the blind pacer Hopeful, 2:21½, Dr. Flagg, with the gray pacer Highland Lassie, 2:13¾; P. Ryan, driving Pearl Jr., 2:20½, and Billy Dwyer, to the pole; John F. Cockrill, driving the bay mare Rival, 2:17¼; Frank J. Newman, behind his pair of black trotters; A. B. Henderson, driving the trotter Hartford, 2:28; George Young, with his show ring trotter Dandy, and E. L. Herman, driving a team of gray pacers.

During the afternoon the crowd of vehicles was greater than that of the morning, but there was little or no brushing on account of the crowded condition of the road, and the fact that the footing had become somewhat uncertain in several spots.

Turfmen Coming to Daly Horse Sale.

All the horses of the Bitter Root Stud, the property of Marcus Daly's estate, to be sold by the Fasig-Tipton Company in Madison Square Garden, beginning Wednesday, are now quartered at the Morris Park race track, where they will remain until just before the sale. The horses of each day's offering will be taken to Madison Square Garden just before each day's sale, thus saving them from worry as much as possible. Extensive preparations have been made by the sales company for the expected great crowd of horsemen and prospective bidders. For the accommodation of the Kentucky breeders and the turfmen who have been wintering in Cincinnati and the vicinity of the Newport and Covington tracks, a special train will leave Lexington, Ky., to-night, and reach New York to-morrow night. The chief public interest in the disposal of the great Montana breeding farm centres in Hamburg, and the guesses at the price he will bring have been many and of wide range. It is known that agents representing both English and French breeders are in New York to bid on the horse, but it is generally believed that Hamburg will be bought by an American.

BOSTON HOCKEY CLUB.

Strong Team Being Formed to Play the N. Y. A. C. Seven.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 27.—A very strong ice hockey team has been formed in this city of ex-college players. It will be known as the Boston Hockey Club. Two of the prospectives are graduates of Harvard, two of Yale, two of Brown, one of Princeton, and one of Colby. Several games with strong local clubs will be played, and the big game will be with the New York Athletic Club, at the St. Nicholas Rink, on Feb. 21. The Captain is Sanford Stoddard, Yale, '99, who will play forward. The other forwards will be F. J. Goodridge, Harvard, '98; I. C. Hunt, Brown, '99, and either G. C. Wadsworth, Yale, 1900, or E. Stanwood, Jr., Colby, '98.

The Harvard back field of last year will compose the defense. W. R. Vanderpool, Princeton, '98, who has had two years' experience on the Princeton team and two on Harvard, will play cover point. F. A. Russell, Harvard, '99, will occupy his regular position at point, and A. Barrow, Brown, '98, a member of the Brown team for two years and of Harvard for one, will play goal.

CROSS-COUNTRY RUNNING.

Harriers of Local Athletic Organizations Make Good Time Over the Regular Courses.

Some of the most expert trail followers in the metropolitan district participated yesterday in the weekly cross country runs of the various local clubs. The event under the auspices of the Star Athletic Club started from the clubhouse, corner of Vernon Avenue and Fourteenth Street, Long Island City. The usual course was run over, thirty-eight men participating. The full route of eight miles was covered by but one man, C. Brody of the Xavier Athletic Club, who finished strongly alone. His time was 0:39:00.

The main body traveled at a merry clip all the way going over about four and a half miles. J. J. Molloy, Xavier Athletic Club; M. J. McGarry, Pastime Athletic Club; D. Brady, Xavier Athletic Club; J. H. Kelly, Daniel McMahon, Pastime Athletic Club; T. L. Kelly, Robert W. Kennedy, Star Athletic Club; H. J. Hunjinyer, Xavier Athletic Club; R. Pfortner, Pastime Athletic Club; J. J. Walsh, C. Foran, Xavier Athletic Club; J. J. Lynch, Pastime Athletic Club; Peter McCabe, S. Touhmey, W. H. Hayslop, Star Athletic Club; J. Krauss, Pastime Athletic Club; M. Vandervery, Star Athletic Club; Thomas J. McGirr, New York Athletic Club; L. Markheim, Pastime Athletic Club; T. J. O'Donnell, Star Athletic Club; F. Noicn, Xavier Athletic Club; Daniel J. Brennan, Pastime Athletic Club; Eugene Estoppey, Pastime Athletic Club, and E. F. Visble, Star Athletic Club. Time—0:28:19.

The Williamsburg Athletic Association's event resolved itself into a double event. First match race between the three winners of the former runs held by the club this season, and all of whom started from scratch, and the weekly handicap for medals. The course was about six miles, and took in Berlin Village, Maspeth, East Williamsburg, and old Bushwick, starting from the clubhouse on Withers Street. John Greves, Joseph E. Solan, and Joseph E. Reydell contested the match race for a handsome medal over the course, and after a red-hot contest, Reydell won by ten yards, Solan second.

In the club run over the full course the finish was as follows: Joseph E. Reydell first, Joseph E. Solan second, Joseph Dolley third, John J. Greves fourth, M. Bracken fifth, William H. Bearness sixth, August Strumfler seventh, Samuel Bassett eighth, George A. Berger ninth, and John Reydell tenth. Time—0:46:30.

Frank Veres won the run of the Brooklyn Athletic Club, which was held from the club grounds at Maspeth, L. I. Six miles of the territory in and about Maspeth was covered, and John C. Doyle was second, Bernard W. Dudley third, William H. Classen fourth, and Daniel J. Kune fifth. Time—0.51:00.

ENDURANCE TEST FOR MOTORS.

Long Island Automobile Club Announces Terms for 100-Mile Road Trial.

The conditions which are to govern the hundred-mile endurance test for motor vehicles, to be held by the Long Island Automobile Club, have been completed by the special committee in charge of the matter and approved by the Board of Governors. The time selected for the test is late in March.

The test, under the conditions agreed upon, will be open to the classes of motor vehicles which are propelled by steam, gasolene, and electricity, with prizes offered for each class. Vehicles using other motive power are not absolutely barred, but application for the entry of such must be considered by the club before they will be accepted. Entries will be limited, however, to self-propelled vehicles, made to carry at least two passengers, seated side by side, and carrying the full complement of passengers.

The test will be over macadamized roads on Long Island, which will include all grades and turns on the route laid out, no retracing being permitted. The time limit fixed for the completion of the distance is twelve hours, no vehicle requiring a greater time to cover the course to be considered in the distribution of prizes. The speed limit through villages and towns is fixed at eight miles an hour, the maximum speed to be not more than fifteen miles an hour. In this matter it is specially stipulated that notice of the test shall be given to all the authorities of the villages through which the line of travel may pass, requesting permission for the trial and their co-operation in carrying it out.

The hill climbing contest, it is provided, shall be held on the grade between Flushing and Jamaica, where there is a grade about a quarter of a mile in length, with a decline of about 20 per cent. All contestants will be required to furnish their own fuel and water, either by arrangement before hand, or by carrying such supplies as they may need. Owners of electric vehicles are to make their own arrangements for battery relays.

In judging the competing vehicles, the best average, taking into consideration the amount of fuel used, the weight of the individual carriages, and the stops, will rule where there is a tie in the matter of time between two or more vehicles. The club has fixed the entrance fee at $10 for each vehicle. For entry blanks and further details of the test, intending competitors may apply to Charles W. Spurr, Secretary of the club, at the club's headquarters, 552 State Street, Brooklyn. The members of the committee in charge of the endurance contest are: L. R. Adams, President of the club, and Chairman of Contests and Exhibitions Committee; H. B. Fullerton, H. S. Chapin, F. W. Tousey, R. E. Jarridge, J. E. Savel, F. G. Webb, C. W. Spurr, Robert Darling, and A. R. Pardington.

AMERICAN LEAGUE BASEBALL.

New Organization Meeting to Make Fight Against National League.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—On the eve of the American League meeting to perfect its organization for the coming baseball season, to formally complete the signing of the ten-year agreement, and to turn over in trust to President Johnson the ground leases and 51 per cent. of the stock of the eight clubs in the league, the American League managers made a public statement to-night. It deals with the causes and conditions which lead to the present strained relations between the American League and the National League.

President Ban Johnson stated to-night that he had written to Nick Young of the National League, telling him why the National League must ask modifications in the National agreement, and gave out a letter sent to the latter enumerating these reasons.

Hugh Duffy, Captain of the Boston National League Club last season, arrived here Saturday night. He will leave the National League to assume the management of the Milwaukee American League team, replacing "Connie" Mack, who is slated for the managership at Philadelphia this season. The Cleveland, Milwaukee, Philadelphia, Washington, and Baltimore representatives arrived to-night, making a full complement except for Boston, represented by proxy, the names of its backers being withheld for the present.

NATIONAL WATER POLO.

K. A. C. Team Expected to Compete in Tournament in Chicago.

The question of the entry of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club's water polo team, holder of the Amateur Athletic Union championship for the past three years, in the water polo tournament to be held at the Coliseum, in Chicago, from Feb. 26 to March 3, for the National amateur championship, will be decided upon by a meeting of the players to be held Wednesday evening in the Knickerbockers' clubhouse. There is but little doubt, however, that the team will accept the special invitation from the managers of the tournameht to enter. It is intended to be a championship contest in every sense, and the promised opportunity to meet the best water polo teams in the United States will in all probability induce the Knickerbocker Athletic Club swimmers to make the trip to Chicago.

The managers of the tournament have received assurance that the entries will include the teame of the Chicago Swimming Club, the Montreal Water Polo Club, the St. Louis Athletic Club, the Duquesne Athletic Club; the Boston Athletic Club, and the Brookline Swimming Club of Boston. The officials of the National Swimming Association will have general supervision of the games, and J. H. Sterrett of that organization will be referee. The team that the Knickerbocker Athletic Club will send into the tournament if it is decided to enter will be made up of W. Reuss, H. A. King, G. Neuss, H. H. Reeder, G. W. Van Cleaf, L. Hartley, and D. M. Reeder.

LOCAL AMATEUR BILLIARDS.

Ladies' Night at the Hanover Club—The Class A Tournament at K. A. C.

With the recent conclusion of the championship billiard tournament of the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players, at the Hanover Club, Brooklyn, a few quiet days will follow in big amateur competitions, until the Class A championship renews the activity on Tuesday night, Feb. 5, in the Knickerbocker Athletic Club. The final match, however, in the Billiard Players' contest will come this evening, when Edward Gardner and J. Byron Stark will meet for the usual 300 point, fourteen-inch balk line game, to determine the tie for third prize.

Stark, who is one of the most graceful players in the East, entered the tournament handicapped by weakness from a recent attack of the grip. He came very nearly withdrawing, for he realized that he might not be able to do himself justice, but at the earnest solicitation of his friends, he consented to remain in. He said last week that he might have to return to his home in Wilkesbarre, Penn., before the tie could be played off, and if so, Gardner will get the third prize by default this evening.

The Hanover Club, as a fitting close to one of the most successful amateur competitions ever held in Greater New York, has announced a ladies' billiard night for to-morrow evening. It is expected that all of the six contestants in the National Association championship will be present, and they will be paired off into three sets, playing 40 points each. Of course, no criterion of their real ability can be formed from a 40-point match, for a man may readily run out in from one to three innings, but the idea is chiefly to give the ladies and other guests of the club an opportunity to see some of the amateur masters of the game.

As an additional feature of special interest, Prof. Kaarlus and his famous daughter, Miss May Kaarlus, will give an exhibition of fancy shots immediately after the amateur games. Supper will be served after the billiards, and the different club committees have combined to make the evening one of the most enjoyable, from a social standpoint, that has been given for several years. The special billiard committee of the evening consists of James A. Sperry, President of the Hanover Club; John McKee, and Daniel T. Wilson.

The national championship victory of the club's own champion, Arthur Townsend, was particularly gratifying to the members. It is the first big open amateur competition ever won by Townsend, but he showed a rare mastery of the game, and the experts would like to see him matched with some of the Class A cracks who will play in this city next week. None of the players in the Hanover Club tourney, however, will be seen in the Knickerbocker Athletic Club games, as the differences of opinion which arose a few years ago led to the retirement from the ranks of the Amateur Athletic Union of a number of billiardists, and the formation of the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players. As the latter is not recognized by the former, its members are barred from participating in the Class A or Class B championships.

Among the surprises of the recent tournament was the total eclipse of Ferdinand Poggenburg, who won the championship last year. He only won one game, and that was when he defeated Edward Gardner. He set a record, however, that was not broken, for he ran his 300 points in 31 innings, making the best single average of the tournament, 9.31. Edward Gardner's defeat of Keeney last week in a thirty-six-inning game was the next shortest match.

The tournament was also notable for the high runs made. Townsend won a second prize for his biggest run of 69 points, and by an odd coincidence three men tied at 50 points, Stark, Poggenburg, and Frank Gardner; Edward Gardner got a 52, while Keeney's highest run was 45. The best average for the two weeks was made by Edward Gardner, whose grand total was 6.80, to 6.29 for Townsend. The tournament was well managed by the club's efficient billiard committee. The attendance taxed the seating capacity of the room nearly every night, and Edward McLaughlin made a most capable referee.

That the present Class A champion, Wilson P. Foss, is able to give large odds to most amateur, and even professional billiardists, was visibly demonstrated a few days ago in Charlestown, Mass., when Foss played an exhibition 400-point, 14-inch balkline game with Fred Eames, the New England professional champion. The competition drew a large attendance, and some rare playing was seen. Foss won by 84 points, and scored his 400 to Eames's 316 in twenty innings, getting the unusually high average of 20 points. This is liable to cause some of the Class A champions this year to do considerable close thinking. Foss got two blanks and so did Eames. The amateur made one run of 75, while Eames's highest was 69.

UNCERTAINTIES OF GOLF.

Climatic Changes Curtail Northern Activity—Rival Championships on Florida Links.

Golfers in the metropolitan district are beginning to experience the uncertainties and rigors of a New York Winter, and, what with occasional snowfalls, rain, and changes from freezing to thawing weather, the local courses have been for the most part deserted. Up to the middle of this month the weather has been unusually favorable for golf, but even the unceasing popularity of the game at Lakewood has suffered temporary drawbacks for the last few days. For some reason or other, the weekly handicaps in that near-by resort have not brought out so many players as in past years. It may be because some of the cracks have gone to Florida, but with the three-day open tournament of the Country Club set for the week of Washington's Birthday there will probably be a renewal of old-time activity.

With the temporary cessation of out-door sport up North, a corresponding enlivening of golf is noticeable on the Florida links. The rival east and west coasts have both prepared elaborate schedules of events, and the real activity will begin next month. The west coast has secured a triumph over its rival in the promise of a visit from the amateur champion, Walter J. Travis, about Feb. 20, and it goes without saying that he will take part in some of the Belleair and Tampa Bay tournaments, which will be in progress about that time. Travis will make a tour of the links in company with Van Cassel Sutphen of the Morris County Golf Club.

The east coast, however, is liable to retaliate by announcing the presence of America's open champion, Harry Vardon, as its star feature of the year. One of Vardon's assistant managers in this country last year has stated that the foreign golfer will return to the United States next month, and that a tour of the Florida links will immediately follow. With Travis on one side of Florida and Vardon on the other, the links ought fairly to glisten with brilliant plays, and a succession of record-breaking scores.

Palm Beach thus far has been the chief centre of competitive interest in golf, and a large delegation of Boston and New York golfers is already there. Charles B. Cory, the east coast champion, showed that he is going to make a strong bid to retain his honors this season by winning the first big cup of the year at Palm Beach last week.

On the subject of Florida championships, it is amusing as well as ludicrous to see the supreme ignorance which the east and west coast associations profess of the other's existence. In their programme of tournaments each boldly announces Florida championships not only for men, but also for women, and the Palm Beach Club has further complicated matters by announcing a Southern Florida championship. The situation is readily understood when one realizes that the east and west coast associations are combinations of hotel links. Their championships are simply sectional in nature, but possibly, in the near future, some independent club which is a member of the United States Golf Association may be able to give an all-Florida championship, whose title will really mean something.

Swimmers' Team Beat Regular Players In Opening Game.

The first game of indoor baseball in the Knickerbocker Athletic Club's series of Sunday games was played in the gymnasium of the club yesterday afternoon between the regular indoor baseball club and a team representing the Knickerbocker Athletic Club swimmers. Because of limited floor space available for play, a rule has been adopted restricting the teams to seven men each, but the regular baseball organization went into the opening game with but five men, two of the players expected failing to appear. Of those who played, several had to fill positions other than those belonging to them, the make-shift organization giving the swimmers a great advantage and making a rather one-sided contest. At that the regulars made a creditable showing against a strong handicap, and after looking hopelessly beaten, roused the spectators to enthusiasm by piling up 18 runs in the last half of the ninth inning. The rally was too late, however as the swimmers had too great a lead to be overtaken, and the game resulted in a score of 38 to 23 in favor of the swimmers. Players and score by innings:

Regulars.—Lewis Juss, catcher; R. Bernard, pitcher; B. Hoppen, first base; F. Bean, second base; W. G. Higgins, third base.

HANDICAPS DUE THIS WEEK.

Weights for Great Spring Races Will Be Announced Friday—Horses' Best Records.

The weights for the great Spring handicaps, the Brooklyn, Suburban, and Brighton Beach, are due on Friday of this week, and their announcement will be a strong reminder to turfmen that the opening of the Eastern racing season is very close at hand, for, under Jockey Club rule, the opening has been pushed up a few days each season until nearly a month and a half has been added to the Spring period. Since the announcement of the entries for the three handicaps mentioned, horsemen have interested themselves in figuring on the possibilities of the weights. The unanimity with which they agree on the figures this year seems to indicate that Handicapper Walter S. Vosburgh, for once, has an easy task. In fact, as one expert, a handicapper for betting purposes, put it, the handicaps make themselves.

There is not the slightest question that the top weights will be Ethelbert and Kinley Mack, the only difference of opinion being as to which should head the list. Though Kinley Mack won both Brooklyn and Suburban last year, beating Ethelbert, the latter steed has sufficient excuse for the defeats, and showed class enough through the year to be allotted first place. Hidrim, of the four-year-olds in the Brooklyn, is quite plainly first among those of his age, while Prince of Melbourne in the Suburban quite as positively takes a similar place. One horse who should take up a good share of the handicapper's attention, however, is Banastar. Going back to his four-year-old form, he deserves to be among the top weights, yet last year he could not be got to a race until late Fall, and then was in the very commonest company.

In the coming handicaps it is taken for granted that Mr. Vosburgh will not depart from his custom of the past few years of fixing his top weight for the Brooklyn at about 128 pounds, and for the later events at two or three pounds higher, and scaling down to 90 pounds, giving a range of 40 pounds to bring together the best and worst in the several races. In the first Suburban Handicap there were no less than four horses with 130 pounds or more—George Kinney, four years old, 132; Barnes, four years, 131; Iroquols, six years, 130, and Miss Woodford, four years, 130, being the four. Of these, both George Kinney and Barnes accepted the weights and ran in the race won by Gen. Monroe, a six-year-old, handicapped at 117 pounds, but carrying 124, which included a seven-pound penalty. Five horses that ran carried 120 pounds or more, but four finished unplaced.

The top weight was never raised above George Kinney's impost, but rather has been lowered in recent years, though in early Suburbans it was repeatedly 130 pounds, tradition seeming to approve that limit, notwithstanding the fact that it is a common thing to fix a higher scale in less important races run later in the season, these in some instances being at distances much greater than that of the Suburban. The result has been that in the history of the Suburban, the race, as a rule, has been won by horses in the middle-weight divisions, these almost invariably being horses of high class, favored in the handicaps by the scale adopted.

In seventeen Suburbans, two top weights, Salvatore and Henry of Navarre, have won, while ten have been won by horses weighted with less than 120 pounds. The Brooklyn Handicap record shows a little better for the top weights, three having won in the fourteen years of that event's history. Of these successes, a notable year for the top weights was in 1888, when The Bard and Hanover, each with 125 pounds, were first and second. The extreme light-weights have fared even worse than the top weights, however, as the lightest impost ever carried to victory in either race was 100 pounds, by Castaway, in the Brooklyn of 1890. In anticipation of the results of Handicapper Vosburgh's work on the Brooklyn, Suburban, and Brighton Handicaps, the following table of the best time performances of the horses in the Brooklyn and Suburban will prove interesting to patrons of racing:

A New French Stamp.

From The London News.

France has inaugurated the century with a new stamp, not intended perhaps for a very large issue, but certainly made the occasion of a graceful concession. Soldiers and non-commissioned officers are henceforth to be allowed a certain amount of gratuitous correspondence. The amount will not seriously tax the postal resources of the country, or cause any great drop in the revenue arising from the department. Two letters a month will be allowed the French Tommy, and the new stamp is to cover this correspondence. But, like every issue from the French Post Office, the label is happily designed, and the design explains its purpose. A tri-color stamp naturally suggests to a Frenchman a dedication to the army. There was a time when in this country we looked to find on our stamps the color we still find on our letter boxes and post wagons. The sad colored lavender label was only the adoption for a short time of the revenue stamp till the new postage atamp should be designed and brought out. It never has been brought out. Even the absurd orange color of the halfpenny stamp yielded to the practical green, not for any consideration due to British public opinion, or to improved taste at St. Martin's-le-Grand, but to conform in color to the halfpenny stamp of other foreign countries.

Palace Team Wins First Place In Greater New York Series—Schedule for the Week.

The ties in the Greater New York tournament were decided by a series of six games rolled on the Palace alleys, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon. In the first series, to decide the triple tie for first three places, between the Palace, Empire, and Queer Clubs, the Palace bowlers won two games, the Empire team won one and lost one, and the Queer five lost two games, giving them first, second, and third places, respectively, in the order named.

To decide the triple tie for fourth, fifth, and sixth places the Imperial, Arlington, and Monarch teams decided to roll two games each and to count the totals. This arrangement gave the Imperial team fourth place, the Monarchs fifth place, and the Arlingtons sixth place. The Imperial team made a score of 1083 in their second game, which is the highest score made in any local tournament during the present season.

The prizes for the individual averages were awarded as follows: First, Arps, 197; second, Beinert, 193; third, Mebt, 192; fourth, Baker, 191; fifth, Shiman, 191. The scores:

Queer Bowling Club—Seyd, 155; Meyer, 157; Holst, 214; Smith, 190; Hueter, 186. Total, 902.

Monarch Bowling Club—Krominga, 160; Walters, 149; Arps, 256; Schwartje, 171; Maass, 162. Total, 898.

THE BANK TAX BILLS.

We should be glad to know that Gov. ODELL had diligently thought out and truly pictured forth the working of his bills assessing upon banks and trust companies a State tax of 1 per cent. of the amount of their capital, surplus, and undivided profits. There is less cause for disquietude when measures of this nature are proposed with a full understanding of their effect than when they proceed from the mere belief that they are just and equitable. Besides, it would be worth something for the taxpayers to have early information concerning the theories and purposes that will guide the present Governor in the reforms of the tax system which he will attempt and may achieve during his term.

The nature of the bill for the taxation of bank shares can most readily be made plain by concrete illustrations. The bill imposes "an annual tax of 1 per cent. of the actual value of the shares of stock" of all State and National banks in the State, the banks themselves to collect the tax from their shareholders, which they would do, of course, by deducting it from the dividend remittance. "Actual value" is to be determined by adding together the capital, surplus, and undivided profits and dividing the sum by the number of shares outstanding. Let us see how this bill would affect a holder of one share of stock in the Chemical Bank.

The Chemical Bank has $300,000 of share capital, and surplus and undivided profits amounting to $6,881,700, a total of $7,181,700. Dividing this sum by 3,000, the number of shares outstanding, we have $2,393 as the "actual value" of each share. This is, exclusive of real estate, the book value of the shares. The Chemical Bank pays an annual dividend of 150 per cent. upon its shares. Under the mandate of this bill, should it become a law, the bank would deduct from this $150 dividend the State tax of $23.93, being 1 per cent. upon the "actual value" of the share. The shareholder would, therefore, receive only $126.07. The market value of Chemical Bank shares at the most recent quotations is about $4,000. A dividend of $150 per share is 3.75 per cent. of this value. But after the State tax of $23.93 was deducted the dividend would be at the rate of only 3.15 on the present market value. The immediate consequence would be a fall in the market value of the Chemical Bank shares to a figure which at the new dividend rate would yield to the investor the old interest rate of 3.75, since market quotations show that this is about the basis on which investments of this character are made. A dividend of $126.07 is 3.75 per cent. of $3,413, and to that price Chemical shares would fall. This is a shrinkage of $589 per share, or of $1,767,000 in the market value of the bank's entire share capital.

For further illustration we will take a share of the Importers' and Traders' Bank. This bank has a share capital of $1,500,000, and net profits of $6,107,800, a total of $7,607,800. Divided by the number of shares, 15,000, this gives $507 as the "actual value" of one share. The Importers' and Traders' pays 20 per cent. dividends. From the shareholders' dividend of $20 the bank would deduct the State tax of $5.07, equal to 1 per cent. of the "actual value." This would leave $14.93 to the owner of the share. The present market quotation of Importers' and Traders' Bank shares is $530, upon which the dividend of $20 represents a return of 3.77 per cent. To get this return out of a dividend of only $14.93 the investor would have to buy his share at $395.64, to which figure the shares would fall in the market. This is a shrinkage of $135 per share, and of $1,925,000 in the value of the entire share capital of the bank.

In the case of the Chemical Bank this tax would take for the State 16 per cent. of each shareholder's income from his investment. In the case of the Importers' and Traders' Bank it would take a little over 25 per cent.

It would be of high interest to know whether Gov. ODELL intends to impose such taxation as this upon the holders of bank shares, or whether he is ignorant of the confiscatory nature of his bill. It is to be observed that, so far as appears from the text of the bill, this tax of 1 per cent. for State purposes is in addition to local taxes. A 2 per cent. levy for local purposes and 1 per cent. for the State would leave the owners of bank shares very little for the support of their wives and families. We do not see how this tax can be distributed beyond the immediate subject of the levy. The only way to pass any part of it on to the general public would be an increase in the bank rates for money. As no bank can have its entire resources loaned out it would require an addition of something more than 1 per cent. to the usual rates for money to make up for this State tax and maintain the current rate of dividends to shareholders. The effect of such an increase would be to send all borrowers to Philadelphia, Boston, and Chicago for their accommodations, and the New York banks would follow them without delay, transferring their business to communities subject to less rigorous tax laws.

It is ungracious to seek for the motive of this astonishing measure, but it seems easily to fall into the familiar category of bills intended to put upon this city a constantly increasing proportion of the burdens of State taxation. The persons responsible for these bills declare that they expect from them a revenue for the State of between three and four million dollars. The total appropriation for the cost of the State Government last year was $24,000,000. It appears to be the intention of Gov. ODELL to assess substantially one-sixth of the entire State expenditure upon the holders of shares of bank stock. There are not many of them—a few thousands out of 7,000,000. Yet they are to pay one-sixth of the whole bill! It is stated that there is $330,000,000 of bank resources in the State subject to the provisions of this tax bill. Probably $300,000,000 of the amount is to be found in this city, including all the boroughs. Of the $132,000,000 of trust company resources, which are included in the above statement, the report of the Superintendent of Banking shows that all but $5,000,000 is in this city.

If it is the wish and intent of the statesmen who are now in charge of the public affairs of the State to assess the largest possible share of taxation for State purposes upon the City of New York we must compliment them upon the skill and boldness with which they have drawn these bills taxing banks and trust companies. Their effect will be to take from 15 to 50 per cent. of the dividends of shareholders, and something like 95 per cent. of the entire product of the levy will be collected in this city.

SENATOR DEPEW'S PLEA FOR SUBSIDIES.

We are not proud of the attitude of the junior Senator from New York on the Ship Subsidy bill.

We did not expect him to oppose it. That would show a degree of independence of party discipline such as he has not shown since he supported HORACE GREELEY for President. The measure of his personal influence on that occasion, when for the last time he acted outside the party lines, discouraged any further experiments in that direction. But we had hoped that he would have the good sense to cast a silent vote along with that of his senior colleague and party superior, Senator PLATT. Mr. DEPEW is a man of very respectable intellect and wide business associations. He has from time to time contracted views of considerable breadth and intelligence in matters of business and finance, and has advocated them with intelligence and force. He has, moreover, had peculiar opportunities to familiarize himself with jobs, and he ought to know one when he sees it, especially if it be as large and impudent a job as this subsidy scheme is. He must be pretty well acquainted with the transportation interests involved in ocean subsidies, and with the keen and capable men composing Mr. HANNA'S "Committee of Promoters" who devised this bill and who will draw a good deal more than half the money to be taken from the public till in pursuance of its provisions. He may be excused for not wishing to subject his now venerable back to the party lash by fighting the job, but at least we had ventured to think that he would not appear as its champion.

He has done so, however, and has expended a good deal of ingenuity and a certain sort of erudition in defending it. We shall not try to follow him in his elaborate pleading, which, for the most part, is on the lines already laid down by Mr. HANNA. But we must point out that, in the mouth of Mr. DEPEW, the argument that in case of European war we must lose all chance of getting our freight carried, is little less than ridiculous. He is old enough to remember distinctly the transfer of a large part of our merchant marine to the British flag during the civil war. He is quite aware that if all Europe were engaged in war the simple repeal of the absurd law that forbids our citizens from buying foreign-built ships and flying the American flag over them would very promptly lead to our acquirement at low prices of a large and profitable fleet of merchant vessels to do our own carrying and that of the rest of the world. His argument is sound for the repeal of that law; for the payment of subsidies it is very, very weak.

"IN THE INTEREST OF THE PARTY."

On Saturday Gov. ODELL was in consultation with Senator PLATT and a number of the leading men in the Republican organization in regard to measures of legislation. It is reported that in his conversation with these gentlemen "Gov. ODELL made it plain that his recommendations for the reorganization of the Charities, Prisons, Labor, and Forest, Fish, and Game Commissions would have to be passed promptly, and that it was in the interest of the party to pass these bills without delay."

This is, of course, not the statement of the Governor himself, but embodies the information to be secured from the other participants in the conference. We think that it may be accepted as substantially correct. The question then occurs in what way does the interest of the Republican Party require the prompt passage of these bills, and especially of the bill for the reorganization of the Charities Commission, against which there has arisen a very strong opposition among those best qualified to give judgment upon its effect? Does the Governor seek only the advantage for his party that is to be had from the advantage of the State? Or is there an especial advantage to be obtained by bringing the control of the patronage of the commission within the control of the party machine?

So far as the purely public and general advantage is involved, we understand the Governor to present only two points of importance. One is that the expenditures can be reduced. That is possible, but it is by no means certain, while it is entirely certain that such reduction at the expense of efficiency would be in reality costly. The other is that under the new plan there will be greater responsibility. This plea we regard as fallacious. We are persuaded that the responsibility will not be so great, for the reason that the majority of the commission will be two State officers elected for duties not connected with the commission. If their duties as members of the commission are unsatisfactorily performed nothing can be done about it. There is no way of bringing it home to them; still less is there any chance of holding them to account at the polls. They will stand or fall with their party, and that will win or lose for reasons quite remote from the management of the Charities.

On the other hand, the "constitutional" members of the commission will be, as the Governor is well aware, the selections of the party organization, probably with the ordinary party view of the use of public employment as party patronage. That view is not the constitutional view, and it is not the practical, businesslike, and honest view. The Constitution requires that all appointments in the civil service of the State shall be made for merit and fitness, to be tested so far as practicable by examinations, which so far as practicable must be competitive. That is not the party standard of selection. It is far from the standard observed by the Governor himself in the replacement of an able and experienced Civil Service Commissioner by an untried partisan. It is only too plain that commissions of which the majority are the successful candidates of the party for elective offices, such men, for instance, as our Lieutenant Governor, are not at all likely to follow the rule of the Constitution and abjure those partisan influences which the law expressly prohibits. If the Governor thinks that it will be the "interest of the party" to have the patronage in the hands of his own party, instead of having all appointments made for fitness alone, then the interest of the party will be in conflict with the public interest, and it is his duty morally and legally to protect the latter, no matter what may become of the former.

PROBLEMS OF TALL BUILDING.

The technical problems of construction, which gave the engineer more or less anxiety a few years ago in connection with very high buildings, seem to have been solved. Apparently there is no more difficulty in going up forty stories than thirty. The development of the structural steel industry and the application to architecture of the principles of bridge construction, seem to have made buildings of this class enduring, stable, and safe. The elevator has rendered the upper stories more conveniently accessible than those nearer the street, and more generally desirable for occupation because having better light and air, and further removed from the street noises. Their fire-resisting qualities have been satisfactorily shown. No building of this class, so far as we recall, has been tried in such a crucible as the Boston or the Chicago fire, but the danger of such conflagrations is steadily diminishing in cities in which more permanent structures are displacing those of an earlier era of local improvement. The opinion of those best qualified to judge seems to be that the modern "skyscraper" would stand the ordeal by fire quite as well as any type of building adapted to the needs of cities. It is not indestructible, and cannot be made so; but it is fire resistent in a high degree. The weak point, of course, is the veneer of stone and brick which incloses it. Those who have watched the construction of buildings of this class understand very well that the external walls have no part in carrying the floors, since such a building may be run up from foundation to roof level before any stone or brick work is done in connection with it. This suggests the only questions, perhaps, which still give anxiety to mathematicians among the engineers and architects. They are, in brief: (1) Is any available material strong enough to permanently resist disintegration under the crushing strains of walls rising 300 to 450 feet like sheets of cardboard standing on edge? (2) Is the attachment between the external walls and the frame sufficient to hold them in place, should a seismic jar or other adequate cause disturb their equilibrium and throw their enormous weight upon the members which fasten them to the frame? We do not think these problems have been studied to a conclusion, and it is not likely they will be until the outward fall of one of these walls focalizes attention upon the safe limitation of dependence upon equilibrium and resistence to crushing strains in thin walls of great height.

Perhaps the aspect of most serious moment to owners is the enormous cost of such buildings when equipped to the standard of modern requirements. Such investments, when wisely made, have been satisfactorily, if not liberally, profitable; when unwisely made, they have been extremely disappointing. This is more true in other cities than it has thus far been in New York, for the reason that buildings of this class have here been erected only in neighborhoods which have attracted tenants carrying on the kind of business demanding office accommodations. Even in New York a departure from this rule is an experiment, the financial results of which cannot be estimated with certainty. It needs more than one, or many, modern office buildings to make a neighborhood suitable for lines of business requiring such accommodations. Nothing illustrates so quickly and forcibly as a building the truth of the proverb that "the fashion of this world passeth away." A thousand influences which cannot be taken into account in a forecast of the future of a neighborhood are at all times at work to change the local requirement in the matter of buildings. It is for this reason that the average life of a building in New York is calculated at twenty-five years. By the end of that time it is found to have outlived its best usefulness, and, generally speaking, ceased to be profitable, and it makes a great deal of difference whether the investment to be written off four times in a century against a given plot of ground is expressed in thousands or millions of dollars. However, with these considerations the investor is the only one who needs to concern himself. What wisdom he acquires will be gained from experience, and when he has it new problems will have arisen which are quite as puzzling as those he is now working out with the assistance of capital eager for investment at low interest in city mortgages, and not very particular as to what sort of improvements the land carries.

A gentleman of the name of SMITH, member of the Assembly from Columbia County, we believe, has introduced a bill at Albany which the Merchants' Association of this city is very properly opposing with all its might. It seems to be, on the whole, the very worst of the batch yet produced by the representatives of the interior. In substance, it compels every man or corporation in the State to make a list under oath of every cent's worth of personal property that he may own, of all the debts due to him, of all the money he has in bank, of the notes of hand he holds, with the date, the rate of interest, and the amount accumulated, and numerous other details. If any one fails to make this list, whether notified by the Assessors or not, he is liable to fine, and the Assessors may proceed to guess how much he ought to pay, and add 50 per cent. thereto. The victim "shall not be permitted thereafter to question the justice of such assessment." This is practically the same scheme that was fought to a finish some ten years since. It is not likely to pass, as it is not on the programme of the Governor, but it is well that it should be opposed systematically and energetically, as the Merchants' Association is opposing it.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—While there are several imaginable explanations—chief among them, perhaps, lack of the artistic instinct—why a wealthy New Yorker of Scotch descent should conceive the purpose of building at Lenox a Summer home reproducing with some approximation to exactness a Highland castle of the sort constructed in the Middle Ages, it is not easy to understand why a New York architect, if he holds himself to be anything more than a boss of stone masons and carpenters, should peril his professional reputation among the enlightened by encouraging and assisting the wealthy New Yorker of Scotch descent to violate every one of the laws of artistic propriety. The real mediaeval castle, in the Highlands and elsewhere, was built with an eye single to its owner's needs as a member of the society then existing, and with strict regard to his position in that society. Every detail of the building was determined by considerations of intensely practical utility, and in the completed structure, by meeting those considerations simply, directly, and perfectly, the architect produced something that was not only useful, but beautiful as well. His triumph cannot be duplicated at Lenox and in this age—not, that is, by duplicating his product. Why should a modern residence at an American Summer resort show the slightest resemblance to the home of a man who was willing to sacrifice comfort to security from the attacks of armed foes, and to whom a room was pleasant, no matter how damp and dark, so long as its walls were strong and its approaches defensible? Of course the modern architect will avoid both dampness and darkness, but in meeting the requirements of civilization he will cease to be even an imitator, and his castle will become a mere pretense, with such mediaevalism as it retains an obvious and therefore irritating deception, a superficial trimming tacked on with as little taste as reason. A mediaeval castle reproduced at a fair has interest and value; in Lenox, as a house to live in, it will be, not picturesque, but grotesque.

—Considering that the City Hall flag is, after all, only a yard of two of cheap and faded cloth, there is some excuse for a feeling of amazement that its position at the top instead of in the centre of its pole has started an angry discussion of such vast extent. In a single day the talk about that bit of bunting spread all over New York and its vicinity; in the course of the next twenty-four hours it had provided a topic for the earnest comment of practically every daily paper in the United States and England, and for a majority of those in the rest of Europe, which means that it had been debated by no small part of the population of two continents; and before now, doubtless, other millions in India, Australia, China, and many more less important ends of the earth are expressing vehement opinions as to whether the City Hall flag is where it should be or not. Incidentally, the name of our remarkable Mayor and that of the even more remarkable organization—or shall we say man?—he serves with such self-sacrificing devotion have also been carried over land and sea with the same vertiginous rapidity, and, though widely known before, can now be said without much exaggeration to have become words universally familiar. And never before, perhaps, has a proverb come so near to being true as has, in the case of these names, the proverb that "familiarity breeds contempt." It is truly appalling to think of the multitude of people who in the past few days have searched their vocabularies from end to end for harsh epithets and have hurriedly heaped every one they found upon a little man whose claims even to notoriety are few and, as such claims go, insignificant. He is not the only, or the most, ill-mannered person in the world, or in the United States, or in New York, for that matter. The fact is that fate has been terribly cruel to him—has permitted him to display his peculiarities at a point on the earth's surface visible from most other points thereon, and at a moment when everybody was looking. Hence his present dreadful eminence. How he endures it is beyond comprehension. Surely he does not find consolation in the few faint notes of defense that one who listens hard can hear in the deafening chorus of denunciation. And with what emotions must he face the future! Never will his deed be forgotten, for he will get into history with this one display of boorishness as his only record.

—One of our neighbors is loudly and persistently clamoring for reform in the arrangementa for getting carriages to the doors of the Metropolitan Opera House at the close of performances. Truly reform is needed, and has been for many a year, but we note with unaffected grief that our neighbor is worried only over the delays and annoyances to which the present method, or lack of method, rather, in bringing up the carriages subjects the would-be riders in those vehicles. It has not a word to say, so far as we have seen, in regard to the perils to limb, yes, and to life itself, nightly encountered by those rather numerous and not wholly unimportant patrons of the opera who from choice or necessity intrust to their own legs the task of taking them to their homes or the street cars. In the opinion of the drivers of carriages, both public and private, these people have no rights whatever, and the person on foot who ventures upon the crosswalks of either Thirty-ninth or Fortieth Street in the critical half hour after the Opera House audience begins to disperse is habitually treated even worse than if he or she were a part of the pavement. For the paving stones over which the drivers do not happen to pass do not get cursed for having been close to hoofs or wheels—which the humble footgoer usually does. And with the sentiments of the coachman the house employes thoroughly agree, while the police at least incline to the same views. To the introduction of a better system for bringing up the carriages we have not the slightest objection, but the betterment certainly should have reference, first, to the natural and legal rights of men and women, as such, to use the streets in any proper way, and only second to the convenience of the part of the public that wants to use them in one particular way.

—While two boys were skating last week on Crum Creek, in Swarthmore, Penn., they heard a cry for help, and, hastening to the place from which it came, they found a girl of their own age who had broken through the ice and was in desperate peril. One of the boys instantly leaped into the water and swam to the girl's assistance, while his companion remained at the edge of the ice, ready to do what he could when the rescue had been effected. The boy in the water reached the girl, and after a long struggle brought her almost within reach of the other boy. The motions of the latter caused the ice to break under him, and he, too, fell into the water. Then a terrible question assailed the first boy. He knew that the second boy, who was his most intimate friend, could not swim. His own strength was almost exhausted, and he could not save both the girl, whose name he hardly knew, and his closest friend. He had to choose, and did choose—the friend. Leaving the girl, he swam to the boy and held him above the surface until they were both pulled out by other boys who at last reached the scene. The girl's dead body was recovered several hours later. The boy who could have saved her at the expense of his friend's life is half mad with doubt as to whether his conduct was right or wrong. The question is not a simple one. Many considerations have to be taken into the account, among them, that the boy to whom the alternative was presented was only sixteen years old.

PERSONAL PROPERTY TAX.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A. W. Lyman's plan for "equal taxation," which he defines to be the taxation of all mortgages and of all personal property by whomsoever held, and a graded tax on real estate holdings, has always resulted, and will always result, in unequal taxation. The history of taxation in all countries and in all ages shows that all attempts to fairly tax personal property have been failures. Thomas G. Shearman, the greatest authority on taxation in this or any other country, says in his book entitled "The Taxation of Personal Property":

"That which all the tremendous power of Rome in its grandest days failed to accomplish, that which the infernal tortures of Spain could not accomplish, when it beheaded hundreds, burned thousands, and massacred tens of thousands, letting loose a brutal soldiery in the vain struggle to tax the Netherlands, the American people are still apparently convinced that they can accomplish by distributing blank forms, administering long oaths, and threatening penalties of 50 per cent."

In every State in the Union the personal property tax is a huge failure. It almost confiscates the property of the truthful, straightforward, and honest, and permits those who are willing to perjure themselves to go scot free. It is a premium on perjury and a punishment on truthfulness. The law is a disgrace to the State, and it is the duty of all good citizens to help to wipe it off the statute books.

A THEATRE-TICKET SUGGESTION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read many of the letters appearing in your paper concerning the imposition on the general public by theatre managers. It seems that a great many managers are in league with the speculators, selling their choice seats to these speculators, who resell them to the public at a much higher price than the box office rates.

I believe that matters as they stand at present can be remedied by the Legislature passing a law that the price of each seat must be printed upon each ticket, and make it a misdemeanor to sell any such ticket at a price above that which appears upon the ticket. The law should also read, "that the theatre manager shall keep a printed plan of his theatre for each night of a performance, and that each seat sold shall be marked with an S., and that said plan be shown upon the demand of any purchaser of one or more seats."

I think if such a law were passed, it would drive the speculators out of business, and that the impudent box office clerk would be compelled to follow out the principle of "first come, first served." Any person intending to purchase theatre tickets could ask for the plan, and could then pick his choice of seats not marked with an "S."

VICTORIA REGINA.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

So much has been said, and much more will be said, on the life and career of the Queen, that it seems superfluous to dwell upon those fruitful themes at greater length. Allow me, however, to call attention to the first official title she bore through life.

It was said of a very different royal personage that—

He left the name at which the world grew pale,
To point a moral, or adorn a tale.

The pallor here referred to is that of fear and dismay; the moral pointed, the lust of conquest, the tale adorned indeed by feats of heroism, thrilling episodes, and a tragic ending.

Without altering a single word the quotation is strictly true of the lamented Queen, but with a tremendous difference as to the cause of the pallor. It is the pallor of sympathy and sorrow; the moral pointed is likewise a conquest, and the tale is adorned by romance and ideal womanhood.

The whole of her life illustrates and illuminates the appropriate name she bore. Loathing war, the victories gained in her reign and name did not intoxicate her. The greatest of her victories was the life-long victory of love, and that she did exemplify in a truly marvelous manner to within a few hours of her death even to the fondling of her little Pomeranian pet dog. And how well she reigned as queen of hearts is patent to the world this very hour.

It was said of Charles the Fifth that the sun never set on his dominions, but beyond that and other vainglorious boastings nothing came of his conquests. The sun likewise never set on the dominions of Victoria, but now from every part of the earth come words of sympathy and sorrow, and the world's potentates hasten to her obsequies to testify by their presence their homage to her virtues, and the sincerity of their sorrow at her departure.

The woman who solely by the splendid and forceful example of her noble womanhood caused the most martial of living potentates to weep like a child at her bier is well entitled to the beautiful name of Victoria the Queen.

Remembers Victoria's Coronation.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One of your editorials to-day says: "It takes a very daring memory indeed to go back to the time when Victoria became Queen of England." Mine is one of those memories. Victoria being one year my senior. I want to thank you most cordially for all the kind and manly words you have spoken of her character, both as a woman and a Queen. They have been very grateful to one who has watched her career from its beginning. I can look back upon all the wonderful achievements of her reign, and realize to the full the wonders of the telegraph, which brought the news of her death, according to our time, before it had occurred at Osborne.

I remember when her uncle, William IV., died. The event took place in London during the night, and about noon next day a post chaise and four horses drove through the town of Birmingham, with the words "Death of the King" in large black letters, printed on white muslin, on the back of the chaise. During my first visit to London the lunatic Oxford made his attempt to shoot the young Queen, and I remember the indignation caused by the event.

But I must cut short these memories of long ago, and close with again thanking THE TIMES for its just and manly appreciation of one good Queen departed, and also of those who now, Dei gratia, have taken her place.

Englishmen and American Sympathy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The reticent and unemotional Englishman may never make known how deeply he has felt the touching tribute paid by the American people to his late beloved Queen, but the memory of the spontaneous outburst of genuine feeling will be indelibly fixed in his mind.

When the people of the British Empire realize how sincerely and unanimously their cousins have grieved with them, they will feel as grateful as do we who live in America and love the country because at heart it remains always true to the best traditions of the race. FRANCIS H. TABOR.

Objects to Their Being Called "Rebels."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On your editorial page to-day you very rightly criticised The London Chronicle for the prejudice it shows in pretending that the execution of André cast a shadow on the fair name of Washington. Yet are you not inconsistent? On the same page you refer to Commissioners Mason and Slidell as "rebels"—a word which is as distasteful to some of your readers as it is to hear of a "shadow over the fair name of Washington." The people who called Paul Jones a pirate also called Washington a rebel, and, it is because The Chronicle considers both Washington and De Wet as rebels against the sovereign power of Great Britain that it can see no good in them.

It has often been said that the only difference between a revolution and a rebellion is that one is successful and the other is not. Perhaps you used the word in that sense, but "rebel" is a strong word, which always carries some animosity with it, and therefore should be avoided by a journal with the moderation which THE TIMES usually shows.

THE BOYS WHO DROVE ON THE OVERLAND.

From The Denver Post.

Long rails of steel in the sunlight glisten,
The winding trains through the valley roll,
The hardy settlers no longer listen
For Indian yells with a fear of soul!
The Concord kings of the olden highway
Now lie and rot in the storm and sun
In the old corral or the alley byway,
But battered relics of work once done,
And gone is the fearless, intrepid band,
The boys who drove on the Overland.

All dead are the echoes of long whips snapping,
Held firmly in drivers' buckskinned hands,
The great wheels over the boulders rapping
Or biting their way through the drifting sands.
No longer is savage foeman lurking
Behind a rock like a crouching cat,
His facial muscles with hatred jerking,
Near the quiet shores of the shallow Platte,
His strong bow held in a deadly poise
For a shot at one of the Overland boys.

Ah! those were the days that tried men's metal,
That tried the bottom of nervy steeds.
When the mustangs all were in silken fettle,
The wheelers, swings and the dancing leads.
A savage yell and a flight of arrows,
A driver up on the high box dead!
The team, with the speed of frightened sparrows,
Unguided into the station sped
To tell the tale to the relay band
Of one boy less on the Overland!

O'er the lines of steel now the iron horse dashes,
His hot breath blacking the hills and vales;
As eye of giant the headlight flashes
A shaft of light 'long the glimmering rails.
The homes of the settlers in peaceful quiet
Now dot the valley in close array,
And the painted redman no more runs riot
As back in the blood-stained early day.
Sweet peace wields the sceptre on every hand—
And where are the boys of the Overland?

Some lie 'neath the sod of the old Platte Valley
In deathly slumber that knows no dreams,
Near the trail where they oft at an Indian sally
Threw cutting silk to their frightened teams!
Some, bent with age and with hair all whitened
By hand of time, in the cities dream
Of the perilous days when their strong hands tightened
The lines o'er the backs of a flying team
When the reds were waiting on every hand
For the boys who drove on the Overland!

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

THE TEXT OF THE NEW PRUSSIAN CANAL BILL.—As has already been announced in cable dispatches, the Canal bill which is now being debated in the Prussian Diet, and which is a measure of personal interest to the Kaiser, is, in its scope, a revision and extension of the Canal bill of 1899, which was rejected by the Conservatives combined with a faction of the Agrarians on the ground that it would be too expensive to carry out, and that it favored West Prussia at the expense of the East. The bill of two years ago proposed to connect the Rhine with the Elbe by means of a canal navigable for vessels of considerable tonnage, and to canalize the Weser from Bremen to Minden, where the canal would cross it.

In the new bill, the text of which has just been published, the expenditure involved is nearly one-third larger than that mentioned in the 1899 measure. It, moreover, contains no fewer than seven different schemes, of which the total cost to the State is estimated at 389,010,700 marks, or nearly $95,500,000. These include the Rhine-Elbe Canal, which it is calculated will cost 260,784,700 marks; a ship canal between Berlin and Stettin, to cost 41,500,000 marks; a waterway connecting the Oder and the Vistula, of which the cost, together with that of a channel rendering the Warthe navigable for ships from Posen to the junction of the Netze, is estimated at 22,650,000 marks, and a canal connecting the Province of Silesia with the canal joining the Oder to the Spree. The bill further proposes that the State should participate in the work of improving the flow of water in the Lower Oder and the Upper Havel to the extent of 40,980,000 marks and 2,670,000 marks respectively, and should contribute the sum of 9,336,000 marks toward the canalization of the Spree.

It will thus be seen that the objection to the 1899 measure on the ground that it favored the West at the expense of the East has been overcome in the new bill, while in the latter the objection to expenditure has been rendered capable of still more emphasis.

IDEAL SUBMARINE NAVIGATION NOW BELIEVED TO HAVE BEEN ATTAINED BY A FRENCH BOAT.—There were lately conducted in the harbor of the French naval station of Cherbourg a series of experiments with the submarine boat Morse, which are regarded in European naval circles as of the utmost importance, as many believe that the problem of submarine navigation, at any rate so far as the absolute protection of a harbor from an enemy's ships is concerned, has thereby been solved. The experiments, which were held under the auspices of the Ministers of War and Marine, have been graphically described by a staff correspondent of Le Figaro, and his article has been reproduced and commented upon in the papers of every European capital.

It will be recalled that for the last three or four years the French Ministry of Marine, in spite of considerable opposition exercised by conservative naval officers, has given a great deal of attention to the subject of submarine navigation. Four submarine craft were completed last year, and eleven are now under construction, while during the past few months orders have been given for several more vessels of this type. Thirty-eight are provided for in the present naval programme, that is to be spread over the next six years, the total expense of which will be over 25,000,000f.

The Morse, with which the recent successful experiments were made, has a displacement of 146 tons; its length is 120 feet, while its breadth is 9 feet 2 inches. While the article in Le Figaro gives no description of the machinery employed, except to say that full provision had been made for an accident to the electrical appliances, and that "the respiration of the submarine's guests was as perfect as in any drawing room," it leaves no doubt that the writer enjoyed a unique experience. The Morse, on the occasion of which he writes, remained under water during two hours, sometimes sailing close to the surface and again descending to a depth of eighteen feet, while the periscope gave those below shifting views of what was going on above in the harbor.

"Toward midday," he writes, "by means of the periscope, Commandant Terrin shows us the Narval, (another submarine craft,) which is just emerging from the harbor, at the depth at which we are navigating; we follow her most minute movements up to the time when the flag signals from the fort that it is time for us to return. With the two Ministers and their staff, whom the experience has filled with satisfaction, we return to port in one of the Imprégnable's boats, while the Narval and the Morse, immersing themselves again, disappear for eight hours into other depths, manoeuvre, and fire their torpedoes at fixed or moving targets with a precision of which our officers alone have the secret."

WEALTHY TURKS ALARMED AT THE RESULT OF THE GERMAN-TURKISH AGREEMENT.—The Young Turkish Party is said to have gained many adherents among wealthy and patriotic Turks, who have been shown that the Sultan's permission to Germany to make Asia Minor a field for Teutonic commercial operations is most detrimental to Turkish merchants. They contend that the still incomplete Anatolian railways have so far proved only profitable to German financiers, who are reaping a rich harvest by taking full advantage of the ex-territorial privileges secured by the capitulations, and of the personal support given by their Kaiser, while the national energy of the Turkish citizens is paralyzed and their industrial and other societies are being rigorously suppressed.

As to the projected Damascus-Hijaz Railway, which is a Turkish enterprise, subscriptions to it have been stopped, principally, it is believed, owing to the warnings addressed through the organs of the Young Turkish Party to the Mohammedan public. These warnings have attempted to prove that the Government of Abdul Hamid is utterly incapable of carrying through a work of such extensive proportions, and that after a year or two the right of way would be purchased by the Germans, so that the Turkish subscribers would lose everything they had put into it. Papers of the Young Turkish Party declare that the proposed line is simply another scheme of the Sultan to get money from the wealthy Turks, and that whatever funds are subscribed will go the way that the fund for the reorganization of the Turkish Army did. It was raised three years ago by patriotic Turks all over the world, and its destiny only the Sultan and his entourage know.

In the meantime, the Young Turkish Party organs say, the unpaid soldiers of the Fifth Army Corps are laboring unselfishly on the roadbed of the Damascus-Hijaz line, and the tribes through whose country the road will run have promised to give what assistance they can. Moreover, the Sultan's couriers are sending their own proteges, who have just finished their studies in the College of Civil Engineers, to aid the Vali of Damascus, who although possessing absolutely no knowledge of engineering, has charge of the laying out of the line. "When the Sultan's Government," the Young Turks say, "finds that no more money is being subscribed, the work will come to an abrupt halt, only to be recommenced under German auspices, to the detriment of Turkish industrial interests."

THE WORKING OF THE NEW AMNESTY LAW IN FRANCE.—Owing to the loose wording of the recently promulgated French amnesty law, the chief aim of which was to put an end to criminal prosecutions arising out of the Dreyfus case, its benefits are now demanded by almost every lawyer who has a client to defend on a criminal charge the cause of which dates back before the passage of the measure. Men who have been arrested on the charge of burglary claim the protection of the law on the ground that, in committing the crime, they were merely looking for secret documents. Cases have recently been placed on record in which the defendants, accused of attempted murder, craved mercy on the plea that the persons whom they had intended to assault were secret members of the Dreyfus syndicate, while a bank embezzler recently brought before the Ninth Correctional Chamber in Paris declared that he had no intention of robbing his employers, but that his head had been turned by reading about the cause célèbre, and when before open safe he found it impossible to restrain himself from searching for documents which might clear up several points in the case.

In the Ninth Correctional Chamber alone thirty-three cases of defamation of character which had been pending have, after eloquent addresses by the defendants' counsel, been found to be covered by the amnesty law. In this court the cases arising out of the recent railway accident at Choisy-le-Roi were settled, and M. Fournel, President of the Chamber, found it necessary to anticipate the defense of the railroad authorities by declaring in open court that the authors of the accident would not be permitted to shield themselves behind the amnesty law in any circumstances. The Eleventh Chamber, under the Presidency of M. Menier, had already established a precedent by declaring in a similar case that the amnesty law did apply.

EXTRA SESSION OUTLOOK

Some Leading Republican Senators Believe One Unnecessary.

Philippine Problem May Be Settled by Passing the Spooner Bill—Cuban Question a Difficult One.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Two leading Republican Senators, both of whom should be as well-informed and as capable of judging of the probability of an extra session of Congress as any two men in this city, agreed to-night in saying that they did not consider an extra session necessary, but that if one had to be called it would be to provide the authority to enable the President to prescribe rules and regulations for the Philippines until a form of government has been adopted there, and also on account of the necessity for considering the proper course to be pursued toward Cuba.

It is understood that Senator Aldrich is perfectly confident that the Tax Reduction bill will go through as it came from the Finance Committee, by a unanimous vote, and because it possesses the advantage over the House bill of that consideration which the rules of the House prevent. When the House comes to look at the reasons of the Senate for the changes made, it will, he is said to maintain, abandon the attempt to justify a return to the provisions of the House bill. As for the suggestion that a question of principle is involved in the difference of 10 cents a barrel on beer, which is the difference in that tax as it appears in the House and Senate bills, that is regarded as too frivolous to debate.

The expectation of the Senators referred to as having expressed an opinion about an extra session was that if the Spooner resolution, unchanged or modified so as to overcome the opposition of the Democrats, who think that it conveys too much authority to the President, can be adopted, the necessity for an extra session on Cuba may be averted. Just what the Congress is to do with the Cuban Constitution, or about withdrawing the troops in the expectation that Cuba will adopt its Constitution, is a puzzling question. The intimation that Gen. Wood has promised the Constitutional Convention that the Congress will "promptly consider" the Constitution, is apt to prove troublesome, if true, for, as one Senator suggested, "Gen. Wood has a good deal to do to take care of his end of the Cuban business without undertaking to pledge Congress to action, prompt or otherwise."

A Senator who is admitted to be one of the brightest lawyers in the body, but who declined to be quoted by name, said that there were many things to be taken into account before accepting the Constitution of the Cubans as a guarantee of "stable government."

"The power that made this Constitution," he said, "can amend it. What assurance does the present Constitution contain that if it should now meet with the approval of the Congress it would not be changed in a month or a week after our approval had been given to its provisions? If it is approved and we withdraw our troops, are we to send the troops back as soon as it is changed so as to meet our disapproval? If it is sent to us, 'for our information and action,' as the language of the President is apt to be, and we amend it, will it be our Constitution or that of Cuba? If we send it back with the assertion that we shall not approve it unless certain changes are made in it to give us assurance that we deem necessary, will that not look like constraint?"

Some concern is felt as to what will be the effect upon the Cubans of the decision to postpone action upon the Constitution of Cuba until next session. The convention at Havana has been hurrying its work with the expectation that the Constitution would be approved or criticised by this session of Congress. This seems to Senators a very unreasonable expectation, betraying an ignorance of the political and legislative situation here.

It cannot be learned that the Democrats desire to force an extra session. They do not see any chance for making political capital out of such a session, unless it is to be for the Subsidy bill. Most of them object to sitting in Washington all Summer to do business here when they could have time to look after private business, and save the money they would be compelled to spend out of their salaries for living here three or four months longer than would otherwise be necessary.

This week, according to friends of the Shipping bill who are only nominally for it, will determine whether there is any chance whatever for its passage this session. It is not believed that this can be told before the end of the week or the first of next week. "This is to be a week of settlement," said a member of the Steering Committee of the Senate, "and to venture predictions as to what legislation, other than appropriation bills and the Tax Reduction bill, will be passed would be a flagrant foolishness. The appropriation bills will be passed. We may get legislation for the Philippines that will remove the necessity for meeting specially to provide such laws. As to Cuba, we have tied ourselves up so badly about that island that it is doubtful whether we shall be able to see our way clear to the right course by the end of a week."

THIS WEEK IN CONGRESS.

Senator Towne Will Speak on the Philippine Question To-day—House Will Consider Appropriation Bills.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—A variety of subjects, including appropriation bills, the War Revenue Reduction bill, the Ship Subsidy bill, and, to some extent, the Philippine question, will claim the attention of the Senate the coming week. On Monday Mr. Towne (Rep., Minn.) will speak on the problems involved in the government of the Philippines. There is somewhat more than usual interest in this speech, because not only of Mr. Towne's reputation as an orator and the fact that it will be his only speech in the Senate upon a political subject, but also because of increased interest in the Philippine question aroused by the President's request of the Senate for early legislation on this subject.

It does not appear probable that the Minnesota Senator's speech will call out other speeches immediately upon this subject, because even Senators who would like to, see legislation during this session admit the impossibility of taking up the matter seriously until the report of the Taft Commission can be printed, or so long as there are other pressing questions before the Senate. Still, struggling references to the subject are not improbable at any time during the remainder of the session.

Senator Aldrich, (Rep., R. I.) Chairman of the Finance Committee, has given notice that he will ask the Senate to take up the War Revenue bill early in the week. The understanding is that he will press that question to the exclusion of all other bills, except appropriation bills. Being a revenue measure it will take precedence of other questions under the Senate rules. While there is no real opposition to the War Revenue bill it appears probable that there will be some discussion of it as an easy means of delaying consideration of the Subsidy bill.

If there is opportunity the Subsidy bill will be taken up, but it is not expected that anything more definite will occur in this connection during the present week than the making of speeches. The Indian Appropriation bill will continue to receive attention Monday after the conclusion of Mr. Towne's speech.

The week in the House is likely to be monopolized by appropriation bills. Seven of the fourteen general appropriation bills have already passed the House. Three others, the Post Office, Agricultural, and Fortifications bills, have been reported to the House, and the remaining four, the Army, Consular and Diplomatic, Sundry Civil, and General Deficiency, are still in the committees having them in charge.

The three reported to the House, and the Consular and Diplomatic, which is practically completed, probably will be disposed of during the week. Whatever time remains will be occupied with the bill to promote the efficiency of the Revenue Cutter Service, which has been made a continuing special order, not, however, to interfere with appropriation bills.

The Post Office Appropriation bill is likely to be made the occasion of much debate. All the questions raised by the report of the Joint Postal Commission are likely to be dragged into the arena. An effort undoubtedly will be made to continue the appropriations for pneumatic tube service, which were eliminated from the bill, and there probably will be the usual fight on the appropriations for special mail facilities.

It may be that in the course of the week a special rule will be brought in for the consideration of one of the gold bills reported by the Coinage, Weights, and Measures and Banking and Currency Committees, both of which are struggling for precedence in connection with this legislation. But the Committee on Rules, to which the committee appealed yesterday, has not yet come to any conclusion, and the gold bill's place in the week's programme remains problematical.

CHINESE AID FOR CHRISTIANS.

Imperial Edict Directs Relief for Them as Well as Others in Famine-Stricken District.

PEKING, Jan. 27.—There has been great distress in the Province of Shan-Si, owing to the famine, and thousands have died. The Court has ordered rice relief to be issued in large quantities.

A report reached the foreign envoys that native Christians suffering from the famine were to be discriminated against and to be punished if they even begged for food.

Mr. Conger, Sir Ernest M. Satow, and M. Pichon, the United States, British, and French Ministers, protested to Prince Ching and Li-Hung-Chang against such discrimination, and the Court issued an edict, dated yesterday, ordering all relief officials and Chinese soldiers to treat Christians exactly the same as others throughout the empire, under penalty of decapitation.

The foreign envoys consider this a most important decree if it is carried out.

BOERS IN NUMEROUS FIGHTS.

Kitchener Reports Minor Engagements with Considerable Losses.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The War Office has received from the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa a dispatch dated Pretoria, Jan. 26, reporting numerous engagements, the following being the most important:

"Cunningham was engaged at Middelfontein and Kopperfontein yesterday, with Delarey's force. Babington while moving north from Ventersdorp, threatened the enemy's flank, whereupon the Boers retired west. Cunningham's casualties were two officers wounded, four men killed and thirty-seven wounded.

"In the engagement at Lichtenberg, Jan. 17, some yeomanry were captured. These have since been released with the exception of a Major and three men. No details are yet at hand.

"Smith-Dorrien had a successful engagement of five hours while on the march from Wonderfontein to Carolina, where the Boers had lately been concentrating. The enemy were in considerable strength, and held the river, but were driven out. Our losses were one officer killed and two officers and thirteen men wounded."

Lord Kitchener confirms the report that a British train with troops and military stores on board was waylaid and captured at Slijpklip, near Fourteen Streams, last Friday, but says the Boers retired on the arrival of the armored train sent in pursuit.

FORCED TO BECOME SOLDIERS.

Three Muleteers from South Africa Talk of Press Gang Methods.

Three muleteers—Joseph C. Calgan of Philadelphia, John A. Mandeville of St. Louis, and Samuel Myer of Chicago—returned to America on the American liner St. Louis yesterday, having been furnished transportation by the American Consular authorities in South Africa and Liverpool.

They gave a very dark picture of the conditions in South Africa, saying that it was very hard to get subsistence, and that many of the muleteers who accompanied the transports had been compelled to join the military service. Thirty-five had been impressed into Brabant's Horse and the Cape Town regiment, they said. They appealed to the American Consul at Port Elizabeth, who furnished them transportation to Liverpool, where the Consul at that port sent them on to the United States.

To Take Horses and Mules to the Cape.

Capt. Seymour Husted and Capt. T. M. Langton of the Twenty-first Lancers and Lieut. J. H. G. White, all officers of the remount department of the British Army, were among the arrivals on the Cunard liner Etruria yesterday. They are en route to New Orleans, where each will be assigned to take charge of one of the transports that are to be used to take some of the 50,000 horses and mules that the English Government has secured in this country for service in South Africa. Many of the animals have already been shipped. The transports soon to sail will each carry about 1,500 horses or mules. Col. De Burgh of the British Army purchased the animals.

SCORES CUBAN CONSTITUTION.

Senor Varona Says It Would Elevate Local Bossism and Lead to Ruin and Chaos.

HAVANA, Jan. 27.—In an open letter to La Lucha, Señor Varona says:

"It would be a crime against patriotism not to express one's anxiety and fear regarding the danger of accepting the Constitution which has been submitted in draft to the Constitutional Convention. The damage would be beyond repair, and all who remain silent now are accomplices in an irreparable injury to the country.

"The Constitution submitted is merely an abstract work, a constitutional precept copied from many Constitutions. Some of these precepts are excellent, but even they can only be defended theoretically in some academy of law.

"A characteristic feature of the Constitution is that it would elevate local bossism into the category of a public institution. I must deplore the movement to divide the island into six provinces. Federalism would result in an attempt to get power into the hands of the few. Each province would think itself independent of the central government. Each Mayor would think himself a feudal lord. The big bosses and the little bosses would be lords of all the property in the country.

"With two or three years of provincial autonomy all Cuba would be ruined or else the people would rise against the local bosses. The fiscal authority of a province and the municipality would be delusions, leading us to chaos. All the advance that is possible on that line has been made by Sagasta, Bosch, Labra and Cancio, but with federalism they could not put a check on municipal bodies.

"Cuba is able to govern herself if given a proper regimen, one suited to the country, with its scarce population, the greater part of which is uneducated and divided by great social differences. Provinces fostered and controlled by the central Government would prosper, but the opposite would follow if the central Government undertook to enforce law in self-governing provinces. A rupture would be inevitable."

CUBANS WANT COCKFIGHTING.

Delegation Calls on Gen. Wood to Thank Him for His Work in Cuba.

HAVANA, Jan. 27.—A mounted delegation of 200 Cubans from the Provinces of Havana and Pinar Del Rio waited upon Governor General Wood at the palace this afternoon, and extended thanks to the military Government for what it had done in Cuba. The delegation also conveyed to Gen. Wood an assurance that their countrymen in the two provinces were in accord with them, and would work in harmony with the United States authority, to whose wise administration the country owed its present prosperous and peaceful condition.

Each horseman carried a flag, and there was a decided preponderance of the Stars and Stripes. Two young Cuban women represented Cuba and America.

The committee of the delegation feelingly explained to Gen. Wood the obligations under which their countrymen felt themselves to be for the good order and harmony prevailing in the country districts, but they begged him to consider that, with returning prosperity, it was only natural for the Cubans to turn again to some of the diversions they had known in former days, several of which—"time-honored amusements" the committee called them—were now prohibited by law.

Gen. Wood asked if they referred to cockfighting, and they admitted that this was one of the amusements they wished to revive. He assured them that he would lay the matter before the Secretaries.

There seems to be a general movement in the country districts of the island to secure the legalization of cockfighting, and many petitions have lately been submitted in aid of it.

CUBA'S TOBACCO EXPORT TAX.

Gen. Wood's Request for 50 Per Cent. Reduction Allowed.

HAVANA, Jan. 27.—Governor General Wood has informed the tobacco exporters that the Government at Washington has allowed his petition for a 50 per cent. reduction in the exportation tax.

The lowering of the export duty has been the subject of agitation among the tobacco interests in Cuba for a year.

REFORM CLUB ON THE SUBSIDY BILL

Another Attack Made on the "Hanna-Payne-Frye" Act.

Claim Made that "Its Professed Aims Are Bald Shame to Distract Attention from a Treasury Raid."

Under the title "Hanna-Payne-Frye Subsidy, Profession versus Performance," the Committee on Tariff Reform of the Reform Club has prepared another article on the Subsidy bill now before Congress. The preample of the Senate bill is quoted, following the statement: "That a volunteer 'committee' with an eye single to its own profit should pose as patriots is in accord with settled precedent." The article then takes up the various claims of the friends of the measure, from a point of view expressed in the words: "Experience has also taught us to expect in such cases just what we find here, that the professed aims of the bill are bald shams, set up to distract attention from the Treasury raid just planned."

It is claimed in the article that, although the bill is presented as being intended to help the export trade, the shipping which it is proposed to subsidize carries only one-tenth of our exports, thus leaving freights to depend upon the rate at which the other nine-tenths will carry cargoes, and leaving the subsidized one-tenth, while pocketing the Government subsidy, to charge full freights. Five per cent. of our shipping outward and 30 per cent. of that inward bound, is already running in ballast. Subsidy not on cargo must greatly increase the extent to which ship owners will thus run rather than take unfavorable charters.

The subsidy being given according to the tested speed of the vessel, and not by the rate run, a fourteen-knot ship drifting about at a tenknot rate could actually run with profit, as compared with waiting for cargo, and would thus be paid by our Government, to lie idle and not carry American exports.

Finally, it is asserted, the highest subsidies are given to ships that not merely do not but can not carry any considerable export cargo—a fast passenger steamer of the "International" for example, receiving eleven times as much subsidy in proportion to cargo as would a standard freighter of the best class.

It is pointed out that the pretense that auxiliary cruisers and transports would thus be procured for Government use is even more absurd. The vessels now building by the Government and others now average above 23 knots, while of all ships in existence, or likely to be induced by this bill, there are only four (of 20 knots) of above 17 knots speed, and none others likely to be built. The usefulness of transports and cruisers that could not fight or run and the fatal effect on fast war vessels of ships to accompany or protect which they must delay their course, are touched upon. Attention is then called to the fact that:

Most ships that the friends of this bill claim to be available for Government use are now getting mail subsidies under the law of 1891, by which they are already expressly reserved for Government use in case it chooses to take them, and in addition compelled to be fitted for such use by requirements more rigid than those proposed by the pending bill, which, giving them a larger subsidy, expressly permits them to cancel their pending contracts. So far, therefore, as concerns use for transports or cruisers, the proposed bill, instead of putting better vessels at the service of the Government, actually releases those now at its disposal from the requirements of fitness therefor to which they are now subject.

That part of the bill that is said to be intended to help the American seaman is characterized as "most contemptible of all." It is argued that the provision that subsidized ships have one-quarter of their crew either citizens or those intending to become such is nullified by the express proviso that if the master cannot secure such a crew he need not do so; the provision that one American boy be employed at seamanship for every thousand tons of shipping is made innocuous by the provision that he need be paid only what his services are worth. With reference to the provision that a few fishermen serving upon ships, subsidized for the year at $2 per ton in case they run three months, be given $1 per month during the time they are actually employed, it is pointed out that as no minimum wage is provided, our Government would simply pay $1 per month of the wages fixed by ordinary competition, for which the American fishermen would still work.

Finally, since the ships which would get the most of the subsidy must now, under their mail contracts, have one-half of their crew Americans, and not merely to employ the same number of American boys, but educate them as petty officers, the net result of the pending bill—which expressly releases these ships from their present contracts—would be to employ fewer American sailors and fewer American boys, and to decrease inducements offered the latter to go to sea.

The claim that American shipowning or American shipbuilding in general will be increased is declared preposterous. It is pointed out that our shipyards are already crowded to their utmost capacity by orders for the classes of ships now most called for, without reference to subsidies. Contracts for steamers larger than any hereto-fore built, have lately been given to an American shipyard whose bid was from $400,000 to $500,000 lower than British shipyards.

In conclusion the article says:

American shipbuilding leads the world to-day, and American shipowning would do so except for our laws. As to this bill, its real character is betrayed by the last committee amendment. That provided in effect—

"Whereas, under the free trade in supplies and materials which our shipyards now enjoy, they are filled with work and successfully compete with the Old World in bidding for new work, they shall hereafter be compelled to use American materials—mainly iron, steel, and machinery."

This would not provide additional market for American materials, since these are now almost exclusively used; but it would put our shipyards at the mercy of our trusts, which must now supply them at comparatively reasonable prices.

STEAMSHIP ADRIFT AT SEA.

ST. VINCENT, C. V., Jan. 27.—An Italian steamer called here to-day and reports having been compelled, after fruitless efforts at towing, to leave the British steamer Cavour, Jan. 24, in latitude 4 degrees north, longitude 29 degrees west, with her engines disabled and irreparable at sea.

The steamer Cavour of the Liverpool, Brazil and River Plate Steam Navigation Company, (Messrs. Lamport & Holt,) sailed from Liverpool Jan. 4 for Rio Janeiro in command of Capt. Kelly. She is a steel vessel of 3,151 tons net.

French Government Seizes Guns.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—Recently Le Petit Sou, a Socialist journal, announced that it was prepared to sell guns to its subscribers at a very moderate figure, being persuaded that an armed nation was indispensable to the welfare of the republic and the country. The Government watched the proceeding for a week, and finally deciding that a depot of arms was not safe in the hands of those who are only too willing to attempt a coup d'état, seized the entire lot.

Gales Sweeping the British Coasts.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—Heavy gales are sweeping the British coasts, and many shipping casualties are reported. The mail steamers between Dieppe and Newhaven have ceased running. Great damage has been done in South Wales, and also in Ireland, where the storm is especially fierce and accompanied by hail and sleet. A large school in the course of erection at Londonderry was blown down yesterday.

Two Embezzlements in Germany.

BERLIN, Jan. 27.—Yesterday two embezzlements were reported in Berlin, the Mitteldeutsche Kredit Bank losing 200,000 marks and Herr Ch. Kretschmar, the banker, 80,000 marks.

PROTECTIVE TARIFF LEAGUE.

In a circular addressed to the defenders and friends of protection, C. A. Moore, the newly elected President of the American Protective Tariff League, yesterday announced his acceptance of the office. The circular reads, in part:

In my opinion there was never a time when our foreign competitors were feeling more keenly the loss of their trade equally in our own and in the markets of the world; that never more than now were they determined to use all possible means to break down our protective system and gain a lodgment in our great market for their trade; that now, more than ever, the eternal vigilance, which has been the price of our splendid success, should be unceasingly maintained; that we must continue to be alert if we are to hold on to what we have gained at such great sacrifices of energy, time, and money.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

Pictures of the late Queen of England have always been a salable commodity in this town. Collectors and such men as make a fad of extra illustrating volumes had to have them. In some way or other most of the Grangerized books have portraits of the Queen introduced. So for the older and more valuable etchings, engravings, prints, and photographs there has been a sufficient demand to make them scarce enough to command fair prices. Since her death the values of the pictures in the stock of dealers who happen to have them have increased by over 100 per cent. For a couple of years to come the outlook is that the country will be fairly flooded with the books—histories they will probably be termed by the authors and publishers, if by no one else—relating to the life and reign of Victoria. Magazine editors are hurriedly unearthing al the old manuscripts they have in their safes on the subject. Hack writers, as well as those men the use of whose names is worth paying for as an advertisement, are being besieged to write "personal recollections" of the Queen, her son, her family, her coronation, her marriage, her jubilee, and all that sort of thing. Portraits are needed to illustrate this forthcoming flood of reminiscent gossip and gush, and the more uncommon the more valuable they are to magazine publishers. So publishers and the extra-illustrators are in the market for all the rare pictures of her Majesty. Naturally, then, prices have gone soaring. Next week they will be higher, for belated collectors will be out after the prizes. As the latter are willing to pay any sort of a price for a picture they want or think they need to round out their collections, a harvest is in prospect for those shrewd dealers of the town who, foreseeing the death of the Queen and the demand that would be created for these pictures, have been accumulating them ever since the days of the jubilee. One of this class is said to have put about all the profits of his business for the past three years into Victoria portraits until he has almost cleaned the London market of the most desirable and valuable of the engravings and etchings.

There are a couple of keys that Martin Keese, the veteran janitor of the City Hall, has not allowed to go out of his possession for an instant since the death of Queen Victoria. These are the keys that admit to the cupola of the building graced by the presence of our Mayor. Without them no one can reach the halyards with which the flag on the City Hall is raised and lowered. So much fuss has been made about that flag being kept at the peak of the staff since Victoria's death that Mr. Keese does not intend to have the flag lowered to half-mast. Some mischievous person might do it if the halyards were within reach. Mr. Keese's watchfulness is due to his recollections of what happened to the flag on St. Patrick's Day a few years ago. There was almost a riot over that incident, and the custodian of the flag does not care for a repetition of that scene. On the occasion referred to, some person, said to be a space writer for one of the daily papers, who was in search of material for a good story reached the cupola just before the parade of the Irish societies was due at the City Hall. The flag was lowered, reversed, and with the "Jack" down—this the recognized signal of distress—was hoisted at half-mast. Then the halyards were tied fast. The paraders discovered the peculiar display of colors just as the head of the procession swung to the plaza for review by the Mayor. At once there was a howl, cries that the Mayor was insulting the Irish, and a scramble to the roof to set the flag to rights. So securely were the halyards fastened that it was the work of several minutes before the ropes could be cut and the flag restored to its rightful place, at the peak of the staff. It was with difficulty that the police restrained the paraders from storming the City Hall, and the incident was the sensation of the day. It is to prevent a recurrence of anything of this sort that Mr. Keese keeps the only keys leading to the roof of the building in his pockets. He will not allow them out of his possession, nor allow any one on the roof on any pretext, until after the Queen is buried. With so much feeling over the present flag incident it is the only safe thing for him to do.

Attendants at the skating rink in this city where hockey games are played are grumbling over what they deem a piece of extortion now being practiced by the management. Admission to the rink, with a privilege of witnessing the games from a comfortable seat, last Winter was fixed at 50 cents. Hockey became popular, and the best of the contests attracted considerable crowds. Now if one wants a seat he must pay a half dollar in addition to the admission fee. It is worth a half dollar to see the games and enjoy a short spin on the ice afterward, patrons of the place say, but is worth no more. That charge was satisfactory and the games did much to attract people to the place. What the young men are grumbling about is the demand that they shall pay the extra charge for a seat. Most of them take a young lady with them to see the sport. They are willing to pay a dollar for that privilege. But the unexpected addition of another dollar to their expenditure in order that the two may sit comfortably and watch the game—never exceeding an hour in duration—they deem an imposition. As they are at the mercy of the management in this matter there seems to be no remedy, for there is no other place in the city where the games may be played. The effect of the additional charge on the attendance is already very noticeable, a fact which may result in the restoration of the old scale of prices. Columbia University boys are particularly bitter complainants, as they take a lively interest in the intercollegiate contests, and cannot afford to pay $2 to go to see the games, as they have to if they take a lady with them.

Edible snails are in the market at from 35 to 50 cents a dozen. All are imported, and dealers say the demand for them is a growing one in this city. One of the funny theories connected with their use is that they are a specific for tuberculous diseases, and a person afflicted with consumption are said to eat them raw. Whether the Christian Scientists introduced the fad, as one Fulton market man claims, is not definitely known.

A buyer for one of the largest of the furriers of the town discovered a new industry while on a trip through the West last month. In a little Wisconsin town he found a young farmer with capital and ideas who had gone into mink raising as a business. He had been breeding hares, on the theory that there was to be a big demand for their pelts, and thought he saw a fortune in it. But the returns were small, and so he decided to abandon the scheme and go in for minks. For the skins of these little fellows there is an increasing demand with the increasing scarcity of the minks. He hired some of the boys of the town to trap the minks for him, offering to pay twice the value of their skins for the live animals. The offer held good until he had accumulated about 200 of the dark-skinned little fellow. The experimenter has a he has selected his breeding establishment, and furnished an artificial home for them in a series of closely built pens, with fences protected at the tops with the arched wires such as are used at our Zoological Garden, to keep his pets from escaping. The mink is something in the vampire way, and rabbits and artificially-hatched chickens are raised for food for the voracious little fellows. The experimenter has a theory that the skins will be better if the minks are allowed to feed in their natural way, by sucking the blood from the freshly killed bodies of the rabbits and chickens. There isn't much to a mink, but what there is of him, if the fur is dark and fine enough, is very valuable, from the furrier's standpoint. Whether the minks will breed as rapidly in captivity as they do in their natural surroundings is a question yet to be solved. In fact, the whole scheme is full of mysteries, for, so far as could be learned among breeders of pets at the Chicken Show, this is the first mink farm that has been established. If it should prove a success, there seems to be a new field opened to farmers' boys to earn a little pocket money. It will be easier to breed than to trap minks, which have a deserved reputation for shrewdness, so far as traps are concerned.

Papinta, who has been dancing at some of the vaudeville theatres in town recently, is owner of a stable of race horses. She races in the name of her trainer, Edward Cassin, and has so far confined her sport to the tracks of the Pacific Coast. Her breeding and training establishment is in California, where she also has a fruit ranch. It is said that next season she will bring a string of horses East for a campaign on the local tracks.

SUPERANNUATION IN THE CIVIL SERVICE

It Recommends as the Best Remedy a System Requiring Life Insurance on the Deferred Annuity Plan.

The special committee of the Civil Service Reform League—Richard Henry Dana of Boston, William Dudley Foulke of Indiana, and Silas W. Burt of New York—has prepared a report on superannuation in the civil service, in which it unanimously recommends as the best remedy for superannuation a system requiring life insurance on the deferred annuity plan by all employes during probation, as a prerequisite to final appointment. It is proposed to make the policies non-assignable and to be secured by deposits by the insuring companies in Government control.

Those employes still capable and useful at the fixed age are to be allowed to stay in the service at regular salary, on condition that their annuities go to a surplus fund with which to pay annuities to those under that fixed age who have become incapable through no fault of their own.

The report suggests that the exact age at which the annuities would normally be payable, the amount to be paid in various grades, the age and conditions under which the surplus annuities would be paid to those superannuated below the normal age, and all other details necessary to carry out the plan should be fixed by regulations to be drawn by a special commission.

The more radical remedies for superannuation that have been generally proposed are summed up in the report as follows:

A civil pension list.

A retirement fund to be made up by deductions from salaries.

A provision requiring endowment or deferred annuity insurance from all seeking admission to the civil service.

A provision for the forced retirement of a certain percentage of employes each year.

Recurring examinations for promotion, reductions, and dismissals.

Fixed terms of office.

Forced retirement at a certain age.

And also certain combinations of these.

It is pointed out that the civil pension system has led to great abuses in England, and is extremely unpopular in America; that there is danger of a civil service lobby in Congress should the system be adopted.

In dealing with the subject of a retirement fund it is pointed out that two forms might be used:

(a) A deduction from all salaries for the immediate support of a retired list and (b) annual deductions from the salaries of those hereafter to enter the service, which should be allowed to accumulate at compound interest to form a fund for annuities, payable only to those who have thus contributed.

Objection to the first method is found in the fact that those now in the service include only those who are able to do some work, while the retired list would also include the absolutely helpless. Besides this, a pension at the end of the service tends to increase the number of persons who would stay on for the sake of the pension. Besides other objections, it is pointed out, that this system is unfair to those coming into the service young and remaining in it for many years, as they would have had deducted from their salaries very much more than would have insured them the same annuity at the same age in any insurance company, and those older and nearer the age of retiring would have paid far less than their share.

Regarding the second plan, the one recommended by the commission, the report says in part:

The average age of entering our classified service is twenty-eight years. Starting with that, it would require annual payments of $27 a year on male lives to pay an annuity of $600 to those who should attain seventy years of age for every year of the rest of their lives. That would be 4½ per cent. on a salary of $1,000. This cost is based upon information furnished by one of the largest life insurance companies in the United States to cover the special case. They actually issue such policies now, under the name of "deferred annuities." On the basis of paying the same annuity at the age of sixty-five and over, instead of seventy, it would cost $55.20 a year, or a little over twice as much as if payable at seventy years of age and over.

The cost of these deferred annuities includes, of course, expenses and profits of the insurance company. Theoretically the Government could insure at less cost, but on the other hand, it must be assumed that the Government would be limited to investments in United States bonds with very low rates of interest, while insurance companies can secure 4.5 per cent.

The Government might make deductions on the basis of the cost of company insurance, use the fund for its own purposes, and pay the annuities on the same basis as the companies, but this would be making up the difference out of the pockets of the people, and when once the annuities, at least for any considerable length of time, are not strictly confined to a self-sustaining fund, there comes in the old danger of a lobby and claims for special privileges, as in the case of direct pensions.

The advisability of requiring insurance in the way of deferred annuities from all those who enter the service is largely a matter of the cost of this insurance. A deferred annuity payable, for example, at $600 a year every year of life over seventy on male lives beginning at twenty-eight, (the average age of entrance into the classified service,) would require payments of $27 a year, or 2.7 per cent. on an average salary of $1,000. On a larger average salary the proportion would be the same.

METROPOLITAN OPERA CONCERT.

Funeral March Played in Memory of Verdi—A Varied Programme.

The sixth Sunday night concert attracted a large attendance to the Metropolitan Opera House last night. The soloists were Mme. Suzanne Adams, Miss Maryill, and Miss Carrie Bridewell, and Messrs. Salignac, Journet, and Scotti.

Between the first and second numbers on the programme Walter Damrosch, the conductor, made a short speech on the death of Verdi, the composer. As a tribute to him the funeral march from the Götterdämmerung, which was not on the programme, was played by the orchestra and received considerable applause.

Mr. Scotti, who sung the prologue from "I Pagliacci," was repeatedly encored, and finally sang the Toreador's song from "Carmen." The programme follows:

Overture, "Santa Claus"....Harry Rowe Shelley
Aria, "Il Barbiere di Siviglia".....Rossini
Mr. Journet.
Polonaise from "Mignon"....Ambroise Thomas
Mme. Suzanne Adams.
Les Stances.....Flegier
Mr. Salignac.
Elizabeth's Greeting, ("Tannhaeuser").Wagner
Miss Maryill.
Adagio from Septet.....Beethoven
Waltz from "Die Puppenfee".....Bayer
Prologue from "I Pagliacci".....Leoncavallo
Mr. Scotti.
Stances de Sapho.....Gounod
Miss Carrie Bridewell.
Aria, "Philemon et Baucis".....Gounod
Mr. Journet.
Arioso .....Delibes
Miss Maryill.
Quartet from "Rigoletto".....Verdi
Mmes. Suzanne Adams and Carrie Bridewell;
MM. Salignac and Scotti.

THEATRE FOR WHITE RATS.

Circle Music Hall Offered to Them—Propositions from Western Managers.

At a meeting yesterday of the association of vaudeville performers known as the White Rats, and organized in opposition to the Vaudeville Trust, Daniel Jackson, representing the Columbia Amusement Company, has offered the Circle Music Hall to the association for a rental which it seems will practically assure the success of the undertaking. The matter was referred to the Board of Directors with the advice that before further steps are taken, the matter of securing the license, which has so far kept the Circle Music Hall dark, should be investigated.

Two other propositions were also submitted concerning theatres. Both come from Western managers, who wish to break into New York. The first was a proposition to open the Theatre Comique, the theatre once owned by Sam T. Jack, on a co-operative basis. The man making the proposal only asked that he might call it the White Rat Theatre, and be assured of the co-operation of the order. The proposition was laid on the table for further consideration.

The third proposition was from a Western vaudeville manager, now affiliated with the Association of Vaudeville Managers. He offers to build a theatre in New York to be called by any name the White Rats shall decide, and to be run in conjunction with the organization on a co-operative basis. Communications have been entered into with him.

ACTOR PREPARES FOR DEATH.

James McDermott, Dying of Consumption in Hospital, Orders His Coffin and Arranges for Funeral.

As the result of a cold contracted while playing the part of one of the Three Musketeers with James O'Neill in Montreal two years ago, James McDermott, for a quarter of a century an actor connected with various road companies, is dying of consumption in St. Joseph's Hospital, One Hundred and Forty-third Street and St. Ann's Avenue. The patient is resigned to his fate, and does not expect to live more than ten days at the most. He has left a will and explicit instructions that his funeral shall not cost more than $125.

McDermott, who is fifty-six years old, was taken from the home of his sister to the hospital several months ago, and has been gradually sinking ever since. From a man of 240 pounds he has fallen away to 150 pounds. Several days ago he sent for Lawyer Kelly of 211 Alexander Avenue and ordered him to draw up his will, in which he directed that the $2,500 accruing from his life insurance policy shall be distributed among his sisters and St. Joseph's Hospital, the institution to receive $1,000. A couple of days ago McDermott called in Undertaker James Hynes of 873 Willis Avenue and discussed with him the details of his funeral with the greatest frankness, ordering the kind of casket he wanted, and making provision for the care and comfort of his friends who would accompany his body to its last resting place.

According to his own statement he caught cold on the last night of James O'Neill's engagement two years ago. After each act the stage doors were opened to remove the scenery, and he, standing in the wings, lightly clad, contracted the cold which has brought him to his death bed.

Pianist Leopold Godowsky Arrives.

Leopold Godowsky, the Russian pianist, arrived in New York on the American liner St. Louis yesterday. He is to make a transcontinental tour, beginning Feb. 3. He has recently toured France and Germany, and his success in those countries is said to have been very pronounced.

Obituary Notes.

SAMUEL B. KIRBY, aged sixty, a banker, of Marietta, Ohio, died at his home yesterday.

ISAAC MAY, Sr., a retired coal operator, died yesterday at his home, in Shamokin, Penn., aged eighty-two years.

FRANK J. PHILBRICK, proprietor of the Farragut House, at Rye Beach, N. H., died yesterday at his home, aged fifty-one years. He is survived by a widow. He was a native of Rye and had been in the hotel business for many years.

JOHN GILCHRIST, the head of the dry goods firm of Gilchrist & Co. of Boston, died Saturday night at his home in Roxbury. He was born in Scotland forty-nine years ago, and came to this country when nineteen years of age, locating in Boston.

E. S. GARDNER, one of the most successful breeders of running horses in this country, is dead at Avondale, Tenn. He owned Quicklime, Ida Pickwick, Bangle, and other well-known racers. The funeral will take place to-morrow.

Gen. LEONARD A. DICKINSON died of paralysis at his home, in Hartford, Conn., yesterday, after an illness of seven weeks. He was formerly Postmaster of the city and prominent in the fire insurance business, having been local agent for the Aetna Insurance Company for many years. At his death he was Treasurer of the Soldiers' Home, at Noroton, and greatly interested in its welfare. He served in the Twelfth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers. He was born in New Haven in 1826.

WILLIAM KLOTTE of 9 Spencer Place, Brooklyn, died Saturday night at his home, in the forty-fourth year of his age. Mr. Klotte was born in England. He went to Jamaica when a young man and became a correspondent for the Belmont banking firm. While in the West Indies he gained the friendship of President Hippolyte of the Haitian Republic, and was appointed by him Vice Consul to the United States. He filled that office up to two years ago, his business interests in this country being with a number of American houses.

CHARLES J. EVERETT, an advertising man connected with F. H. Leggett & Co., died of pneumonia at his home, 110 St. Nicholas Avenue, on Saturday night. Mr. Everett was born in this city sixty-four years ago. He learned the trade of a machinist in the Detroit locomotive shops. Afterward he was associated with Theodore B. Starr, the jeweler. Mr. Everett organized the New York Rendering Company and also the Pond Manufacturing Company of Tenafly, N. J., the business of the latter firm being to reclaim scrub rubber. He was a resident of Tenafly for thirty-two years, being for six years Assessor of the borough.

OSCAR FRISBIE, who died at his home, 261 McDonough Street, Brooklyn, Friday night, was born at Willsborough, N. Y., in 1831. He was educated at the Bakersfield (Vt.) Academy and the University of Vermont, being graduated in 1856. He studied law at Albany Law School, and after his admission to the bar came to this city, where he had been in practice ever since. Mr. Frisbie was at one time a member of the Brooklyn Board of Education, and had been a member of the Union League Club of Brooklyn and the Long Island Historical Society. He was a member of the John D. Willard Lodge, F. and A. M.

MOUNT SINAI HOSPITAL

Annual Reports Show Increased Prosperity and Progress.

Awards Made for New Buildings—Large Donations to the Funds—Officers for the Current Year.

Congratulations were freely indulged in at the annual meeting of the Mount Sinai Hospital yesterday, the reports presented giving evidence of increased prosperity and progress. The meeting was held in the dispensary building, 149 East Sixty-seventh Street, and was largely attended.

The following officers and Directors were re-elected: President—Isaac Wallach; Vice President—Isaac Stern; Treasurer—E. Asiel; Secretary—Louis M. Josephthal; Directors, for the term of four years—Isaac Blumenthal, Louis Stix, Isaac N. Heidelberg, Adolph Herrmann, and David Wile.

A supplementary report presented by the Building Committee announced that the awards for the new buildings at One Hundred and First Street and Madison Avenue had been made, and that the work would go on speedily. It was learned that of the $1,650,000 required all but $300,000 had been secured up to two weeks ago. Since that time the Board of Directors has subscribed $75,000, leaving only $225,000 lacking, which, it is thought, will be readily secured.

Isaac Wallach, the President, presented the annual report.

The statistics of the hospital showed that the total number of patients treated during the year was 3,352. Of that number 1,963 were discharged cured. Accident cases treated, not included in the above, were 502. The percentage of patients treated gratuitously was 80.60. In the dispensary there were 80,431 consultations, and 77,663 prescriptions were filled. Two hundred and fifty-three patients were treated in the outdoor department.

The total expenses of the hospital and dispensary were $136,271.31. The assets include the plot of ground on One Hundredth and One Hundred and First Streets, Fifth and Madison Avenues, for the new buildings, $857,637.57, less mortgage of $80,000, $457,637.57; invested in bond and mortgage on property in City of New York, $142,000; cash in hands of Treasurer, $19,238.09; total, $809,925.66. Also $5,000 in bonds of the Hebrew Benevolent and Orphan Asylum Society, $500 in bonds of the Freundschaft Club, and the hospital and dispensary buildings in use, free from incumbrances; $603,914.31 is held in trust for the building fund. The total receipts for the fiscal year were $138,-650.61, and the disbursements were $135,-272.31, leaving an excess for the support account of $1,264.33.

With regard to the new hospital buildings Mr. Wallach said:

"It has been and is our aim to push this great work with all possible vigor to an early conclusion. The buildings will be begun immediately after the estimates upon the new specifications are accepted. The modifications of our plans and the lower cost of materials at the present time will enable us with some additional aid from our friends to complete a work the fruition of which will be a pride to our city and a glory to our people."

The entire subscriptions to the building fund aggregate the sum of $1,190,831.76. The family of the late Meyer Lehman gave $75,000 and will add as much more as may be required for the dispensary building. Henry L. Einstein has dedicated the children's pavilion, giving $125,000 for its erection. The private hospital will be dedicated in perpetuity to the memory of Barbara Guggenheim for which purpose $200,000 was subscribed by Meyer Guggenheim and his sons. Benjamin Stern has subscribed $20,000 for the equipment of the main operating room, in memory of the late Bernard Stern, and Adolph Lewisohn gives $50,000 and as much more as is necessary for the pathological building. In addition he has offered to equip and maintain that department. Six perpetual beds were dedicated during the year. Legacies and bequests to the amount of $14,771.29, and donations of $6,078.97 were received. The register of membership shows 3,850 annual contributors.

LUCAS A. STEINAM SCHOOL.

Plans for Hebrew Technical Institute Branch Completed.

Plans for the proposed Lucas A. Steinam School have been completed. The building will be erected at Ninth and Stuyvesant Streets, and the institution will be conducted as a part of the Hebrew Technical Institute, which furnishes technical instruction to boys, and which, although supported entirely from Hebrew sources, is non-sectarian.

The Steinam School will be devoted to metal working, and the $100,000 necessary to erect, equip, and support it was given by Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Steinam of this city as a memorial to their son, who died fifteen years ago.

DR. RODERMUND ESCAPES.

Man Who Caused Smallpox Scare Gets Away from Appleton.

APPLETON, Wis., Jan. 27.—Dr. Rodermund, the physician who, to support his theory that the disease is non-contageous, deliberately exposed himself to the smallpox contagion in this city, broke quarantinetine Saturday evening about 7 o'clock, eluded four officers, and, aided by H. W. Rathbun, Principal of the Appleton School of Business, drove forty miles to Waupaca and boarded a train to Chicago.

Rathbun returned here to-day, was arrested and put in the pest house.

HENRY F. HALL ARRESTED.

Acted Suspiciously at a Railroad Station in Trenton, N. J.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 27.—A man claiming to be Henry Franklin Hall, residing at the Murray Hill Hotel, in New York, was arrested here late on Saturday night while acting suspiciously at the Clinton Avenue Station. He said he had been put off a train because he could not find his ticket among the papers in his pockets. He said he was on his way to Norfolk, Va., to settle up an estate.

At the Murray Hill Hotel last night it was said that Mr. Hall is a lawyer, who came to this city from Connecticut. He left the hotel last May. It was also said that he was very eccentric.

National Salt Company Trust Certificates.

Issued by the American Trust Company of Cleveland, Ohio, incident to the purchase of the United Salt Company.
Total issue $2,500,000, divided equally in Preferred and Common Stocks.
Dividends guaranteed for three and one-half years at the rate of seven per cent. per annum on the Preferred and ten per cent. per annum on the Common Stock.
The Common Stock Trust Certificates given as a bonus to purchasers of the Preferred Trust Certificates, making the return equivalent to seventeen per cent. per annum.

The National Salt Company of New Jersey acquired the United Salt Company of Ohio in the Fall of 1899, and in payment deposited with the American Trust Company of Cleveland, Ohio, its own stock to the amount of $2,500,000, half of the amount in Preferred Stock and half in Common Stock.
The Stock of the United Salt Company was endorsed in blank, and also deposited with the American Trust Company at the same time.
The American Trust Company issued its Certificates representing the Preferred and Commen Stocks of the National Salt Company held by it.
To each trust certificate representing 100 shares of the Preferred Stock is attached a certificate of indebtedness of the National Salt Co. for $2,450, and to each Trust Certificate representing 100 shares of the Common Stock is attached a certificate of indebtedness of the National Salt Company for $3,500.00. These Certificates of indebtedness are payable semi-annually so as to provide half yearly dividends on the Preferred Stock Certificates of three and one-half per cent., and on the Common Stock Certificates of five per cent. The dividends are payable in January and July of each year until 1904, when the Trust Certificates are redeemable in the regular Preferred and Common Stocks of the National Salt Co.
The purpose of the agreement was to insure the payment of dividends on the stock in question during the formative period of the Company. The Company is already paying dividends on both classes of its stock, and there is every reason to believe that it will continue to do so indefinitely.
The stock of the United Salt Company was deposited as security for the Certificates of indebtedness. In case of default in any semi-annual payment of the certificates of indebtedness the remaining indebtedness becomes due at once, and the Trust Company is empowered to sell the stock of the United Salt Company to provide funds to meet the payment of all such certificates in full.
The United Salt Company is one of the most valuable items in the Assets of the National Salt Company. There are no bonds or other liens upon the property of the National Salt Company.

We offer a limited amount of the above described Preferred Trust Certificates at 115, and to each purchaser will be given as a bonus an equal amount in the Common Stock Trust Certificates.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

After several weeks of heaviness the stock market in the closing days of last week took on a tone of decided strength—strength, so expert testimony runs, that is likely to be continued now for some time to come. The market in the days of its recent heaviness went through a process of liquidation only natural after the sustained rise following election. Prices dropped all through the list, in some cases and even in standard stocks, not unsubstantially. It was, however, merely in the nature of a "house-cleaning," and the market is the better for it. Weak holders have been shaken out; accounts, built on the pyramid system, no longer threaten. More: the reaction has enabled the larger interests on the market—men who deal in securities not for a turn of a point or two, but for more enduring results—to accumulate a fresh line of stocks at the lower level of prices.

One clearly developing fact is that the plans and projects of the leading banking interests still are under way, still are being developed toward their final completion. The action of St. Paul stock, on Saturday, for example, is highly suggestive of this. That deal, never abandoned, is likely soon to be perfected. And as in St. Paul, so in the Vanderbilt group, so in the Morgan stocks, are far-reaching developments pending.

More gold exports are predicted, but with call money down to 1¾ per cent., time money relatively as easy, and large gains in cash being shown each week by the banks, it is clear that these exports can well be spared.

IRON STOCKS BENEFITED.

Improvement in iron and steel trade conditions shows not only in the better demand and advancing prices for product, but in the relations between those important financial interests which have been credited with a disposition to engage in corporation feuds. Announcements may now be expected of co-operation between conspicuous properties, and in some quarters actual amalgamation.
Tennessee Coal has gained advantages.
Colorado Fuel and Iron is to benefit by pending developments, whose sequel will be 4 or 5 per cent. dividends on the common stock.

SIGNS OF IMPROVEMENT.

We believe conditions are adjusting themselves for another rise, which will top previous prices. The traffic returns of the third week are marvelous showings, compared with the big earnings of a year ago. It is such material prosperity which is bound to sustain and increase railroad prices. The enormous bond sales at rising prices are significant. Southern Pacific, in a weak market, has been uniformly strong, and looks as if it may soon start on its long-expected advance.
JOHN MUIR & CO.

GERMAN MONEY AND TRADE.

BERLIN, Jan. 27.—The news of the death of Queen Victoria affected the German Boerses only slightly, although some realization selling was caused in consequence of the closing of the London Stock Exchange. The stagnation of the previous weeks continued, the only department showing any life last week being the domestic Government funds. In this department the growing abundance of money and the success of the Saxon loan, together with the increasing distrust in industrials and American securities, caused lively buying, and the week was the best these funds had seen for months. Imperial and Prussian 3s rose more than 1 per cent. on the week.
The preference of the public for Government securities is growing, and it affects also the market for American railroad shares. The Frankfurter Zeitung reports much selling of Americans at Frankfort for investment in Government 3s, and it continues to warn the public against buying Americans at the present prices. On the Berlin Boerse, Americans vacillated sharply during the week, the German public continuing to sell.
Foreign railroad bonds showed an increased demand, but Germany continues to sell Italian and Swiss railroad shares, while the Swiss market buys Swiss railroad shares here continuously.
These movements caused large arrivals of foreign money, for which there was little demand, increasing the ease of the money market and depressing the private rate of discount to 3⅛, yesterday's fall being one-fourth of 1 per cent. Such a heavy fall is not usual in the middle of the monthly settlement, but the settlement shows uncommonly light engagements and is passing off most smoothly.
The Reichsbank return published yesterday shows a strong recovery, but, contrary to the expectation of the market, the Central Committee of the bank has decided not to change the official rate of discount. At yesterday's meeting Herr Koch, President of the Reichsbank, pointed out that the Bank of England maintained a 5 per cent. rate.
"The emission of business here," he said, "is very active, the political situation is not fully cleared up, foreign exchange is rather high, even above the gold point, and caution, therefore, demands the maintenance of 5 per cent."
The market, however, believes that a reduction will come by Feb. 10, or earlier if the Bank of England reduces its rate.
Navigation shares were weak, upon the conviction that increases in capital will be made at an early day. Bank stock was strong, upon rumors of better results for 1900 than had been expected, particularly in the management of the Disconto-Gesellschaft Bank.
Iron and coal shares were rather strong early in the week, but they fell off later upon the publication of the December reports of the coal companies, showing reduced profits. Other depressing factors were reports of impending reductions in the price of coal and of slackened production.
The Silesian pig iron dealers are trying to organize a syndicate to check price declines.

Nail and Wire Mills to Start Up.

NEW CASTLE, Penn., Jan. 27.—The nail, wire, and rod mills of this city controlled by the American Steel and Wire Company have received orders to resume work as soon as possible, and a force of men was put to work yesterday getting the three plants in readiness for the resumption of operations. Over 800 men are employed in the three concerns, which have been idle since the middle of last April.

BURNTON, GEORGE D.—The People of the State of New York, by the grace of God free and independent, to JOHN W. BURNTON, Albert Burnton, Rachel Burnton, Alice Corey, Maria E. Kent, Harriot Uchtmann, Lillian Lippencott, Emma Schontag, Theodore Burnton, Ella Gray, Eben Albert Burnton, Laura B. Gillett, John Woodruff Burnton, Carroll R. Burnton, Harriot B. Wheelihan, Emma E. Tooker, Maurice E. Burnton, the only heirs and next of kin of GEORGE D. BURNTON, deceased, send greeting:

Whereas, Frank B. Corey of Passaic, New Jersey, and Gurdon S. Buck, the latter of the City of New York, have lately applied to the Surrogates' Court of our County of New York, to have a certain instrument in writing relating to both real and personal property, duly proved as the last will and testament of the said George D. Burnton, late of the County of New York, deceased, therefore, you and each of you are cited to appear before the Surrogate of our County of New York, at his office in the County of New York, on the 20th day of February, One Thousand Nine Hundred and One, at half-past ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to attend the probate of the said last will and testament.

And each of you as are hereby cited, as are under the age of twenty-one years, are required to appear by your guardian, if you have one, or if you have none, to appear and apply for one to be appointed, or in the event of your neglect or failure to do so, a guardian will be appointed by the Surrogate to represent and act for you in the proceeding.

In testimony whereof, we have caused the seal of the Surrogates' Court of the said County of New York to be hereunto [L. S.] affixed. Witness, Hon. Abner C. Thomas, a Surrogate of our said County of New York, at said County, the 26th day of December, in the year of our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred.

ALL ANTI-TAMMANY FORCES MAY COMBINE

Republican Leaders Ready to Support Non-Partisan for Mayor.

Senator Platt Favors John D. Crimmins —Ex-Secretary Fairchild and ex-Mayor Gilroy Also Spoken Of.

The coming municipal campaign, in the opinion of politicians, will be one of the most interesting contests in the annals of politics. Although the election does not occur until next November, anti-Tammany material is being generally discussed. The impression seems to prevail that all the forces opposed to Tammany Hall will act in thorough harmony that the Republicans and Independent Democrats will take the initiative and that the Citizens' Union and similar organizations will follow in their wake.

The majority of the local leaders of the Republican machine express the belief that a Democrat of independence and integrity who is opposed to Tammany should be made the fusion candidate. John D. Crimmins, ex-Mayor Thomas F. Gilroy, and ex-Secretary Charles S. Fairchild have thus far been suggested by Republican leaders. There is little or no talk of Seth Low this year. Senator Platt has referred to him, but his preference at this time is Mr. Crimmins.

Republican leaders have been interviewed with regard to the Mayoralty nomination by NEW YORK TIMES reporters, and the following are the statements of some of them:

SENATOR PLATT—The Republican organization is very anxious to defeat Mr. Croker and will aid any non-partisan movement that will bring about such a result. If Seth Low is the best and strongest candidate we can get, then I would be in favor of Mr. Low. But there is a Democrat in New York City who possesses many elements of strength, who is a man of high character, who has fought Mr. Croker, and who, in the judgment of many men, would make an excellent Mayor. I refer to John D. Crimmins. On a fusion non-partisan ticket, Mr. Crimmins is being thought of very seriously by Republicans, as well as by Democrats of an independent character.

LEMUEL E. QUIGG—I believe the policy of the Republican Party in the coming municipal campaign will be to support that man who appears to have the confidence of the independents and independent Democrats, whether he be a Republican in National politics or a Democrat. The campaign against Tammany Hall will be conducted upon the distinct understanding that the coalition candidate shall administer the city's affairs, if elected, upon an absolutely non-partisan basis. Existing conditions are entirely dissimilar to those of 1897. Independents and Republicans understand that this is a contest to elect a Mayor and to leave him free when elected to conduct the public business without political agreements or understandings. The independents believe in the sincerity of the Republicans. I do not believe that any man who actively seeks the nomination can hope to be nominated.

Collector GEORGE R. BIDWELL—I fully concur in the views expressed by Mr. Quigg. I believe, too, that the fusion candidate will be elected.

GEORGE W. WANAMAKER—The fusion nominee should be an honest, fair, independent man, one who is fair all along the line all the time. Present indications are opposed to the selection of an organization Republican. But conditions may change.

EDWARD H. HEALY—I am in favor of any one who can beat Tammany. In our clubroom the other night there was a decided preference among the members for Charles S. Fairchild. It is going to be a hot fight, and I think Tammany will be knocked out.

FREDERICK HALDY.—There is quite a sentiment in the Third District for Charles S. Fairchild. There is plenty of good material, and I guess all the anti-Tammany forces will be able to agree upon somebody who will be elected.

ABRAHAM GRUBER—First of all the fusion nominee for Mayor must be a man of independence who is thoroughly conversant with the affairs of the city and who understands what is going on in all parts of it. The fact has been emphasized that the nominee should also be versed in political matters. In my opinion ex-Mayor Thomas F. Gilroy would be an excellent candidate.

CAPT. F. NORTON GODDARD—Tammany must be ousted from power, and I favor the nomination of any man who can bring about such a result, regardless of his political belief. I understand that Senator Platt is very favorably disposed toward John D. Crimmins. He is a very good man. I think that George L. Rives of the Charter Revision Commission or ex-Judge W. M. K. Olcott could win.

WILLIAM H. TEN EYCK—I have no personal choice, but if a Republican can be elected, then I am for a Republican. But there is plenty of time yet to find a candidate. Republicans will support the organization in any suggestions it may make.

FREDERICK S. GIBBS—It is too early to talk about candidates. But I am confident there will be a harmonious union of all anti-Tammany forces. It is not for the Republicans to present a candidate for Mayor. Let others do that. Everything will come out all right.

POSTMASTER CORNELIUS VAN COTT—I have heard many names discussed, and any one who has the backing of the organization, regardless of his politics, is good enough for me. We must have a candidate who can divide the Tammany vote, and there are plenty of such men. The right one will be found at the proper time. I believe the time is ripe to bring about the defeat of Tammany, but it will not be any child's play.

JOHN REISENWEBER—I have not given the subject of the Mayoralty nomination much thought. It is too early, in my opinion, to discuss candidates. Still, there seems to be a very general idea that there will be a concert of action of all forces opposed to Tammany Hall.

MOSES M. McKEE—I can't say that I have any personal choice, but I am for any one we can win with, and I don't think such a man is going to be so hard to find.

It will be noticed that none of the district leaders considered Controller Bird S. Coler as an anti-Tammany candidate. Among Republican politicians the belief is increasing that Tammany Hall will nominate Mr. Coler as its candidate for Mayor.

The City Central Committee of the Citizens' Union will meet to-night, when one of its acts will be the appointment of a Committee of Seventy to discuss Mayoralty material. The committee will also enlarge its membership and provide for a City Convention in April, at which a platform will be adopted.

JOHN FOX, JR., RETURNS.

Accompanied by His Wife, He Arrives from Europe on the Minnehaha.

John Fox, Jr., son of the President of the Democratic Club, returned to this country yesterday on the Atlantic Transport liner Minnehaha from London. He was accompanied by his wife, who is a daughter of the late Douglas Levien, a well-known editor of this city for many years.

Some weeks ago there were published statements to the effect that young Mr. Fox and his wife had quarreled, that he had abandoned her in foreign parts, and that he had been lost, as far as his family was concerned, for a long time. When Mr. Fox was asked about these reports last night, he replied: "I do not care to say anything about that just now, but will do so later." In answer to a question as to the dissolution of partnership between himself and Nicholas Engel, on which there was much comment last year, he said:

"It is true that Mr. Engel was ahead of me in taking legal action to dissolve the partnership, but before he did that I had informed him that I wished the firm broken up. I took the necessary steps while in London to vest a power of attorney in a friend of mine over here, so that he might represent me in taking action to dissolve the partnership. But my partner had the advantage of me, as I was across the ocean, so he made it appear that he was the one who first wanted the separation."

The Foxes were married at Long Branch in 1895. In 1899 the couple went across the ocean together. Later Mrs. Fox returned alone. During the latter part of last month she went across again, and it was just after this last departure that the stories relative to the allegsd quarrel of the two appeared, as well as the statement that Mr. Fox had disappeared from human ken.

BURGLARS MAKE SECOND CALL.

Frank Johnson Chased Thieves Away the Night Previous, but They Returned and Looted the Apartment.

It became known yesterday that the home of Frank Johnson, chief accountant of the Custom House, who lives at 64 Herkimer Street, Brooklyn, had been looted by burglars on Friday night last, and $500 worth of jewelry stolen. One extraordinary feature of the robbery was that it had been attempted the night before, presumably by the same burglars, one of whom was surprised in the kitchen by Mr. Johnson, but made his escape.

Mr. Johnson lives with his wife and son, Frank Johnson, Jr., on the second floor of an apartment house. Mr. Johnson attended a meeting of a society of which he is a member on Thursday night, and returned home about 11 o'clock. He found his wife, who was at home alone, in a badly frightened state. Mrs. Johnson told her husband that she thought she had heard some one moving about in the kitchen in the rear. Mr. Johnson went into the kitchen, and saw a man getting out through a window. He rushed toward the fellow, but the thief dropped to the ground, a distance of sixteen feet, and scaling the fence, disappeared. Realizing the uselessness of pursuit under the circumstances, Mr. Johnson did not attempt to follow the thief. As no ladder was in evidence outside the window, Mr. Johnson concluded that the burglar must have come down from above on the fire-escape. He thought it probable that the thief had made his way over the roofs from some nearby house.

Mr. Johnson nailed up the window by the fire-escape, although he hardly expected to receive another visit from the thief. On Friday night, with his wife, he attended a euchre party at the home of a friend. The son was also out during the evening. The three reached home together about midnight. They found that during their absence burglars had entered the place and leisurely ransacked the rooms. The thieves had paused in their work to enjoy themselves at the expense of Mr. Johnson. On the centre table in the parlor was a box of Mr. Johnson's cigars, half of the cigars being gone. The thieves had reclined comfortably in easy chairs and smoked several cigars each, the stubs of which lay on the silk table cover, which had been burned in a number of places.

On the floor of the room were two bundles, one of which contained clothing belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, and the other a quantity of silverware. A search of the rooms showed that the thieves had carried off about $500 worth of jewelry. It is believed that the thieves were frightened away by hearing some one coming up the stairs, and fled without taking the rest of their booty with them.

The younger Mr. Johnson, thinking the thieves might still be in the neighborhood, ran out and searched about in the near-by streets. In Herkimer Place, in the rear, he come upon a man who he thought was acting suspiciously, and grabbed hold of him. The man resisted, but Johnson drew a revolver which he had brought with him and compelled the man to return to the Johnson apartments with him.

Mr. Johnson, the elder, in the meantime had summoned the police. The younger Mr. Johnson's prisoner was turned over to them, and he was taken to the Grand Avenue Station. There, however, he proved his innocence of any connection with the burglary and was allowed to go. The police have not yet gained any trace of the thieves or of the stolen property. In a pocketbook taken by the robbers was a key to the apartments, and Mr. Johnson fears that the possession of this may encourage them to pay him a third visit.

BURGLARS IN TREMONT.

Houses and Stores Robbed, but No Arrests Made.

From the number of burglaries which have occurred during the past week it is evident that Tremont, in the Borough of the Bronx, is being worked by a gang of clever thieves. Not a day goes by but one or more cases are reported to the police. Several nights ago Daniel Lippman's cigar store, which is only a short block from the Tremont Police Station, was robbed without the police knowing anything about it. The place was broken into and ransacked from top to bottom. In all about $100 worth of cigars, pipes, and smokers' articles were carried off.

John Hannon's hardware store, at One Hundred and Seventy-fifth Street and Park Avenue, was broken into Thursday, and $75 worth of goods carried off, including a small stove. The same afternoon the residence of James Thomas, at Ash Street and Anthony Avenue, was entered by burglars. There was nobody at home, and they ransacked the house, taking away with them about $300 worth of jewelry, silverware, clothing, and other valuables.

Only about a month ago Miss Slater of One Hundred and Seventy-third Street and Vanderbilt Avenue was bound, gagged, and robbed in her own house, and there are other equally daring cases on record, but as yet no arrests have been made by the police.

House Robbed at New Durham, N. J.

Charles K. Hunter, Superintendent of the Peerless Rubber Company, at New Durham, Hudson County, N. J., notified the authorities of that place yesterday that his residence had been ransacked by thieves some time on Saturday night and that $2,000 worth of plate and jewelry had been taken. Mr. Hunter and his family were at Old Point Comfort. The house was closed up, and yesterday morning one of the employes at the factory, noticing an open window, made an investigation, and as a result telegraphed to Mr. Hunter.

SAYS HE WAS ROBBED.

A Railroad Man Declares He Was Badly Treated in Cryan's Saloon.

Thomas J. Cryan, proprietor of the saloon at 2,485 Second Avenue, was held in in $1,000 bail for alleged violation of the excise laws in the Harlem Court yesterday, while his nephew, Patrick Cryan, who was employed in his saloon, was held in $5,000 bail on a charge of robbery and an additional $1,000 for excise violation. The complainant was Daniel McLaughlin, who is the station agent at Simsbury, Conn., on the line of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Road.

McLaughlin's story, as told to Magistrate Zeller, was that he arrived in Harlem on Saturday afternoon to attend the annual celebration of the Trainmen's Protective Association, which was taking place at Sulzer's Harlem River Park.

Leaving the celebration early yesterday morning he visited Cryan's saloon. It was about 3 o'clock when he entered the place, he said. He had not been there more than a minute when several men who were standing at the bar stripped him of his waistcoat containing, he said, a gold watch and chain, $27 in cash, a draft for $1,200, and several railroad passes. Not satisfied with that McLaughlin said the men turned his trousers pockets inside out and relieved him of all his small change and several trinkets.

Proprietor Cryan was in court when his nephew's case came up, but left, seeming to scent trouble. Detective Buckridge caught him a short distance away. He was very indignant when arraigned, but calmed down under the vigorous denunciation of the Court. He was able to furnish bail, but his nephew was paroled in the custody of Detective Buckridge.

VALET ROBBED HIS MASTER.

Letter Sent to Mr. Lohmann Contained Pawn Tickets for Missing Articles.

William Schliamann, twenty-four years old, was arrested yesterday morning at Mills Hotel No. 1 by Central Office detectives on complaint of William Lohmann of 122 West Seventy-fourth Street, who accused him of stealing jewelry valued at $300. Schlismann was engaged by Mr. Lohmann a week ago as valet. On Thursday afternoon he obtained leave of absence for a few hours. He did not return. Then Mr. Lohmann missed his gold watch, but Schlismann was not suspected until an envelope filled with pawn tickets and addressed to Mr. Lohmann was received by him. Who sent the tickets is not yet known, but investigation showed that many small articles of jewelry were missing.

In the West Side Court yesterday morning Schlismann admitted that he had taken the small articles, which had been pawned, but denied that he knew the whereabouts of the more valuable jewelry. He waived examination, and Magistrate Hogan held him in $2,000 bail for trial.

GERMAN FACTIONS IN KINGS

Citizens' League Meeting Nearly Ends in a Riot.

Willoughby Street Men Secede and Form the "German-American Democracy"—League to Fight Tammany.

The attempt of the Willoughby Street organization to capture the German-American Citizens' League of Kings County, elect County Clerk Paul Huberty President, and thwart the reform movement started by Otto Kempner, almost precipitated a riot yesterday afternoon at a meeting in Schwaben Hall. The opposing forces, after leaving the meeting, went to another part of the hall, where they organized the German-American Democracy of Kings County.

Before the meeting of delegates of the league was called together John Feierabend, the Secretary, attempted to keep out of the room men he thought had no right to be there. Among them was Fritz Weidner, a regularly elected delegate. The Secretary narrowly escaped being mobbed. When the meeting began the followers of Huberty constantly interrupted Feierabend while he was reading a new constitution for the league, in which were the following clauses:

1. The separation of municipal from State and National elections.
2. Home rule and freedom from legislative interference in local affairs.
3. Opposition to trusts and monopolies and their subjection to a rigid supervision and control by State authority.
4. Municipal ownership of public franchises, such as railroads, ferries, water supply, lighting, &c.
5. A just system of taxation with a view of lightening the burden resting on labor and the small storekeeper.
6. Government by the people through a system of direct nominations by the voters, instead of the present rule of irresponsible cliques.
7. An honest enforcement of the civil service laws.
8. Economy and honesty in the administration of public affairs.
9. The nomination of candidates whose character and antecedents guarantee a discharge of their public duties in consonance with the principles herein enumerated.

The Huberty men opposed the sixth clause, because it was a dig at Willoughby Street, and, owing to the interuption, Secretary Feierabend was unable to proceed. When Huberty and his followers found that they could get no recognition, they quitted the hall and went into another room, where they organized the German-American Democracy of Kings County. The meeting of the league was then carried on. The constitution was adopted and these officers elected: President—Otto Kempner; First Vice President—Gustav Schweppendick; Second Vice President—Joseph Freumann; Third Vice President—Richard Buettner; Secretary—John Feierabend; Recording Secretary—William Welskopf.

After the election of the officers, President Kempner spoke, in part, as follows:

"The election of a Mayor and of other city and county officials to take the places filled at present by representatives of the Tammany Hall and Willoughby Street Democracy is arousing unusual interest. Preparations for the great battle to be waged next November are now being made by a variety of organizations. It will soon be necessary for us to determine on what side of the political line we will take our position.

"As citizens, we must confess that our Municipal Government has been weak, inefficient, and corrupt. High officials have devoted their energies to self-enrichment through Ice Trust, speculations and similar enterprises, while the city's interests were treated with indifference and neglect. Never in the history of any civilized community has the police force been so brazenly dishonest as during Mayor Van Wyck's administration. The police, the paid protectors of law and order, have maintained an outlaw's license bureau at Police Headquarters. Licenses were issued to every conceivable style and grade of crooks to ply their criminal callings on payment of hush money. New York has become the modern Mecca for profesional lawbreakers. The vicious classes have held high carnival in the metropolis of America by special invitation and protection of the public guardians of law.

"English-speaking citizens advocating principles similar to ours have formed a Citizens' Union. They will fight for clean and independent candidates, and be opposed by partisan hacks and trapper officials. This is exactly the course we will have to pursue. Of course, we will await the nomination of a ticket before we decide whom we can support, but the chances are that we will be satisfied with the candidates of the combined independent organizations, and will eventually join our forces in a grand movement for the overthrow of rotten boss rule in New York and Kings Counties. No respectable German-American voter can afford to stand for Tammany's guilty record, and the equally shameful record of Tammany's counterpart in Brooklyn."

The Huberty faction after speeches denouncing Mr. Kempner elected these officers: President—Peter P. Huberty; First Vice President—Louis Melke; Second Vice President—August Schmidt; Third Vice President—Joseph Ruppert; Recording Secretary—Julius Gottschalk; Treasurer—Fritz Weidner. A committee of five was appointed to draw up a Constitution for the new organization.

DANCE HALL MEN DISCHARGED.

Police Fail to Make a Case Against Up-Town Resorts.

Louis Waldron, one of the proprietors of "Waldron's" hotel and dance hall, on West One Hundred and Tenth Street, and Ernest Rorphuro, manager of the Parkway Hotel, at 2,839 Broadway, were arraigned before Magistrate Hogan in the West Side Court yeaterday morning, charged with violating Section 277 of the Penal Code by permitting dancing in their places after 12 o'clock Saturday night.

Waldron had already been arrested on the charge and Magistrate Hogan will render a decision in the original case next Saturday. The police, deciding not to wait for the decision, arrested Waldron a second time at 12:30 yesterday morning. Lawyer Levenson, counsel for Waldron, gave to the Magistrate last Saturday a brief, in which he quoted numerous authorities to the effect that public dancing is a "pastime," and is permissible on Sunday, as long as it does not take the nature of a performance or exhibition.

Magistrate Hogan dismissed the complaints against both men yesterday, holding that Section 277 of the Penal Code relating to theatrical shows and performances had not been violated.

MAY JOIN LABOR FEDERATION.

Question of Applying for a Charter Considered by Central Federated Union.

The Central Federated Union, the only central labor body in America which, it is alleged, is not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, decided at the meeting yesterday to leave the question of aplying to the federation for a charter to the affiliated unions. This action was the result of the receipt of a letter from President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor on the subject, in which the writer stated that Knights of Labor would receive as fair play as the open unions in the federation. The decision of the central body was only reached, however, after a bitter discussion, in which President Gompers was handled a little roughly.

The first to object was James P. Archibald of the Paper Hangers' Union, because Gompers in his letter advised the paper hangers to form one union along with the painters. Both have separate organizations in this city.

"Every time we had anything to do with the painters," said Delegate Archibald, "it meant the lowering of wages for us. Ten years ago paper hangers earned 50 per cent. more than they are doing now. Then painters took up the work of paper hanging and pulled the wages down."

Other delegates accused Gompers of organizing rival unions of trades which were on strike while the strike was going on. One or two of them said that they had hesitated long before going into the federation, and would hesitate longer.

"When I went with a committee to Mr. Gompers's office, when it was in Clinton Place, in this city, during a strike of our union for $4 a day," said Delegate Murphy of the Encaustic Tilelayers' Union, "we were treated infamously. We wanted Mr. Gompers to support our strike, but were ordered out of the office."

Others brought charges of various kinds against Gompers which fizzled out under discussion. The friends of Gompers then carried the day, to the extent of causing the question of applying to Gompers for a charter to be referred to the affiliated unions, the vote being unanimous.

The Plasterers' Union was directed to recognize the cards of the Modelers' and Wood Carvers' Unions, which it has hitherto refused to do, within two weeks or be suspended. The two delegates of the Plasterers' Union then left the hall.

ANTI-SPITTING LAW OPPOSED.

Central Labor Union to Formally Protest Against Board of Health's Warning Notice in Cars.

The Central Labor Union met yesterday at 139 East Fifty-ninth Street, which is to be its future home, and decided that instead of meeting every week it will meet on the first and third Sunday of every month from this time forward.

The delegates denounced the action of President Murphy of the Board of Health in causing a warning to be posted in all the street and elevated railroad cars, ferryboats, and public buildings that spitters were liable to a heavy fine or imprisonment for each offense. Several delegates said that, while they did not like spitting, there were circumstances under which it was unavoidable.

"In a climate like this," said Delegate Eggerman, "one man out of every three has catarrh. To keep from spitting absolutely is an impossibility."

"Why does the Board of Health not insist on the companies providing cuspidors in the cars?" queried Delegate Bourke. "That would make the violation of the law by overcrowding impossible. A man who has any natural politeness will avoid spitting if he can. Sometimes it is impossible."

Another delegate remarked that at one time cuspidors were placed in churches.

It was decided to send a protest to the Board of Health against the too rigid carrying out of the anti-spitting law and its penalties.

OUR LONDON CABLE.

FIVE PER CENT. RATE USELESS

Open Money Market in a Worse Plight Since Its Establishment than Before—The New Government Loan—Rates of Interest All Round Will Have to be Raised.

Cable Correspondence.
Copyright, 1901, The New York Times.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—Many of our dealers in credits are actually looking for a reduction in the bank rate this week. I hardly see how this can occur, but should it be advanced to over the 5 per cent. rate made at the new year it will be regarded as a fresh grievance against the present management of the Bank.

Nothing except a sentimental effect has been produced by the 5 per cent. rate. The Continental Exchanges have become slightly less unfavorable, but no rate, whether European, American, or Asiatic, has turned to the extent of enabling gold to be shipped to this country. As for our open money market, it has been in a worse plight often since the 5 per cent. rate was established than it was before, and as recently as Thursday remitted paper was discounted at a shade under 4 per cent. Except for a day or two just after the advance the market never touched 4½ per cent. for such paper, and brokers latterly have been glad enough to get 4½ per cent. On several occasions recently bankers have been buyers from the brokers at precisely the same rate as brokers themselves could secure upon bills from merchants. A kind of dead-lock therefore existed, and the market simply dragged along from day to day, doing little and wondering what was to come next.

As soon as the Queen's funeral is over, if not before, a new Government loan will be issued, but not for the £50,000,000 really needed, because the powers to create such an amount of debt do not exist. The amount may be £10,000,000, and many urge that it should be either an addition to the Khaki loan or the Goschens. If added to the war loan, and if £10,000,000 or thereabout, I hardly think the stock will sell much above 95.

It is not that we may not possess plenty of resources, but that they are all occupied, and save for the money realised by our continued sales of American railroad securities no fresh free resources of any magnitude are available. The people who subscribe for new securities in the majority of instances pawn old securities to pay for them, and in this way we have rapidly become somewhat choked up. At the same time the floating debt of the Government employs an enormous proportion of the available resources of the money market. That debt is thus the enemy of the Treasury when it wants to issue permanent stock, because the rate of interest paid on it runs from 3½ to 4 per cent. Who is going to invest in permanent stock, to yield little more than 3 per cent., when floating obligations pay so much better?

As I have often said, we have reached a time when rates of interest all round must rule higher than they have done here for many years. Last week, for instance, Liverpool City discounted £500,000 of Treasury bills, and paid 4 per cent. for the money. It could not issue a permanent loan on any acceptable terms. And so are borrowers situated all round.

Under these circumstances it is not surprising that Stock Exchange business continues unsatisfactory, all the European markets being in much the same position as ourselves. They just bump or groan along, thankful if the weeks pass without spills.

At the same time the credit position, as expressed by the Bank reserves, is stronger in most countries than it was at this time last year, Russia alone betraying weakness in a steady loss of bullion. Therefore no immediate change for the worse or better appears anywhere probable. The key of the position lies in London, and, if our market holds out against the various adverse influences now bearing upon it, the Continent will probably do likewise. New enterprises will be kept back, many immature ones will disappear, and capital in some lines will be lost, but gradually fresh accumulations and the influence of unremitting human energy may bridge over the chasms.

It all depends on London, and I wish I could look hopefully upon our immediate future. I cannot, because we drift.

This week's Stock Exchange settlement is going to be an anxious one, but not for the dealers in American rails.

ON THE LONDON EXCHANGE.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—Americans, although wabbling throughout the week, seem to have reached a condition of equilibrium Saturday, as no strong tendency either way was discoverable, and fluctuations appeared to be merely the effect of realizations, as the bulls and bears alternately took profits. What trading there was seemed to be purely professional, and the market closed strong at the best figures of the week.

Yesterday's feature was a demand for Southern Pacific, Eries, and Milwaukees, the last-named rising 4 points. Among the other increases were Illinois Central, which rose 2 points; Northern Pacific, 1½; Missouri, Kansas and Texas, 1½; New York Central and Hudson River, 1½; Wabash preferred, 1½. Several of the stocks showed advances of from ⅛ to 1¼ points.

THE MANCHESTER MARKET.

MANCHESTER, Jan. 27.—After the activity that recently characterized the market to a considerable extent, offers for India and China have become less numerous, the figures obtainable being often unequal to what the manufacturers can accept. India's slow response to the effort to raise the limits to parity with Manchester indicates a lack of confidence in future values. The lesser Eastern outlets are inactive, and there is little prospect of an early improvement.

There was some trade last week with South America and an occasional transaction with the Mediterranean ports.

Home trade made little progress. Yarns were quiet, but firm, buyers being mostly confined to the purchases necessary to cover orders.

Bank of Spain's Report.

MADRID, Jan. 27.—The report of the Bank of Spain for the week ended yesterday shows the following: Gold in hand, no change; silver in hand, increase, 2,010,000 pesetas; notes in circulation, increase, 4,088,000 pesetas.

Coming to Inspect American Railways.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The Sunday Sun says that the Cunard liner Lucania, which sailed from Liverpool for New York yesterday, has on board the Chief Engineer and other leading officials of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, who are going to inspect the railway systems of the United States with a view to improving English methods of traveling.

STATE TAX EQUALIZATION

Board Will Increase New York City's Values $150,000,000.

MUST PAY 65 PER CENT. OF TAX

Real and Personal Valuation Here Likely to be $3,866,264,412, and for Rest of State, $1,786,247,603.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—If Gov. Odell's tax bills do not pass and the direct tax is not abolished New York City will have to pay more than 65 per cent. of the entire State tax.

The State Board of Equalization, following the precedent established for the past 15 years, will increase the valuation of real and personal property in New York City by at least $150,000,000. The figures returned by the Assessors to the State Board are sent in by counties and the exact value of the city property is not obtainable, because it is not known here just what proportion of Westchester County's assessed value belongs to New York City. New York, Queens, Kings, and Richmond Counties are entirely within the boundaries of the greater city, and the assessors' returns on real and personal property for this year is distributed as follows:

County.	Real.	Personal.
New York	$2,369,997,504	$429,874,163
Kings	651,363,000	43,937,440
Queens	104,427,872	5,498,031
Richmond	42,123,924	6,204,204
Westchester (est. 1-3)	56,178,813	5,977,906
Total New York City	$3,224,712,013	$491,552,399

The total value of real and personal estate allowing that only one-third of the value of Westchester belongs in New York City, is the enormous sum of $3,740,264,412, to which the State Board, it is understood, figuring on equalization, will add $150,000,000, making it $3,866,264,412. The total value of assessed property in the entire State is $5,652,512,015, and the State outside of New York City will therefore have to pay a tax on but $1,786,247,603 of valuation.

Of this immense tax the Borough of Manhattan pays on $2,050,000,000, or more than one-half of the entire amount upon which the State tax is levied. It has always been the custom to add to New York City's valuation, and here is a table showing that has been added to what is now the Borough of Manhattan tax for the past twenty years:

1883	132,575,000	1893	67,479,938
1884	25,910,659	1894	67,962,422
1885	112,148,850	1895	40,458,738
1886	98,09[illegible],247	1896	74,315,004
1887	110,725,385	1897	88,989,103
1888	118,862,204	1898	188,753,109

The aggregate amount added to the valuation of Manhattan Borough by the State Board in the past twenty years is $2,100,472,222, or an average each year of $105,-023,611. It will thus be noticed from the table above that in the past three years very nearly $300,000,000 was arbitrarily added to the assessed valuation.

Section 173 of the Laws of 1896 provides that the State Board of Equalization shall consist of the Commissioners of the Land Office, made up of the Lieutenant Governor, Speaker of the Assembly, Secretary of State, State Controller, State Treasurer, State Engineer, the Attorney General, and the three State Tax Commissioners. The board is ordered for the purpose of examining and devising the valuation of real and personal property of the several counties as returned to the Board of Tax Commissioners, and shall fix the aggregate amount of assessment in each county upon which the Controller shall compute the State tax. Such board may increase or diminish the aggregate valuation of real property in any county by adding or deducting such sum as in its opinion may be just and necessary to produce a just relation between the valuations of real property in the State. The State tax is for the maintenance of State schools and the canals, the care of State insane, and for the payment of State officials, &c.

In 1890 the value of New York City property was $2,330,483,345, and its assessed value $1,398,290,007, or 60 per cent. of the true valuation. That year the State Board added to the assessed value $116,524,167, bringing the valuation up to 65 per cent. The average in other counties that year was only about 55 per cent. That showed a discrimination of 10 per cent. against New York city.

Concerning personal property, the showing is that New York is paying the bulk of the taxes. In 1890 the valuation of this class of property in the State was $382,-130,057. New York City paid on $220,470,-798, and the other fifty-nine counties, including Kings, Queens, Richmond, and Westchester, on only $161,688,203—that is to say, Manhattan Borough paid two-thirds of the tax. In 1897 the personal valuations in New York alone amounted to $281,489,-065, or nearly as much as the total in the entire State ten years ago.

This year the assessed valuation of personal property in Manhattan Borough is $489,874,168, or almost two-thirds of the entire personal value of the State.

In 1889 the true value of property in Chautauqua County was $51,411,027. It was assessed for $25,300,091, or a little less than 49 per cent. of its true value. From this the State Board deducted $1,807,577. That same year, under the plea that the State was taxed at only 60 per cent., over $116,-000,000 was tacked onto New York, raising it up to 65. The same year Franklin County was taxed at 53 per cent., and received a reduction of $1,072,141; Sullivan County was taxed at 51 per cent., and received a reduction of $390,222; Ulster was taxed at 47½ and allowed $2,008,270; Warren was taxed at 45, and allowed $1,317,954, and several other counties were assessed as low as 23 per cent.

TO CHASE MOONSHINERS AGAIN.

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Ky., Jan. 28.—Mail Carrier Richie arrived here to-night, bringing further news of the desperate battle of Marshal Hollifield and posse with the moonshiners on Elkhorn Creek Friday morning. Later developments show that the Marshal was not killed, but made his escape, and, with the exception of a frightful wound on his head, is uninjured. He was knocked senseless, and when Wooten and Amburgy retreated they believed him dead.

It turns out that Simon Combs was the only man killed. Wooten is wounded in the arm and leg, and one of the Newsom boys who were fighting with the moonshiners is dangerously wounded. Amburgy is unhurt, but owing to the serious wounds of Wooten they did not reach Hindman, but sent in a messenger to tell of the battle. Hollifield and Blaine Combs, who was reported captured, rode into Hindman Sunday evening just as a posse was ready to start to the scene.

The moonshiners were led by Jim Kelley, whose still the others were raiding, and after Hollifield and Combs had taken and Blaine Combs was left a prisoner, Kelley ordered his release. Kelley also went to the Marshal, who soon revived, and the two rode away.

There is general rejoicing among the officials at the good news of Hollifield's escape from death. He had been the hero of many battles, but the fight on Friday was the most desperate ever seen in the mountains. Hollifield says he will organize a posse at Hindman and capture the men who tried to murder his posse.

TO GET OIL UNDER THE SEA.

Company Forming to Sink Wells in the Gulf of Mexico, Forty-five Miles from Galveston.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Texas, Jan. 28.—The oil excitement is increasing throughout Texas. It is conservatively estimated by those who have been keeping in close touch with the movement that fully five millions of acres of prospective oil lands have been leased in different parts of the State since the great gusher near Beaumont was discovered some days ago. The demand for well-drilling rigs is unprecedented. Scores of these outfits are being shipped into the State from Pennsylvania and Indiana. There has been a big jump in land values in the numerous prospective oil districts.

Thomas Harpley, a wealthy rice grower of Louisiana, was here to-day on business in connection with the organization of a company which proposes to put down oil wells in the Gulf of Mexico, about forty-five miles from Galveston. The proposed site of these wells is known to mariners as "Oil Pool," from the fact that the surface of the Gulf at that point is covered with oil. This oil pool covers several hundred acres of water, and is a favorite harbor of refuge for coast craft in time of storm. It is the accepted theory that the oil comes from the bed of the Gulf, and the company now being organized proposes to put down wells on the spot if any anchorage can be secured for the well-drilling machinery.

The company will have a capital stock of $500,000. A number of Cleveland capitalists are associated with Mr. Harpley in the enterprise.

OWNS TRACKS, NOT RAILROAD.

Contractor Cannot Use Right of Way, Nor the Company the Rails.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 28.—As the result of a peculiar combination of circumstances J. T. Patterson of Hartford occupies the unique position of owning the rails and overhead wire for four miles of street railway, without owning the road. He has no right to run cars over his line, as that right is possessed by the Farmington Street Railway Company.

Mr. Patterson, who is a contractor, undertook to construct the Plainville and Farmington Road for the Hartford and West Hartford Railroad several years ago. He laid the rails and the wires, but the company defaulted, and was bought in by the present Farmington Street Railroad Company. The new management offered terms to the builder for his trackage, but as he had exclusive right to the rails laid and the price was not satisfactory the matter was dropped.

Since then Mr. Patterson has owned the road and the trolley company has owned the right of way. Neither could operate the line. Mr. Patterson will appear before the Legislature with a petition asking for charter rights to operate his road, and the Farmington Road will ask that such rights be denied him. The Patterson interests are backed by the Connecticut Lighting and Railway Company, and the fight for rights will be an interesting one.

NEW YORKERS' VISIT TO TEXAS.

Members of Merchants' Club to Look Into the State's Resources.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Texas, Jan. 28.—Gov. Sayers will soon set a date for the proposed committee to be appointed by the Merchants' Club of New York City to visit Texas and investigate the laws and resources of this Commonwealth with the view of encouraging investments of outside capital in this State. The business element of Texas approve of the plan and the visiting committee will be royally entertained on the occasion of the visit.

In the House of Representatives to-day John L. Little introduced a resolution which will be called up to-morrow and probably adopted unanimously. It indorses the action of the Governor and joins in the invitation. A committee of thirteen, composed of one member from each Congressional district, will be appointed to co-operate with the Governor in showing the committee the various sections of the State.

COLLEGE FRESHMAN SAVES BOYS

Pulls Them Out of a Pond After They Had Broken Through the Ice.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Jan. 28.—Arthur Smith, aged eleven, son of Mrs. Margaret Smith of this city, broke through the ice on a pond on the Rutgers College farm to-day. Edward Carpenter, a companion, aged about fourteen, saw his peril and tried to save him by holding out a strap. Young Carpenter also broke through, and both boys were struggling in the water when Maurice C. Engle, a college freshman who lives at the farm, heard their cries and, running to the rescue, got both boys safely out.

Smith had a very narrow escape and was unconscious when taken out.

PASSENGERS' NARROW ESCAPE.

Jersey Central Engine Breaks an Axle Pulling Out of Station.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Jan. 28.—Rapidly gaining speed as it was leaving the Netherwood station this afternoon at 5 o'clock, Engine 537, drawing an east-bound local passenger train on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, snapped an axle supporting two of the driving wheels.

The breaking of the axle caused the driving wheels to collapse and smash into the boiler and firebox, bringing the train to a sudden stop and throwing the passengers about in a terrifying way. All were badly frightened and shaken up, but none seriously hurt.

Engineer Shea of Somerville was in charge of the engine. Had the break occurred two minutes later when the train was under full headway there would have been a serious wreck. The accident blocked the east-bound passenger track until midnight to-night.

A CHICAGO SOCIETY INCIDENT.

Detective Takes University Professors for Burglars.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—Dignified and sedate professors in the University of Chicago are smarting under the thought that a Pinkerton detective took them for high society burglars at a recent musicale held at the home of John Morris.

Taking precautions lest some clever thief who works at musicales, balls, and other functions should gain entrance, Mr. Morris had all his valuable jewels and silver plate removed to safety deposit vaults. Then, to protect his visitors from any possible loss, he hired a Pinkerton detective to attend the function and keep his eyes open for suspicious characters. The detective arrived and silently performed his duty without the knowledge of any of the visitors.

During an intermission Profs. James, Sparks, Goodspeed, and Millspaugh were standing apart from the throng, talking quietly, when the detective, noting the low tones, approached them and said that he was "on to their game," and that they had better "hit the pike." The professors were astounded, and asked the intruder to explain himself. This he quickly did, and the incident closed.

Waded River to Catch a Train.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 28.—Cleveland Sanders, a traveling salesman from Hartford, yesterday waded across the Connecticut River to catch a train. He started to walk across the ice. Half way over he found open water, but, nothing daunted, stripped himself, tied his clothes in a bundle over his head, and waded the remainder of the way in icy water up to his neck. Residents along the river bank saw the whole proceeding.

VENEZUELANS TO OUST PRESIDENT CASTRO

Eastern District Wholly in Control of Gen. Rolando.

ANDRADE MAY BE PRESIDENT

Yacht Atalanta Purchased for Use in Aiding Castro's Flight—Actual Situation in the Republic.

It is a revolution, in fact, instead of an asphalt war that exists in Venezuela. There is also good ground for belief that the Washington authorities are well aware of the fact that the disturbances there have for their ultimate purpose the driving of President Castro from power.

It is generally understood among those familiar with Venezuelan affairs here that the purchase of the Gould yacht Atalanta by President Castro was not so much for a fighting machine as to provide himself with a means of escape when he finds he can no longer retain his position as the Chief Executive or Dictator of Venezuela. It will not be a surprise to those acquainted with the details of the revolution to learn at an early day that the Atalanta or "Restaurader," as she is now called, is reported at Curaçao or Trinidad, the usual resorts of Presidential refugees from our sister republic. Gen. Castro is said to have secured a handsome competency in the usual way, and with a speedy ex-yacht can make himself comfortable for a little while at least.

It is believed in many quarters that Gen. Ignacio Andrade, who was driven from the Presidential chair of Venezuela, and who is now at San Juan, Porto Rico, living upon his own plantations, is the coming man, and will be reinstated in the Casa Amarello (the White House of Venezuela) within a few weeks.

Says a gentleman of this city, perhaps more thoroughly conversant with affairs in Venezuela than any others, but whose name for business reasons cannot now be used: "The condition of affairs in Venezuela to-day may be summed up as follows:

"First—The so-called 'asphalt war' will be settled in the Venezuelan courts by the courts affirming their previous rulings, which were eminently proper and strictly legal, and the settlement will be made without the interference of the State Department at Washington. It may be of interest to note just here that Mr. Sullivan of the Warner-Quinlan-Sullivan syndicate, who are the owners of the asphalt mine known as 'La Felicidad,' sailed on the steamer Curacao on Saturday last for La Guayra to obtain verbally the exact status of affairs regarding the property in question, and it is fair to presume on receipt of his cablegram to 'go ahead' the machinery will be put in motion to erect a plant at Guayraquien and at once begin the shipping of asphalt.

"Second—The revolutionary forces under Gen. Nicholas Rolando have absolute control of all the eastern portion of the Republic of Venezuela, covering Ciudad Bolivar, Maturin, Guiria, Yagaraparo Guayraquien, Carupano, Camana, Guanta, and Barcelona, which Gen. Perraza, who has charge of the revolutionary forces in the west section, which includes the principal States and cities lying west of Caracas, is in full swing there, and that the State of Corobobo is being marshaled into line by prominent leaders who are bitterly opposed to Castro. To the southward smaller hands are being assembled, and all are pushing toward the objective point of Caracas.

"Third—Who is to be the choice as the successor to Castro remains unknown and undecided up to the present time, and will be a question until the leaders have massed their forces and come into closer quarters, and can hold their definite conference nearer the capital. From present indications and information Gen. Ignacio Andrade is the man to be selected. Gen. Andrade recently published a pamphlet, 'La Cuestion Autonomica' which has been widely distributed among his people and has created a profound impression. It has been a pronounced factor in the present movement for the overthrow of Gen. Cipriano Castro, whom Andrade pronounces a dictator and usurper.

"Fourth—It may be said that the massing of our men-of-war on the Venezuelan coast has nothing to do with the 'asphalt war,' but is rather a precautionary measure in view of the present unsettled and revolutionary condition of affairs in that country. There can be no question that Mr. Loomis, our Minister at Caracas, is aware of Gen. Rolando's movements and that the State Department, through him, knows of them also. American life and property are absolutely safe in Venezuela, whether it be in piping times of peace or in the hurly-burly of a revolution, and a gunboat in Venezuelan waters to protect Americans is about as useless as a penny dip would be to illuminate the Capitol dome at Washington."

BRITAIN'S OFFENDED "SUBJECTS."

"Referring to the news cables dated Port of Spain, Trinidad, on the 26th and 27th inst., it would seem that the correspondent at that place has been misinformed as to the ownership of the Island of Pato," says a New York man thoroughly informed as to that country. "It is the property of Venezuela, a fact that has never been questioned by the British Government. As to the British subjects seized and carried to Guiria, it is safe to say that they were the ordinary West Indian negro, who is in for adventure and dollars always, and doubtless if he was found among the Venezuelan revolutionists was there of his own free will and accord. This class of British subjects in that locality change their allegiance at their own sweet will, and only cry out for the protection of the crown servants when they have gotten into some difficulty from which they are unable to extricate themselves unaided. Hundreds have served in the Venezuelan Army and Navy, but up to this time no complications have arisen from such service between the two nations, and it is very doubtful if any will in the case reported—if the report be true. If it be true, the British sloop Maria Teresa was burned at Guivia last week, as reported, it was because her master and owner had knowingly violated the law of nations in carrying on contraband trade in munitions of war during the time of a rebellion.

"Port of Spain is to Venezuela in times of revolution what Nassau, Bermuda, and other British ports were to the United States during the war of the rebellion, and our naval vessels did not hesitate to sink, burn, and destroy vessels of all classes flying the British flag, or capture and imprison British subjects. Yet no serious complications arose from this legal proceedure on the part of our authorities. Port of Spain would go into bankruptcy in twelve months if smuggling by her merchants was absolutely prevented. She is a people of smugglers, born smuggling, live by smuggling, and will die smuggling. The Isle de Pato incident does not startle the people of Trinidad, and it is a question if the event will ever reach the shores of England in an official report. There is a goodly stock of arms, ammunition, and accoutrements of war in Trinidad to-day for shipment to Venezuela. They go over to the main land largely under the British flag, and if captured the shippers will charge it to the fortunes or misfortunes of war. That will end the matter so far as international complications are concerned. Those who think that the Venezuelans do not understand the code of international laws, will find themselves much mistaken in the character and intelligence of their people. It is very rarely they make any mistakes in these matters. The British merchant is a friend of both sides, whether it be the party in power or the revolutionist, for he does not know how soon the 'ins' may be 'outs,' or vice versa."

THE ISLAND OF PATO.

The Island of Pato (Goose Island) is a small, rocky islet in the Gulf of Paria, lying about two and a half miles a little westerly of south of the extreme eastern end of the Republic of Venezuela, in the territorial boundary of the State of Bermudez, and some seventeen miles west of Port of Spain, Trinidad, and about thirty miles from Guiria, which is the customs port of the district. There is no town, and but few inhabitants, on the island. It is not only Venezuelan territory, but its ownership has never been questioned by Great Britain. All of the small islands lying to the eastward of the Boca Grande (Dragon's Mouth) belong to England. Vessels bound to Guiria, Yagaraparo, Guayraquien, (the port of La Felicedad Company,) Cano Colorado, (in the district in which the New York and Bermudez Asphalt Company is situated,) and Guanoco, the seat of the asphalt war, take their departure bearings from the Island of Pato. Otherwise it is an unimportant factor in the history or geography of these waters.

SOME REVOLUTIONARY LEADERS.

Guiria is the most important place in Venezuela on the shores of the Gulf of Paria, and here is situated the Custom House of the district, originally known as the "Departimento del Marina," in the old State of Cumana. It is a town of some 5,000 inhabitants, among whom are some of the best fighting men of the republic, notably the Gen. Chame brothers, who are famous in the war history of the country and who now are among the leaders of the present revolution against Gen. Cipriano Castro. These brothers have served terms in the army, in the legislative halls of their native State, as well as being members of the National Congress, and also as Collectors of Customs and various civil offices in their native town. They are men of wealth, much intelligence, and are universally loved by their countrymen. They have been residing in exile at Trinidad since Castro came into power.

Guiria was occupied by the revolutionists on the 2d of this month by forces under Gen. Nicholas Rolando, ex-President of the State of Bermudez and ex-Minister of Agriculture under President Ignacio Andrade. Gen. Rolando was in this city not long ago, in conference with Gen. Andrade, and left here for Colombia, where he remained for some time; thence to St. Thomas, and is next heard from at Barbados, then at Trinidad. On his arrival at the latter place active steps were taken to begin the work of ousting Castro, and under his direction the minor Generals were given their instructions.

Carupano, the principal eastern port in Venezuela, on the Caribbean Sea, was occupied by the revolutionists on the 27th of December last. This place is situated in latitude 10 degrees, 40 minutes, 42 seconds north, longitude 63 degrees, 15 seconds west, and is a town of about 9,000 inhabitants, a majority of the leading men being of Corsican extraction. It is 110 miles to the westward of Port of Spain and 210 miles from La Guayra, the port of Caracas. This is fortifications at the present time, and is an open roadstead, facing due north. In olden times a Spanish two-gun battery was planted on a cliff that overlooks the town and sea, which juts out into the roadstead. The town has a surface railway running through the principal street, which is about one mile in length. A telegraph line connects it with all parts of the country. A telephone line is operated between the neighboring villages. The Dutch Line of steamers between New York and Amsterdam calls twice monthly each way. The French and English West India lines also make regular calls, as well as a Venezuelan coasting steamer, which touches there on her trips between Port of Spain and La Guayra. The harbor was surveyed in 1897 by a well-known resident of this city, and the chart of Carupano harbor was published by the United States Hydrographic Office in 1898.

GEN. ROLANDO CONTROLS BERMUDEZ

Barcelona, the capital of the State of Bermudez, was captured by the forces of Gen. Rolando a few days ago. This city was founded in 1637 on the slope of the Cerro Santo, but in 1671 it was transferred to the bank of the River Neveri, where it has grown to be a very beautiful city. Until 1881 it was the capital of the State of Barcelona, at which date the Constitutional Assembly annexed the State of Bermudez, and it became its capital. It has broad, straight streets, large public squares, several fine statues, a splendid parish cathedral, a fine theatre, a grand market, and many exceedingly imposing buildings. A railroad connects Barcelona with Guanta, the present seaport of the capital, also a railroad to the Naricual coal mines, which delivers their output at Guanta, where there is a fine wharf and a plant for making coal briquets. Barcelona formerly received its imports and delivered its exports through the port of Guzman Blanco, a few miles to the westward, but the superior advantages of Guanta soon ended its use for these purposes. Barcelona is the home of Gen. Nicholas Rolando, who has always been very popular with his people, so that it is presumed he had but little if any opposition in taking the capital of his State.

Ciudad Bolivar, on the Orinoco River, is also in the hands of the revolutionists, and has been for some time, according to reliable advices, so that, in fact, the entire eastern portion of Venezuela is under the domination of the armies of Gen. Castro.

The State of Corobobo, of which Valencia is the capital, was among the first to give evidence of the coming general uprising, but, lying inland and owing to the censorship ordered by Castro early in December over telegraphic communication, as well as over general correspondence, few of the details of the operations of the revolutionists have yet reached here.

THE REVOLUTIONARY REAR GUARD.

From the reported situation, the revolutionists have succeeded in getting in the rear as well as in front of the Government troops, and the only avenue of escape is along the southern side of the range of mountains on which are situated the Changuaramas Sulphur Mines, and thence toward Cumana, the seaport on the southerly side of the entrance to the Gulf of Cariaco. Cumana is one of the oldest cities in the republic, but, as it lies some distance inland and the water is so shoal off the port, the Government gunboats cannot reach the city, which is already in the hands of the revolutionists, to aid or cover the retreat of the Government troops now being drawn to the westward from the Guiria district. One of the most serious difficulties to be overcome by Castro's army in this section will be to procure rations for the men and the horses and mules used to transport its few field guns and ammunition.

"The conditions noted above," says THE TIMES's informant, "together with like force to the district lying to the southward, as well as to the immediate neighborhood of Maracaibo. The facts enumerated have been known in this city by a certain few for several days, and by men who are in close touch with the revolutionary party, and who are kept well posted through channels thus far beyond the control and interruption of Castro and his few remaining friends."

DISCLAIMER BY VENEZUELA.

Knows Nothing of Reported Seizure of British Subjects.

CARACAS, Venezuela, Jan. 28.—The Venezuelan Government professes to have no information regarding the reported seizure of British subjects in Pato Island by an armed expedition from the Venezuelan gunboat Augusto, or the reported occupation of Guiria, on the Gulf of Paria, by the insurgents. The British and American Legations also assert that they have no definite knowledge on either subject.

FOR A $100,000,000 CANAL.

State Engineer Will Report That Figure, It Is Said—No Legislation Before Feb. 12.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—No canal legislation is likely to receive consideration from the Legislature before Feb. 12, which is the date set by State Engineer Bond for the completion of his report upon the special survey of the canal with estimates. This survey cost the State $200,000, and upon its results the legislators hope to be able to legislate intelligently upon the subject of canals.

It is given out here unofficially that, based upon Engineer Bond's estimates, the probable cost of a 1,000-ton barge canal of a partially new route from Buffalo to Albany, leaving out both Rochester and Syracuse, will be not less than $100,000,000. This estimate, however, includes the cost of a branch canal connecting the main line of the Erie Canal with Syracuse, via Onondaga Lake.

In the Senate to-day Mr. Davis introduced a bill amending the canal law, continuing the Bureau of Canal Affairs in the office of the Controller, and providing that the Chief Clerk of the bureau shall be Secretary to the commissionera of the canal fund and the canal board.

MRS. NATION STIRS UP THE KANSAS OFFICIALS

Calls the Governor a Lawbreaker and Perjurer.

Wants Him to Go with Her and Help Smash Saloons—Sheriff Loses His Temper.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 28.—Mrs. Carrie Nation to-day invaded the office of Gov. William E. Stanley in his chambers in the Capitol Building, and for a solid hour arraigned the Chief Executive of the State for his failure to close the saloons of Kansas. Then in turn she visited the offices of Attorney General Goddard, County Attorney Nichols, and Sheriff Porter S. Cook and demanded of each that he close the saloons.

When Mrs. Nation entered Gov. Stanley's office she was followed by a crowd of newspaper reporters and others. By turns she administered to Gov. Stanley a tongue lashing for his failure to uphold the laws against liquor selling, or begged him for aid to carry on her crusade. She put her questions with fierceness and answered them herself without giving the Governor time to utter a complete sentence in his own defense. Mrs. Nation accused the Governor of branding her as a lawbreaker and demanded to know if he had a better method than she of ridding the State of saloons.

"Do you think my method is right?" she asked.

"No, I don't," replied the Governor.

"Well, Governor, have you a better one?"

As the Governor turned in his chair to make answer every one listened intently.

"No, I don't think I have," he finally replied. Continuing, he managed to edge in a few words more. "What can I do? I am powerless. The law does not allow me to do what I desire. The law gives me no privileges. What can I do?"

"If necessary, call out the militia," was Mrs. Nation's prompt reply. Then the crusader began a philippic that caused Gov. Stanley's anger to rise and the crowd grouped about his desk to look on in wonder.

"You can close every joint in Kansas if you will, Gov. Stanley," she said with force. "You can do it if you want to, but you won't. You are a lawbreaker yourself if you do not. You took your oath of office to keep the Constitution. You refuse my request. You are not only a lawbreaker, but a perjurer."

As Mrs. Nation proceeded, she became more vehement and her voice quivered. She rose from her chair and looked full in the face of Gov. Stanley, and, pointing her finger at him, called him "lawbreaker" and "perjurer," without the least show of fear. She repeated these words of accusation again and again. He tried to make reply, but she gave him no chance, the words of invective proceeding from her with a rush that would not be stemmed. Finally, his temper got the best of Gov. Stanley. He rose from his seat and shouted back:

"You cannot come here and talk this way to me. You cannot talk to me this way. I say—You are a woman, but I won't stand it. You will have to leave if you cannot—"

"I am a mother. I am a grandmother, and I represent the mothers of the State."

"You don't. You don't represent them," almost shouted the Governor.

The words flew back and forth with such fierceness that it was impossible to distinguish them. The room was in an uproar. Then Mrs. Nation talked more calmly, pleading with the Governor to aid her.

"You come with me and help smash saloons," she urged. And then she added: "If you won't help us—if you won't help me, I'll go around and I'll smash, smash, smash. The devil seems to have a cinch on the men, but he hasn't a cinch on the hatchets and rocks."

Finally Gov. Stanley volunteered: "You get the Prosecuting Attorneys of the different counties to put the joint keepers in jail, and I will use my power as Governor to keep them in. I will see that they are not paroled out."

This promise instantly transformed Mrs. Nation. She fairly beamed with joy, and, thanking the Governor, started for the office of Attorney General Goddard. The Attorney General was engaged, but she forced her way into his private office and introduced herself with these words:

"We want you to close these joints, these murder shops," She demanded that he remove those officials who neglected their duty in allowing the salons to run, and when he asked her direct questions and referred her to the County Attorney, Mrs. Nation asked:

"Mr. Attorney General, you are not dodging, are you? Now, don't dodge."

With a parting injunction to do what he had sworn to do on taking his oath, Mrs. Nation, followed by a crowd of people, with a bodyguard of newspaper men, started for the County Attorney's office.

"The Governor and Attorney General are dodging," she said, "but there's no dodging my hatchet." She had lost her wraps and her veil during her raid on the State House, but she wasted no time looking for them.

To County Attorney Nichols she repeated her demands, and finally said she wished to swear out a warrant for the saloon keeper's wife who had attacked her Saturday night with a broomstick. With a few words of warning Mrs. Nation and her train were again on their way, this time headed for the office of Sheriff Cook.

The Sheriff soon was in a rage, and at last, boiling over with anger under her scorching attacks, he broke away and rushed toward a newspaper man in the crowd who had pointed at him, seized the offender's collar, and made a motion to strike him. Others interfered, and Sheriff Cook returned to Mrs. Nathan's side, and asked her to his private office to continue the argument alone.

The Chief of Police was picked out for the next onslaught, but his office was found locked, and Mrs. Nation harangued a crowd that had gathered in the street near the City Hall.

LEGACIES TO COPARTNERS.

Treasury Department Decides Case Involving Taxes on Them.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 28.—A legacy to a partnership is considered a legacy to each partner comprising the firm. The firm is not to be treated as an entity, according to the decision of the Treasury Department in the case of C. H. Dunton & Co. of this city. In his will Larken Dunton bequeathed to this firm, of which his son C. H. Dunton, was an equal partner with W. J. Gardner, notes amounting to $18,000 and the question arose as to how the legacy should be collected. On the face of the bequest it was taxable under the legacy tax law because it exceeded $10,000 Collector Gill wrote to the department for instructions, and has been notified that it is a legacy to C. H. Dunton and W. J. Gardner. The letter from Washington says, in further explanation:

"A partnership is not as a general rule considered as a body, distinct from the members composing it, although there have been decisions to the effect that a partnership or joint stock company is a distinct entity in the eye of the law, the same as a corporation. In the matter of the legacy to the firm in question, I am of the opinion that the firm should not be treated as an entity, and that no tax accrues unless by the terms of the will these legatees are to receive, in addition, certain other amounts which would bring the aggregate amount of their respective interest to a sum exceeding $10,000."

MAKE A $25,000,000 CONTRACT.

Carnegie and American Sheet Steel Companies Arrange a Truce—Big Tube Plant May Not Be Built.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 28.—The Carnegie Steel Company and the American Sheet Steel Company have reached an understanding, and Andrew Carnegie will not invade the sheet combine's field. The American made a five-year contract with the Carnegie Company, by which it will take a supply of sheet bars, which will aggregate $5,000,000 a year, or $25,000,000 during the term of the contract, and in return for which the Carnegie Company will abandon its plans for sheet mills at Duquesne. The contract was closed Saturday at a conference held in New York between President Schwab and the officials of the sheet company. President Schwab arrived home from New York to-day.

The conferences of steel manufacturers in that city during the past week were intended to make an agreement defining the trade lines of each large concern and prevent incroachments on these lines.

It was stated here to-day that negotiations are pending in New York at the present time which, if successful, will result in the Carnegie Company abandoning its plan of building a great steel tube plant in Conneaut. Rumors of this have been current for some days, but no authoritative statement of any kind could be obtained until last night, when Joshua Rhodes, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the National Tube Company, admitted that the officials of that company were making overtures to the Carnegie Company for the abandonment of the Conneaut plan.

How far along these negotiations have progressed Mr. Rhodes could not say, but he seemed confident that the $12,000,000 tube mill of the Carnegie Company would not be built.

PASSENGER TRAIN SNOWBOUND

Four Coaches with Many Travelers in Peril Near Bruceville, Md., for Several Hours.

FREDERICK, Md., Jan. 28.—The Frederick and Philadelphia train, leaving here at 3 o'clock this afternoon over the Pennsylvania Road, encountered a snowdrift at Sharrett's Cut, twenty miles north, where it became completely snowbound, and remained so until 7 o'clock this evening, when the four coaches, with their passengers, were extricated from their perilous position.

As the train left Bruceville a furious wind was prevailing, and before proceeding far the wind became of cyclonic force, hurling sheets of blinding snow through the air. The engineer attempted to plow his way through the drift, but before he got far he found he was completely choked up and the rear was rapidly filling up with the drifting snow. Within half an hour the snow was over 7 feet high and the passengers were greatly alarmed, as they could see nothing but huge sheets of snow sweeping down from the mountains and encircling them. A relief crew was sent from Frederick, and after hazardous work the train was reached and brought back to Bruceville.

All the freight and south-bound trains from Philadelphia over the Frederick Division of the Pennsylvania system were side tracked at Taneytown on account of the drifts. The drifts from Bruceville to Taneytown are said to be over a mile long, and cuts which are ten feet deep are filled with over six feet of snow. Double-headed freight engines were put on to-night to plow open the road, but on account of the dryness of the snow and the great velocity of the wind they are making but little headway.

The Frederick and Baltimore trains over the Western Maryland Road are also snowbound between Bruceville and Westminster, and no trains have arrived over either road since morning.

WILL NOT PAY NEELY'S BOND.

Fidelity Company Refuses to Comply with Government's Demand and Courts a Lawsuit.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 28.—President Edwin Warfield of the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Baltimore went to New York to-night to consult Frank H. Platt, Vice President of the company, concerning the $30,000 bond of Charles F. W. Neely, former Director of Finance of the Cuban postal service. Demand has also been made upon the company for the $10,000 bond of Estes G. Rathbone. President Warfield says that the company has neither admitted nor denied liability in these cases, nor will it do so until fully satisfied that the claims are just.

Mr. Warfield further says that before a settlement is made the charges made by Neely will have to be satisfactorily explained away by the Government. It was further stated here to-day that the company does not propose to settle, except at the end of a lawsuit. The effect of a suit by the Government to collect the amount of Neely's bond will be to throw the merits of the whole case before an American jury, and it appears that one of the grounds on which the company will contend against paying will be that Neely's guilt has not been established.

A point which the company may raise is this: On Neely's preliminary hearing in New York, Capt. George E. Burton, who first made the charges against him, testified that, as far back as January, 1900, he had known of irregularities in the accounts of the Director of Finance of the postal establishment. In all Fidelity Company bonds of the form issued in Neely's case there is contained a clause which reads like this: "This bond will become void as to any claim for which the company is responsible hereunder to the employer, if the employer shall fail to notify the company of the occurrence of such act immediately after it shall have come to the knowledge of the employer."

It is said that if Burton actually knew of the irregularities in January preceding Neely's arrest, this clause of the Neely bond becomes operative because the company was not immediately notified.

While the letter to the company making the claim for Rathbone's bond does not allege any criminality against Rathbone, it asserts that the Government was a loser through him to the extent of $60,000 in "unauthorized payments" which had been disallowed in settling his accounts.

Trial of Neely to be Public.

HAVANA, Jan. 28.—Horatio S. Rubens, one of the special counsel for the Government in the Post Office fraud cases, says that C. F. W. Neely, the alleged embezzler, will have a fair trial and every opportunity to establish his innocence. The trial will be in public and before a jury composed of seven Judges.

THE CHICAGO GREAT WESTERN.

Deal Believed to be on Foot for the Purchase of the System.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—It is the prevailing opinion in local railroad circles that a deal is on foot for the sale of the Chicago Great Western Railway. There is a difference of opinion as to who are figuring for the purchase of the system, but it is believed that it is the Harriman-Vanderbilt-Morgan syndicate which is after the property.

Joan M. McClement of New York, controller of the Chicago Terminal Trans with the Fire Department since Commissioner Scannell took hold?"

"During the past two years I have sold probably $200,000 worth of goods to the New York Fire Department."

"You received commissions on all sales?"

"Yes; but I am not getting rich. On special orders I have received small sums in commissions."

"Do you want to tell what commissions you have received?"

"No; that is a personal matter."

Then Mr. Marks said that he was a member of the Democratic Club and of Tammany Hall. Near the end of the interview Mr. Marks said:

"I want to say most emphatically that Mr. Scannell was never directly or indirectly interested or in any way connected with the business enterprises or anything else in business in which I am engaged."

"What companies are you the agent for?"

"The International Fire Engine Company, the E. F. Goodrich Company, the Voorhees Company, and several others."

Mr. Marks also stated that before Commissioner Scannell took charge of the Fire Department there was no competition for fire supplies, and now that Commissioner Scannell is in charge there is competition.

"Yet you receive nearly every contract for supplies from the department?"

"Yes, I guess that's right."

"Did you authorize your partner to say that you had political influence or personal influence with Commissioner Scannell, in order to secure contracts?"

"Any statement of that kind is an unqualified lie. I never made any demand or any man of any kind or description to secure those contracts from the city. I defy the Controller to mention any concern to which I have made such a statement."

Charles B. Castle, former partner of William L. Marks, refused to discuss for publication his business dealings with Mr. Marks on the ground that the matter was now being settled in the courts. Mr. Castle said:

"I deny absolutely that there is any truth in the statement that I wrote a letter or made any allegation that I had political or personal influence with Commissioner Scannell.

"There was a letter which one of my competitors secured from a Chief of a Fire Department of a West-side City, claiming that while the International Association of Fire Engineers was in session in St. Louis I stated that Chief Bonner would be dismissed from the service and that I claimed I would control the business of the Fire Department of New York. This letter was false from start to finish.

"So far as Mr. Marks goes, during our business relations I found that I could not approve of his methods and it was absolutely necessary that we should separate, and we did. Further than that I do not care to talk about Mr. Marks."

Commissioner Scannell, when seen at Fire Headquarters, did not seem to be worried over the threatened exposures of Controller Coler about his department. He said:

SCANNELL SAYS IT'S COLER'S FAULT.

"I have heard all about the immense fortunes which are being made through contracts with the Fire Department. All I can say is that I am very sorry for Mr. Coler if he has permitted the department to make such gross expenditures. If the Fire Department has been wasting public moneys, why, the fault lies with those who sanctioned the expenditures. I cannot spend $20 for supplies without it is approved by the Controller.

"Talk about crooked work? Why, I am the sole custodian of $1,500,000 of the Fire Department Relief Fund. I can lend it or do just what I please with it, and my bond is only $20,000. If I wanted to I could step out with $200,000 to-morrow of that fund, and yet I cannot spend $20 for supplies without Controller Coler's approval. I really think the Mayor should have charge of the relief fund, and have suggested that a bill to that effect be drawn.

"My relations with Controller Coler have always been pleasant, but recently three persons have come to me and said that Mr. Coler had stated that a man named Marks was making a pile out of the Fire Department. This agent, Marks, was a friend of mine before I came into the Fire Department, and it is not my policy to desert friends either in or out of office.

"Last Spring I gave so-called reports from Controller Coler's office all information I possessed. Since then I understand we have been investigated. Mr. Coler, I believe, had and still has friends interested in the hose business. Marks is the agent for nearly every Fire Department supply house in the country. He represents the International Engine Company, which is a combination of all companies. For instance, if I want a steam engine from the La France Company, why, Marks is the agent; if I buy an engine from some other company, Marks is the agent.

"As for Marks making $100,000 in two years it is absurd. The expenditure for hose in the department last year was $75,000 in Manhattan and the Bronx and $75,000 for general supplies. In Brooklyn about $100,000 was spent. That is $250,000 in one year. I am not making money in this office. I have not as much money now as when I came into this department, but that is my business. It is true that I did buy a fine horse and paid a good sum for him. Who is there in New York that remembers the day I did not own a fine horse?"

Controller Coler said yesterday afternoon:

"If there is a combination supplying the city with Fire Department supplies I guess, if Commissioner Scannell will give his help, the combination will be broken up. I want to say that I have not made any personal reflections on Commissioner Scannell in any way. I think when it is shown that the Fire Department is being supplied with inferior quality of goods at high prices he will give the matter his attention. I have the figures to prove that the department has paid too much for supplies.

"The Fire Department is the best in the world. It has the bravest and most efficient men, but in the purchase of supplies it has not been getting what it paid for. The men who risk their lives fighting fires should have the best material to work with, and Commissioner Scannell may not know how he is being imposed on."

BLACKWELL'S ISLAND BRIDGE.

Secretary Root Has Approved the Plans, Long Island City Committee Says.

A committee of residents of Long Island City interested in the construction of the proposed Blackwell's Island Bridge claimed last evening to have received word from Washington that the plans for the structure had been approved by Secretary of War Root. A delegation of citizens went to Washington a short time ago and made an appeal to the War Department officials for the prompt approval of the plans.

Deputy Commissioner York of the Department of Bridges, when asked about the delay in preparing for the construction of the bridge, said:

"The fault is wholly with the Government. In December, 1899, this department sent to the War Department at Washington a set of plans for the proposed bridge. We got no reply. On Nov. 15 of last year the Mayor approved the plans and nothing remained but to secure the approval of the Government.

"On Nov. 20 we notified the War Department that such action had been taken by the municipal authorities, and, after stating that the matter was up to the Government, we reminded the War Department that we have received no reply since we sent the plans. But even that letter brought no response. We do not know yet whether the Government has approved or rejected the plans for the new bridge, and we cannot go ahead with the work until after the approval is signed by the Secretary of War."

Deputy Commissioner York said that if the Navy Department acquired the northern portion of Blackwell's Island for a public park and drill ground it would be possible to place an elevator inside the Blackwell's Island tower, but that would involve a large expense to the city.

ACCIDENT TO DR. F. N. DEEMS.

Falls from a Lexington Avenue Car and Breaks His Hip.

Dr. Frank N. Deems, fifty-four years old, of Flushing, L. I., fell off a Lexington Avenue car at Thirty-fourth Street last night and broke his hip. A near-by druggist, it is alleged, declined to allow him to remain in his place until the ambulance came. He was carried out of the store to a private residence near. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital, which he attended thirty years ago.

Dr. Deems's mother died last Sunday, aged eighty-four years. His father was the late Rev. Dr. Charles F. Deems, founder of the Church of the Strangers in Nelson Place. It was in that church that Commodore Vanderbilt worshipped for many years.

Sale of Alabama Furnace Postponed.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 28.—The sale of the Trussville Furnace to satisfy judgments against the operators, the Trussville Furnace Mining and Manufacturing Company, set for to-day, was postponed until Feb. 4. Meanwhile an effort is being made to arrange matters so that the furnace may resume operations. The sale has been twice postponed with this end in view, and it is now believed that that object will be accomplished.

KING EDWARD'S THANKS TO EMPEROR WILLIAM

British Ruler Declares He Hopes His Country and German Will Continue to Work Together.

COWES, Isle of Wight, Jan. 29.—The Crown Prince of Germany, Frederick William, was invested with the Order of the Garter yesterday morning by King Edward.

The investiture took place in the Council Chamber of Osborne House. It was a brilliant function. The high officers of the household, military, and civil functionaries, and the Emperor's entourage, including a party from the Imperial yacht Hohenzollern were present, all in full uniform.

It is said that Emperor William will bestow the Order of the Red Eagle on Prince Arthur of Connaught, (the son of the Duke of Connaught.)

The Grand Court Marshal of Prussia, Count von Eulenberg, is on his way here to join the suite of Emperor William. The latter accompanied the Crown Prince on a long ramble through the Osborne House grounds yesterday. His Imperial Majesty afterward boarded the Hohenzollern to transact urgent State business.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—According to The Daily Mail, King Edward, when presenting the insignia of the Order of the Garter to Crown Prince Frederick William, said it had been his mother's wish to confer the Garter, but, that being impossible, the duty and pleasure devolved upon himself.

"His Majesty then dwelt upon the friendly relations between the two royal families," says The Daily Mail, "relations which had been so clearly proved by the present visit of Emperor William, who had arrived in time to be recognized by his royal grandmother, and whose consideration and feeling had so deeply touched the nation, which keenly appreciated his action.

"Then, turning to Emperor William, the King gave expression to his deep feeling for him, saying that he (the King) and the British royal family esteemed him not only in virtue of their blood relationship, but for all the great qualities of the Kaiser, and in particular they valued his long sojourn of consolation in England. The King said he trusted that those friendly relations would always continue, and that the two nations might in a common understanding continue to work together in the cause of peace and the civilization of the world."

QUEEN VICTORIA'S FUNERAL.

Business to be Suspended in London Saturday—United States Not to be Specially Represented.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—It was officially announced late last evening that King Edward had ordered Saturday, the day of Queen Victoria's funeral, to be observed as a day of general mourning. All the banks will be closed and business suspended. Only the stores in the poorer quarters will open.

The arrangements for the funeral have been only partially determined. Almost everything thus far is provisional and subject to the approval of the King, who will come to London to-day to look over what has been proposed and to give his decision.

In order to give Londoners a full opportunity to witness the funeral procession, it has, however, been decided to extend the route, which is now fixed to pass Buckingham Palace, through St. James's Park, and past St. James's Palace to Piccadilly, then along Piccadilly to Hyde Park Corner, through Hyde Park, emerging at the Marble Arch, then along Edgeware Road to Paddington Station.

For similar reasons, the route at Windsor has been extended to include High Street, Park Street, and Long Walk.

By order of the King the Office of Works directs that all draperies displayed by citizens shall be of purple.

The route of the funeral procession will be draped with black throughout. The gun carriage bearing the coffin will be drawn by the six cream-colored Flemish horses used by Queen Victoria at the time of her diamond jubilee, and the same harness will be used, but it will be covered with crape.

The outermost casket was sent to Osborne last night. The silver and brass inscription plates bear, in old English letters the names and titles of her late Majesty.

The gun carriages to be used at Cowes, London, and Windsor will be painted the color of khaki and fitted with rubber tires.

Emperor William has commanded Count von Wedel, Master of Horse, to bring six of his Majesty's chargers from Berlin, and the Kaiser, the Crown Prince, and the other Germans in official attendance at the funeral will ride in the procession.

The proposed procession from St. George's Chapel Royal, at Windsor, to Frogmore, has been abandoned, and the coffin will remain in the chapel until the day of burial, which will probably be Monday.

The King and Queen, with the Kaiser, will attend a memorial service in St. George's Chapel on Sunday.

King Edward has commanded A. Forestier, the well-known black and white artist, to draw the scene in the Chapelle Ardente at Osborne for him.

According to the present arrangements, the United States is the only great country which will not be specially represented at the funeral. The United States Embassy has received no instructions, so far, and it is supposed that only Ambassador Choate and his staff will be present.

COWES, Isle of Wight, Jan. 29.—The funeral procession will leave Osborne House on Friday at 2 P. M. The route to the pier will be lined with troops, and the royal personages will follow the coffin on foot.

An order issued by Admiral Sir Charles Frederick Hotham, Commander in Chief at the Nore, shows that thirty-eight British vessels will take part in the naval display.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—Secretary Hay has charged Ambassador Choate to represent the Government of the United States and President McKinley at the funeral of Queen Victoria.

For lack of time a special embassy will not be sent from the United States.

STOCKHOLM, Jan. 29.—The Crown Prince of Sweden and Norway has started for London to attend the funeral of Queen Victoria.

MADRID, Jan. 28.—The Queen Regent has ordered the Spanish cruiser Emperador Carlos V. to proceed to Spithead to-morrow to participate in the naval display.

MOURNING PERIOD CURTAILED.

Manufacturers Had Received with Dismay the Original Order.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—A supplement of The Gazette, issued yesterday afternoon, announced that it is not desired that the public wear deep mourning after March 6, but that half mourning should be worn until April 17.

There has been a strong outcry from manufacturers and merchants against a prolonged period of mourning. The dealers regarded the first edict with dismay, and widespread injury to the colored-goods trade, in many cases actual ruin, was anticipated. Following the precedent of 1768, when the City merchants petitioned George III. to curtail the period of mourning, trade circles in the United Kingdom have already started a petition to King Edward, begging him to limit the period of national mourning.

On previous occasions the King, as Prince of Wales, used his influence in this direction, and now he has asserted his well-known opposition to the observance of long periods of official mourning.

SALISBURY NOT TO RESIGN.

His Absence from Osborne Due to the King's Solicitude for His Health.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—It is officially stated that there is not the slightest foundation for the reports that Lord Salisbury will resign.

Further, it is officially set forth that the Premier's absence from Osborne at the time of the death of Queen Victoria was due to the urgent request of King Edward, who feared that Lord Salisbury's health might be impaired by the trying journey, as sea trips go particularly hard with him. Besides, it was bitterly cold at Cowes.

The most cordial relations are declared to prevail between King Edward and Lord Salisbury.

REICHSTAG OFFENDED KAISER?

Report that He Considers It Ought to Have Adjourned Renewed.

BERLIN, Jan. 28.—In spite of the emphatic denials given to the statement that Emperor William expressed displeasure at the failure of the Reichstag to adjourn as a tribute of respect to the memory of Queen Victoria, many members of the Reichstag accept the report as genuine. It appears that the decision of the Reichstag was dictated by German and British precedents. The Reichstag did not adjourn upon the death of Alexander II. of Russia, who was a nephew of Emperor William I., and had always been distinguished by particularly friendly sentiments toward Germany. More than this, the British Parliament did not adjourn upon the death of Emperor William I., a consideration which had its influence with the present Reichstag.

It is pointed out that the appearance of Count von Bülow in the Reichstag to make formal announcement of the death of a foreign monarch and to offer a eulogy was an unprecedented mark of respect, and, speaking generally, the members of the Reichstag feel that they did all that the situation called for.

The announcement of the appointment of Emperor William as a Field Marshal in the British Army has been received by the press with comparatively little comment. The Berliner Neueste Nachrichten (Conservative) sees in the compliment "evidence of the friendly personal relations between the Emperor and the King."

The Kölnische Zeitung warmly welcomes the appointment, saying:

"It shows that King Edward is himself disposed to devote his attention to the care of England's foreign relations, and it is a reminder that, in the highest places in both countries, the memory of the former brotherhood in arms is not extinguished."

Notwithstanding the Kaiser's wish that the anniversary of his birth should not be observed, many celebrations took place yesterday in different parts of Germany.

King Proclaimed at Windsor.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The ceremony of proclaiming King Edward VII. as King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and Emperor of India continues in all the centres of the kingdom. An impressive function took place in the royal borough of Windsor at noon yesterday. Thousands witnessed the proceedings. The Mayor read the proclamation from the base of Queen Victoria's statue, on Castle Hill, and the Recorder read it at Henry VIII.'s Gate. Fanfares of trumpets and cheers for his Majesty, in which the Eton boys took a prominent part, closed the ceremony.

Illuminations at The Hague Put Off.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 28.—The illuminations in honor of the marriage of Queen Wilhelmina to Duke Henry of Mecklenburg-Schwerin have been postponed to Feb. 4 on account of the date of Queen Victoria's funeral.

Proclaimed Ruler of the Transvaal.

PRETORIA, Jan. 28.—In the presence of Lord Kitchener and his staff at noon today the Governor General, Sir Alfred Milner, proclaimed Edward VII. to be King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India, and Supreme Lord of and over the Transvaal.

Mr. Choate to Have New Credentials.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—It has been decided that Ambassador Choate shall have new credentials. His old credentials accredited him to Queen Victoria. He will now be accredited as United States Ambassador at the Court of Edward VII. Lord Pauncefote will, it is expected, receive new credentials as Ambassador to the United States, his present commission being signed by Queen Victoria.

Vote of Sympathy Fails in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—The Municipal Council to-night failed to pass a resolution of sympathy with the people of the British Empire on the death of Queen Victoria. The resolution was introduced by Alderman George Duddleston. It was necessary to procure a suspension of the Council rules in order to permit the formal presentation of the resolution, and the motion to suspend lacked five votes of the necessary two-thirds required under the rules of the City Council. The matter was referred to the Committee on Judiciary, which will report at a later meeting of the Council.

Service in Washington Feb. 2.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—It has been decided that the funeral service here in memory of Queen Victoria shall take place in St. John's Episcopal Church on Feb. 2, coincident with the service in England. Bishop Satterlee, the Rev. Dr. Mackay-Smith, rector of St. John's, and the Rev. Dr. McKimm, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, will officiate. Lord and Lady Pauncefore are attendants at St. John's Church.

VICTORIA'S REIGN DENOUNCED.

United Irish-American Societies Call It One of Bloodshed, Cruelty, and Cant.

The United Irish-American Societies of New York, at a meeting held on Sunday, adopted the following:

The United Irish-American Societies of New York, in regular meeting assembled, deem it to be their duty to point out at this time the condition of Ireland after sixty-four years of what Englishmen are pleased to call "the beneficent reign of Victoria."

The population of Ireland, a land flowing with milk and honey, and capable, according to the best authorities, of supporting more than 20,000,000 people in ease and comfort, has been reduced from more than 8,500,000 to less than 4,500,000 people; the actual number of Irish people who have died of starvation in the midst of plenty during her reign is more than 1,250,000, according to Mulhall, the eminent statistician; more than 4,000,000 of her people, according to the same authority, have been compelled to emigrate from Ireland to foreign countries; the manufacturing industries of the country have been steadily discouraged, and as far as possible stamped out. The policy of landlordism has been tightened upon the land, and cattle and sheep are grazing upon a thousand hills that were formerly covered with the homesteads of a happy people; the Habeas Corpus act has been summarily and arbitrarily suspended times without number, and peaceable and law-abiding Irishmen have been thrown into jail without even being charged with any crime. The right of the people, even under English law, to assemble for the peaceful consideration of grievances has been wantonly denied, and such meetings have, time and again, been proclaimed, and the ordinary government of the country replaced by coercion acts.

In a word, everything which could be done to impoverish and depopulate the country, to root out the people from their native soil and drive them to seek other homes in alien lands, to break their spirit and make of them slaves and outcasts, has been done under Victoria's reign, and with her full connivance and consent.

With these facts in mind, and without referring to the cruelty and barbarity which marked her rule in India, to the forty-odd wars which, during her reign, have been waged by England against weak and defenseless peoples; to the nameless horrors which have characterized the methods employed by the English in warring with the Sepoys and the Soudanese; to the present unjustifiable and indefensible attempt to stamp out the independence and steal the goldfields of the people of South Africa. We denounce the reign of Victoria as one long act of bloodshed, murder, cruelty, and cant, and insist that when its history is truly written, and the influence of snobbery, flunkeyism, and toadyism is removed it will be looked back upon as one in which English wealth and power both properly passed their zenith and entered upon a rapid and permanent decline; as one in which, despite the material progress made by England in the earlier and middle part thereof, greater injustice, more cruelty, grosser wrong, were inflicted upon humanity in general and upon the Irish in particular than in the reign of any other English monarch.

Stock Exchange May Close All Day.

A special meeting of the Governing Committee of the New York Stock Exchange is to be held to-morrow, but all information as to the contemplated purpose is withheld by the officials. From an independent source it is learned that the matter to be taken up will probably be the closing of the Exchange all day on Saturday—the date of Queen Victoria's funeral—instead of from 10 to 11 o'clock, as was first intended. Saturday, being a "short" day, it is felt that it would hardly be worth while opening the Exchange from 11 to 12 o'clock.

Queen Victoria Memorial Meeting.

Representatives of ten lodges of the Order of the Sons of St. George, representing 2,000 members, met last night in the Cosmopolitan Hotel and decided to hold a memorial meeting on the death of Queen Victoria. They selected St. James's Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street, and Sunday evening, Feb. 3, at 8 o'clock, as the place and time.

ENVOYS IN CHINA CONFER.

Decide Upon Punishment of Minor Officials—Believed Few Will Be Beheaded.

PEKING, Jan. 28.—A meeting of the foreign envoys was held this morning, which was attended only by those whose fellow-countrymen have been killed in the internal provinces, the object being to decide what punishment should be inflicted upon minor officials. A report will be made to a general meeting of the Ministers, to be held probably after the funeral of Queen Victoria. The Ministers refuse to state the decisions arrived at, but it is believed that few will be beheaded, and certainly not the highest officials.

Hsu Cheng I, son of Hsu Tung, the notorious anti-foreign guardian of the heir apparent, and also Chih Sin, a member of the Tsung-li-Yamen, and the Boxer leaders captured in the Japanese quarter are being held for punishment.

Li-Hung-Chang and Prince Ching have, on their request, had Sheng and Chou Fu appointed to assist in the negotiations. Chou Fu is the newly appointed Treasurer of Chi-Li, and was formerly Chinese Minister to Korea.

The Germans to-day began building a barracks for their legation guard.

Reports from the Province of Ho-Nan say that the native Christians there are not molested, but that they are boycotted and are suffering considerable distress in consequence.

RUSSIA MAY RESTORE MANCHURIA.

Negotiations with This in View Said to be on Foot.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—"Strong evidence exists," says the Shanghai correspondent of The Morning Post, wiring yesterday, "that negotiations are on foot between China and Russia with regard to the cession of the three Eastern provinces."

The Daily News publishes the following from its Shanghai correspondent:

"Sheng, the Taotai, has received a telegram from Li-Hung-Chang saying that the Russian representatives in Manchuria presented to Tseng Chi, the Tartar General, at Shen-King, nine peace conditions, restoring Manchuria to China, but giving Russia absolute control of the province, she undertaking in case of war to support China.

"As Tseng Chi rejected these conditions, Li-Hung-Chang ordered Cho Ha Pau, the new Tartar General at Hai-Lung-Kang, to undertake the negotiations."

Chinese Pirates Attack a Houseboat.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The following cablegram was received at the State Department to-day from United States Consul McWade at Canton, dated to-day: "Pirates at Samyonkec, near Kamchuk, attacked European houseboat early Sunday. They killed a Chinese boatman and wounded severely Brockhurst and Spalinger, Europeans. Piracies occur daily in the vicinity of Canton."

EARL LI REPORTED VERY ILL.

SHANGHAI, Jan. 28.—A dispatch to The North China Daily News of this city from Peking says that Li-Hung-Chang is suffering from fever and is delirious, his life being despaired of.

BRITISH FIRE ON DE WET'S MEN.

VENTERSBURG ROAD, Orange River Colony, Jan. 26.—Gens. De Wet and Paterson, with 500 Boers, crossed the railroad between here and Halfontein Jan. 23. Twenty-five British in ambush killed five of the Boers.

CAPE TOWN, Jan. 28.—It is reported that the invaders have reached the Ondtshoorn district, where they had a slight skirmish with the defense forces.

Mr. Krueger in Good Health.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 28.—The secretary of Mr. Krüger telegraphs that the statements about Mr. Krüger being sick are inventions. His health, he adds, is very satisfactory.

British Occupy Carolina.

STORM IN UNITED KINGDOM.

Much Damage Done—Vessel Reported Lost Off Dunaff Head—Hurricane in Holland.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The storm continues along the coast and inland, accompanied by heavy snows. Widespread damage has been done. The telegraph lines are down and roads are blocked with snow.

It is reported from Londonderry that a steam trawler has foundered off Dunaff Head, all hands being lost. A number of minor wrecks are reported.

Dispatches from Holland say that a terrible hurricane is raging along the coast, doing enormous damage.

Several small shipping casualties are reported.

SEVERE STORMS IN GERMANY.

BERLIN, Jan. 28.—Hurricane-like snowstorms prevail in many parts of Germany, and during the last twenty-four hours considerable damage has been done. The weather is particularly violent on the East Frisian coast, where the town of Leer and the neighboring districts were struck by a tidal wave.

At Frankfort-on-the-Main snow is falling heavily this evening. Dispatches from Bremen say that a strong northwest wind is driving the water into the Weser until it nearly reaches the edge of the dikes.

A freight train near Dresden was partly hurled from an elevated track on the line from Potschappel to Wilsdruff, and five cars were badly wrecked.

The river Lahn and its tributaries have overflowed, threatening railway traffic, and high water is threatened in the Silesian streams.

Telegraphic communication with England is badly interrupted, cablegrams arriving many hours late.

FENCING MASTERS IN A DUEL.

PARIS, Jan. 28.—A duel between well-known fencing masters, a Sicilian named Baron de San Malato, and a Frenchman, Prof. Damotte, took place this afternoon at the Velodrome, on the Parc des Princes.

The keenest interest in the encounter was displayed in Paris. All stages of the negotiations were published in the newspapers. The seconds on each side were famed masters at arms.

The combat was short. Damotte was pinked in the arm-pit in the third onslaught. The duel was a superb display of skill. San Malato is the son of a celebrated swordsman.

The friction between the two fencing masters, which resulted in yesterday's duel, has been of long standing, and has been the result of professional rivalry. Damotte has one of the best-known schools in Paris, and has trained a large number of expert duelists, among them Paul de Cassagnac, Jr., who is desirous of following in the steps of his famous father, and has already fought several successful duels.

San Malato went to the Riviera recently, whereupon Damotte accused him of running away. This was too much for the Sicilian, and he returned to Paris forthwith and arranged the preliminaries of the duel. He fought a duel some years ago in Tunis with an amateur, which resulted in a pinked arm for the professional. San Malato then declared that he had purposely allowed his rival to wound him, and was apparently believed by his pupils. The duel of yesterday is said to be the first that Damotte has fought.

seems to be epidemic, attacking both old and young, rich and poor alike. It cannot be prevented. The best thing to do is to go to bed at once, consult your Doctor, and as soon as you get over the acute attack, commence the use of SCOTT'S EMULSION. That will restore the vitality, and prevent Pneumonia or Bronchitis. It is a natural remedy.

BURTON DIVORCE CASE

First Wife Kept in Ignorance of the Court's Decree.

Justice Dickey Appoints a Referee to Sift the Conflicting Testimony of the Two Wives.

There was a hearing yesterday before Justice Dickey, in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, on the motion of Mrs. Augusta M. Burton to vacate the judgment of absolute divorce obtained against her by her husband, the late William A. Burton. Justice Dickey took the papers, and said that he would probably appoint a referee to take testimony.

Mr. Burton, who was a lawyer, and who owned considerable property in Brooklyn and on Long Island, obtained a divorce from Augusta M. Burton in 1876 in Queens County. The plaintiff says she did not discover this fact until after her husband's death, in November, 1900, and that she lived with him up to the year 1899. Mr. Burton left all of his estate to Isadora Nichols, who now claims to be his widow. She alleges that Mr. Burton married her in June, 1900.

Lawyer Well, for the plaintiff, said yesterday that the decree of divorce secured in 1876 by Mr. Burton was obtained by fraud. Mrs. Burton claims that she first learned of the divorce when the will of Mr. Burton was filed for probate in Suffolk County last month. A clause in the will read:

"I have no wife. See decree of divorce, 1876."

Mrs. Burton says that she lived with Burton until February, 1899; that he always held her to be his wife, and that she signed deeds and mortgages as his wife. Counsel for Mrs. Burton said that the admission of service of the summons and complaint in the divorce proceedings in the name of the defendant was a forgery.

No summons and complaint was ever served on the defendant, and a letter, presented to the referee, W. H. Onderdonk, to whom the case was sent for trial, purporting to be an admission of guilt by Mrs. Burton of the allegations of her husband, was not in her handwriting, although it was the only evidence on which the decree was granted.

Lawyer Roland Miles of Northport, L. I., represented the woman who is the only legatee under Mr. Burton's will, and who claims to be his widow. He said that two witnesses testified before the referee, although Stephen Childs, whose name appears on the affidavit of service, now swore that he was not present at the trial and knew nothing of the granting of the decree of divorce.

"This matter," said Justice Dickey, "should be probed to the bottom before some one. I think I will send it to a referee. However, I will take the papers and give them a careful reading."

William J. Groo of 111 Broadway, Manhattan, was afterward appointed referee in the case.

PAMPHLETS ON PHILIPPINES.

Information Society with Headquarters in Boston Begins a Propaganda.

The Philippine Information Society, through its Secretary, L. K. Fuller, announced yesterday that it had issued three pamphlets for the purpose of spreading reliable information on the Philippine question, and that the pamphlets might be secured free of charge by any one sending a request for the same, inclosing a two-cent stamp for each pamphlet desired. The members of the society, the Secretary stated, were largely ardent supporters of the Administration, but men "who are impelled by a patriotic desire to know the actual state of affairs in our distant Asiatic possessions."

The first pamphlet, entitled "Aguinaldo, Together With the Authorized Account of the Alleged 'Spanish Bribe,'" has collected all the official accounts of the treaty of Biac-na-Bato, which terminated the rebellion of 1896. It also includes a few letters and proclamations issued by Aguinaldo's Government.

The second pamphlet, called "The Insurgent Government of 1898," is in two parts. The first part is taken chiefly from Senate Document 66, being the account indorsed by Admiral Dewey of the naval officers who traveled into the interior while the Filipino Government was in force. The second part gives a number of opinions with regard to the capacity of the Filipinos for self-government.

The third pamphlet, issued Monday, Jan. 28, is called "Our Relations to the Insurgents Prior to the Fall of Manila—Were Promises Made?" The pamphlet includes all the accessible official evidence with regard to the often repeated assertion that this Government by early recognition of the insurgents, or alliance with them, is bound to grant independence to the Filipinos.

Communications should include the name of the applicant's Congressman, and should be addressed to L. K. Fuller, 12 Otis Place, Boston.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC'S CUT-RATE.

Makes Lowest Fare on Record for Colonists from Points West of the Missouri.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 28.—President Charles M. Hays of the Southern Pacific made his first great official move when he ordered the rates for colonists from the East to California slashed to a minimum of $25 from all points west of the Missouri River. President Hays says: "If the upbuilding of California can be accomplished in this manner I will bring people here."

The new rates are record-breakers in the history of the Southern Pacific. The colonist rate from Chicago is fixed at $30; from St. Louis, Memphis, New Orleans, $27.50; from Omaha, Kansas City, Mineola, and Houston, $25. The rates will apply to a series of excursions, and the tickets for these excursions will be sold at the points named every Tuesday morning, beginning Feb. 12, and including April 30. The rates from all points west of the Missouri River previously have been about $50.

The trains will start from each of the points mentioned on Tuesday of each week, and the experiment will extend over a period of two months and a half.

CRUSADE AGAINST NEGROES.

The Rock Pile for Idle Blacks of Ohio River Towns.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Jan. 28.—Cities and towns along the Ohio River have begun a crusade against the negroes. The entire trouble dates back to the lynchings of the negroes at Rockport and Booneville for the murder of the white barber Simmons at Rockport last month.

The Board of Safety of this city has ordered the police to arrest all strange negroes and bring them before the City Police Judge. If they cannot give any reason for being here they will be sentenced to the rock pile.

It is estimated there are 2,000 colored men in this city who absolutely refuse to work. They spend their time in the saloons and dives of the city, and live the best way they can. On election day they are in the market for the highest bidder. Other towns in Indiana along the river are taking steps to drive the worst element of negroes away. In some towns no negro is permitted to remain.

Vigilance committees have been appointed at Grandview, Enterprise, Tell City, and Leavenworth. Since the recent trouble at Newburg many of the colored people have left that town.

Methodist Preachers' Tribute.

The Methodist Preachers' Meeting, at 150 Fifth Avenue, yesterday passed the following: "Whereas, in the Providence of God, the great and good Queen Victoria has passed to her reward; therefore, we, the members of the New York Methodist Preachers' Meeting, hereby express our gratitude to God for her long and splendid reign, her pure life, her Christian example before the world, and the blessed legacy she has left to humanity."

Italian Chamber Mourns for Verdi.

ROME, Jan. 28.—The Chamber of Deputies was crowded to-day when the President, Signor Villa, the Minister of Education, Signor Gallo, and Deputies of all parties eulogized the late Giuseppe Verdi. It was decided to drape the Chamber in mourning for a week, to send a delegation to the funeral, and to hold a solemn memorial celebration a month after the funeral, which, in accordance with Verdi's request, will be most simple. The session of the House was then supended.

WHY BALTIMORE LOST TRADE.

President of Chamber of Commerce Says It Was Through Permitting Presence of Garlic in Wheat.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 28.—J. Hume Smith, President of the Chamber of Commerce, in his annual report, submitted to the Directors to-day, made the frank admission that Baltimore's grain trade is slipping away to Philadelphia, New York, and Boston. He says:

"Baltimore has not held her position in the grain trade. Our wheat business has dwindled to narrow proportions, and we are no longer first in the corn-exporting ports of the United States. In an endeavor to protect the year-by grower Baltimore has besmirched her reputation in the importing countries of Europe, through permitting the presence of garlic in her contract or shipping grade.

This prejudice is as decided as general, so that while to-day there is scarcely any of this detestable pickle in our elevators, our exporters cannot place our wheat to advantage, not a few important parts ostracizing it completely, while others entertain proposals from all others ports before giving consideration to tenders from Baltimore. Small wonder, then, that traffic in this important cereal has declined quite 50 per cent. No other market suffers garlic to be present in its contract grades.

"There was scarcely any demand last year for soft Winter wheat in Europe, the foreign consumer using the native article to the exclusion of the imported, made dearer by the high ocean carriage and restrictive tariffs, and when compelled to buy, giving the preference to hard Winter, which the Gulf supplied, or the hard Spring via Boston and New York. Our market consequently dragged wearily along at an abnormal discount, and, strange as it may seem, found in a competing port—New York—its principal customer.

"In corn no market in the world is comparable with Baltimore among the corn using ports of Europe for absolute reliability. New York and Philadelphia, however, increased their movements, and the former's quota was not furnished by the canal any more than was the latter's. During no small portion of the year our members were compelled to remain in enforced idleness."

ENGINEER SLEPT AT HIS POST.

Result, Five Men Are Killed and Two Freight Trains Are Wrecked on the Baltimore and Ohio.

PARKERSBURG, West Va., Jan. 28.—Five persons dead and one severely injured, two engines and ten loaded cars wrecked, is the result of the mistake of a train crew this afternoon between Petroleum and Volcano Junction, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

It was the old story of the engineer being asleep at his post and mistaking the first section of a passing train for the second. Thinking both had passed, he pulled his train into the main track and sped onward to what would seem to have necessarily been his death. All the dead are trainmen.

The scene was indescribable. All the five men pinned under the wreck were dead, and only one of the bodies had been found. He was J. G. Dalley, whose body was crushed so as to be unrecognizable, and could only be identified by his watch, which stopped at 1:05 P. M.

On account of the inaccessibility of the place where the wreck occurred, it was impossible to bring the body to Parkersburg to-night, and it will be held at Petroleum until the trains get through to-morrow.

The accident occurred in a cut on a curve on a heavy down-grade, and at the end of a bridge. That any one was saved at all is almost a miracle. The third section of No. 87 was on the siding at Petroleum, with orders to wait there till the second section of No. 98 passed east.

Engineer Davidson, who escaped with slight injuries, was the engineer of No. 87 and went to sleep on the siding. When the first section went by he thought it was the second section and started out on to the main track. His fireman and forward brakeman, both of whom were killed, must also have been asleep, for they allowed him to take the train out.

The conductor of the first 98, after he passed, saw Davidson pulling out, and tried to wave him to stop, but failed. The conductor of the fourth 87, seeing the third section pull out, ran forward after it as fast as possible, his engineer whistling down brakes.

The conductor of the wrecked train ran over the tops of the cars till he reached the rear car to the last one wrecked in his attempt to stop the engineer, but none of them attracted his attention in time. Conductor Lang managed to jump in time to save himself.

All passengers on the east-bound and west-bound accommodation trains were transferred at the wreck to-night, but the fast trains were sent around by Moundsville and the Ohio River Railroad.

Brakeman Leslie Davis, whose day it was to go on 98, owes his life to the call boy's failure to find him this morning, and Courtney was substituted and went to his death.

NEW HALL AT HAMPTON.

Dedicated Yesterday—Named in Honor of Charles D. Cleveland.

Special to The New York Times.

HAMPTON, Va., Jan. 28.—Hampton Institute concluded its celebration of Founder's Day to-day by the dedication of a new building, which received the name "Cleveland Hall" in honor of Charles Dexter [illegible].

This new building, which is of brick, 150 feet long by 90 feet wide, and built largely by student labor, adjoins Virginia Hall, and contains a large auditorium on the ground floor, which will be used as a chapel for the daily gathering of the whole school at prayers. The upper floors are dormitories for girls. The increased space for both purposes has become necessary through the growth of the school.

The audience which gathered in the new chapel for the dedication exercises this afternoon included not only the students and faculty of the school, but also many who had come from a distance to attend. Several members of the school's Board of Trustees were upon the platform. The Right Rev. W. N. McVickar, Bishop of Rhode Island, was the speaker of the occasion. He referred to this additional building as another great step taken in the ever-widening work which Hampton is doing, and pointed out the appropriateness in the choice of the name.

Charles Dexter Cleveland, whose name is thus perpetuated, was a well-known educator and philanthropist, who died in Philadelphia in 1869. He was an early champion of the cause of higher education for

KERR PLEADS GUILTY OF CRIMINAL ASSAULT

Fourth of the Bosschieter Prisoners Unexpectedly Arraigned.

ALL TO BE SENTENCED TO-DAY

Judge in Accepting Plea of Non Vult Intimates that McAlister, Campbell, and Death Should Have Been Sent to the Gallows.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 28.—George J. Kerr, who was jointly indicted with McAlister, Campbell, and Death on a charge of criminal assault and murder in the first degree, in connection with the death of Jennie Bosschieter, was unexpectedly brought into court this morning before Judge Dixon. He pleaded non vult as to the charge of criminal assault. His plea was accepted, and Judge Dixon announced that he would sentence all four prisoners to-morrow morning.

It is confidently expected that all the prisoners except Kerr will receive the extreme penalty for murder in the second degree, of which they are convicted. The full penalty is thirty years at hard labor. It is also believed that Kerr will be sentenced to the full penalty of the law of the charge to which he has pleaded non vult, which is fifteen years in prison at hard labor, and possibly a fine of $1,000 in addition.

Throughout the proceedings to-day Kerr kept his eyes fixed steadily on the floor, and when his counsel, John W. Harding, in the course of his remarks, referred to the fact that his client's father is dying, the unhappy prisoner showed signs of great nervousness and distress.

There were few people in court when the case was called. Prosecutor Emley arose and said:

"If your Honor pleases, I am informed by Mr. Kerr's counsel that he wishes to retract his plea of not guilty and enter a plea of guilty to the charge of rape.

"Looking at the State's case from a purely legal standpoint I hardly see how I can refuse to accept that plea. The State's case does not differ materially from the case of the State against McAlister and others, and while the facts in that case showed, I think, clearly that there was an arrangement between this defendant and the other defendants upon that night to meet this girl and take her out, and have, as one of the defendants stated in his confession to the police, a good time, yet I am entirely without evidence to show that this plan contemplated any serious physical injury to the girl at all, much less her death.

"I also lack proof which would establish the presence of Kerr in Saul's saloon when the drug was administered to her, or that he had any previous knowledge of a purpose to administer the same. While my view of the law is that while Kerr, from the time they left the saloon, participated in all that took place after that, and while that undoubtedly makes him guilty of the crime of rape, yet I am not satisfied in my own mind that the charge of murder could be supported, under the law, by these facts. It is in that view of the law as applicable to that particular feature of the State's case that I have consented to entertain the plea. I wish to say I would consider and accept no other plea. I would not even consider a plea of guilty to murder in the second degree, because, if I believed him guilty of murder I would insist upon a conviction for murder in the first degree."

Judge Dixon intimated that he entirely agreed with the view of the law as taken by the Prosecutor, and would accept the plea.

KERR'S PART IN THE CRIME.

Mr. Harding then said, in part:

"Kerr and McAlister were friends; he knew Campbell, and he had met Death once or twice. It was a common thing for Kerr and McAlister to meet at Kent's. Kerr went there that Thursday night. McAlister came in and suggested that he might want him to go out and do something which it had become common for them to do. It was to meet two girls. Kerr asked McAlister who the girls were, and the latter said Kerr would find out when he met them. It was common for McAlister to have two friends, and to let Kerr know when and where to meet them.

"McAlister said he was in a hurry to keep the engagement. He told Kerr he would telephone him if there were any developments. Then Kerr left Kent's and went up Market Street to the Erie depot. He saw Sculthorp, and told him he might want a hack later for four people.

"Kerr then went into Hofgesang's, where he waited until 10 o'clock, when he received a telephone message from McAlister. He went and got Sculthorp and told him to drive to Saul's saloon. Kerr had no idea that Jennie Bosschieter was there, and he did not even know her. When he reached the saloon he got out on River Street and went into the hallway. Here he met McAlister. He told Kerr that he had been too late to meet the parties. He said there was a girl in the back room who was in trouble, and asked Kerr to send the hack around to the Bridge Street entrance.

"Kerr did so, and then joined McAlister in the barroom. Through the open doors he saw the girl, with Death standing by her side at the table. The girl was in a condition which appeared bad. Kerr did not go into the back room, and Denth so swore when he was on the stand. Kerr thought the girl was intoxicated.

"Kerr started to go out of the Bridge Street entrance, and was followed by Campbell, who was telling how Jennie Bosschieter was drunk. Kerr said he was going home, and Campbell consented to accompany him, with the remark, 'Yes, let's sneak.'

"Kerr and Campbell then went up Governor Street to get away from the others. Unfortunately the cab, after the girl had been put in, started along that street also. When he saw them McAlister said, with an oath:

"'Where are you going? Ain't you going to help straighten this girl out?'

"Then Campbell got into the carriage, but Kerr refused; he said he was going home. The others coaxed, and Kerr finally got in because he saw two men coming up the street. The others told him that the girl was drunk, that she had taken a lot of wine and absinthe, but nothing was said to indicate that any drug had been administered.

"Kerr began to be annoyed because he was there. He wanted to go back, because he began to think that the girl was in a bad way, and should be taken to some place where she could be cared for. When he found they couldn't get in Lee's Hotel, Kerr said:

"'For God's sake, let's turn back and take the girl somewhere.'

"They intended to take Jennie around to Pete Goode's for assistance, but when she showed symptoms of illness on the Rock Road, Kerr helped to lift her out of the wagon and carry her to the blanket. Then Kerr left the others and never went back to them. He joined the cabman and paced up and down beside the hack, with his hands to his head. He was wrought up and excited, for he feared the girl might die. Schulthorpe swore that Kerr was half dead with fright.

"This is the defense. Kerr did not actively, or with knowledge, aid, or abet in the commission of any crime—if a crime was committed."

JUDGE DIXON'S SPEECH.

At the close of Mr. Harding's address, which ended with a plea for leniency, Justice Dixon said:

"What Mr. Harding has said may perhaps justify me at this point in making a few observations. And first, in regard to the jury which tried the associates of this defendant and convicted them of murder in the second degree. They gave to the hearing of that case the closest and most considerate attention and they rendered a verdict which so far as it was not justified by the evidence, only failed of justification because of its leniency to the men whose lives they had in their keeping.

"My own mind, I can say, was free from any bias, free from any judgment formed upon anything save the testimony adduced in court; and with this conception of the law and the convictions produced upon my mind by the testimony, my verdict would have sent those men to the gallows; for the crime of which they were guilty was one which, from the beginning of English law to this day, has had fixed to it the penalty of death, not imprisonment. So that I think that jury is not justly to be charged with bias against the prisoners.

"Then, with regard to the defendant's participation in the deeds of that dreadful night, it is because the Prosecutor and the Judge are not able to believe or to have a firm conviction of the matters against this prisoner, beyond those stated by his counsel, the plea can be accepted."

The Judge added that with regard to tha witness Sculthorpe there did not arise in his (the Judge's) mind a doubt as to the truth of the narrative which the hackman gave upon the witness stand, and, though Sculthorpe could not have escaped conviction of criminal assault with all the evidence against him, yet his guilt was less than those with whom he was acting, and by coming forward and telling the whole truth, and by the acceptance on the part of the State of his evidence to aid in the conviction of the grosser defendants, he was legally entitled to the immunity which the Prosecutor no doubt would see that he received.

Lawyer John Kerr said this afternoon that he and Mr. Harding were agreed that it was best for Kerr to plead guilty, as he had. The general feeling was, Mr. Kerr said, that the three men who stood trial had gotten off too easily, and there had been some clamor. It was feared that if George Kerr stood trial this might influence some of the jurors, and result in his being returned guilty of murder in the second degree.

Mr. Harding added that on the very afternoon of the day of his arrest George Kerr had gone to his brother John and told him the truth. Had he not been arrested that night George Kerr would have gone to the police the next day, on the advice of his brother, and have told the whole story. Thus Sculthorpe anticipated Kerr by only a few hours in giving the story to the police.

WIFE A GOOD EGG-THROWER.

Dr. Norman Lewis Says She Is a Veritable House Devil, and Appeals to Magistrate Crane.

"I want you to save my life, Judge," said a man whose face showed heavy lines of care, addressing Magistrate Crane in the Yorkville Court yesterday. "I've got a wife who is a veritable house devil. She's a saint to everybody but me. I'm her drudge. She's made a wreck of me physically, and almost mentally."

"That's awful," said the Magistrate, and then the injured one, who gave his name as Dr. Norman Lewis of 224 East Twenty-third Street told a story of marital experiences that made the Magistrate and every court attendant who was married shiver.

"Yes, I've stood it for six years," said the man.

"Six years?" ejaculated his Honor; "what kind of man are you who can't be master in his own house?"

"O, you don't know my wife," said Dr. Lewis, with an air of conviction.

"I never knew a woman who could master me," said the Magistrate, positively.

"Well," said the other wearily, "if you had my wife you wouldn't talk that way. Why she beats me periodically. First it was once a month, then it was once a week, and lately it's once a day. She throws things at me. I'm a good catcher, and used to be able to stop various household articles she flung at me, but lately she's got to using eggs. Now, nobody can stop an egg successfully."

There was such unutterable misery in this last statement that the Magistrate looked pained, and a seedy-looking man on the spectator's bench was heard to groan audibly. The doctor then called attention to his hair, which was matted with the remains of several mangled eggs. He then opened his coat and displayed further evidences of Mrs. Lewis's unerring aim. The doctor's waistcoat presented a veritable uncooked omelet of an uncertain age. He further opened a package containing his hat, which was also decorated with impressionistic designs in yellow.

"Look at my condition, Judge," said the doctor with deep pathos. "I had eggs this morning I'm getting, oh, so tired of eggs. What'll I do?"

"I'll give you a summons," said the Magistrate sympathetically.

"Well," said the man, "You'll get all that's coming to you."

"Oh, how'll see how I'll handle her," said the Judge confidently. "I suppose she makes you do all the work?"

"Oh, yes," said the doctor dejectedly. "We keep a boarding house. I do the work. She bosses. Only this morning I opened the window to sift some ashes and some blew into the room. Then she banged me with a few eggs. If I leave her, you see, she gets everything. I want something to go and live happily on."

There was a tone of such a passionate yearning in the man's voice that the Magistrate at once gave him a summons returnable this afternoon.

COURT ORDER OVER TELEPHONE

Judge Smith Lent Modifies His Order Late at Night.

YONKERS, N. Y., Jan. 28.—Judge Smith Lent made an important ruling over the telephone to-night. He was at his home, in Sing Sing, and was roused out of bed by interested persons in Yonkers.

There was a session of the Yonkers Common Council this evening which was intended to override a veto by Mayor Sutherland, but the purpose was blocked by an injunction. Some time ago Murray & Molloy, contractors, bid $12,253 as the price for which they would do some work in the Park Hill section. J. Riley, another contractor, offered to do the work for $11,-999.99. The Council in Committee of the Whole awarded the contract to Murray & Molloy.

Mayor Leslie Sutherland at once vetoed this action on the ground that it was contrary to public policy and also to public interest and to custom and precedent. The Democratic majority of the council decided to override the veto. The matter was not brought to a vote to-night, as Mr. Riley served each of the Aldermen with an order from County Judge Lent forbidding such action.

The rule was returnable on Feb. 2, and as the last day on which the law would allow an overriding of the veto would be Feb. 1 the majority got Judge Lent out of bed in his home at Sing Sing late to-night and over the telephone he modified the order so as to make it returnable to-morrow afternoon at White Plains. The Council then adjourned until to-morrow evening.

OLD MAN'S FIERCE DEFENSE.

Twice Drove a Gang of Burglars from His House, Although Seriously Wounded.

CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 28.—The story of a desperate encounter with burglars, in which an old man, twice fought off his assailants, although dangerously wounded, was learned from the police to-day.

Late Saturday night three men entered the home of Washington Hunter, near Riverside, and started to plunder the house. The only occupants were Hunter, who is seventy-five years old, and his wife, who is his junior by ten years. Hunter desperately protected his property, and, although one of the men cut a terrible gash in his head with a chisel, he drove the intruders from the house.

A short time afterward the three men, with another companion, came back and made another attack on the house. In the meantime Mrs. Hunter had propped her husband up on the floor, and when the burglars broke in the door he opened on them with his revolver. One of the men was hit, but all escaped. They have been traced to this city, but so far no arrests have been made.

Hunter is in a critical condition, and it is feared he will die. Near the Hunter residence this morning a hat was found covered with blood. On the inside band were the initials, "G. A. S." It is supposed to have belonged to the man who was hit by a shot from Hunter's revolver.

STRICKEN WITH PARALYSIS.

Alfred Hunter, Who Has Been Missing, Found in a Hospital.

A general alarm was sent out yesterday by the police for Alfred Hunter, a public accountant, seventy years old, who had been missing from his home since Sunday evening. Mr. Hunter, who for some years has been separated from his wife, resided at a boarding house at 147 East One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street. On Sunday evening he left the house and did not return, whereupon his relatives notified the police.

He was found last night at midnight in the Harlem Hospital, where he was suffering from paralysis. His left side was entirely paralyzed. His story is that on leaving the boarding house he went to a restaurant at One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street and Third Avenue to get some supper, and while there was stricken with paralysis.

Fire In Riverside Park.

The high wind just before midnight last night sent sparks from an engine on the New York Central line into the grass in Riverside Park and started a fire that burned over a considerable area before it could be put out. The blaze started down near the river bank at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, and spread rapidly, burning up to One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Street. A policeman notified the members of the engine company stationed near, and the fire was kept from doing damage to any of the small buildings.

FOX FAMILY'S TROUBLES

Young Man Says There Has Been No Separation.

He and His Wife Shammed in Order to Get Money from His Father.

As a sequel to the many stories that have been circulated between John Fox, Jr., and his father, President of the Democratic Club, the young man himself gave his side of the question for the first time yesterday. His wife sat beside him, and said that it was all true. They said that, when they were apparently separated for a couple of years, they were in reality the best of friends, and that the separation was merely a "bluff," planned for the purpose of causing the elder Mr. Fox to give his disfavored son a start in business. They said, too, that Mrs. Fox, Jr., drew alimony all during the term of the separation, and that while the deceit was in progress the father of the shamming husband took into his charge the child of the couple.

In substance, they told how their scheme had benefitted them in three ways—through the obtaining of a start for the husband, through the acquisition of additional revenue under the name of alimony, and by reason of the fact that their baby was supported in the home of the elder Fox much better than they themselves would have been able to take care of it.

"My father," said John Fox, Jr., "has never treated me at all well. Ever since I was a boy he has seemed to wish me no good."

"Yes, that's so," interposed Mrs. Fox, Jr. "Jack had a hard time even before we were married."

The father, who was thus accused, is an ex-State Senator. The father of young Mrs. Fox was the late Douglas A. Levien. Both of these parents opposed the marriage.

"The reason of my father's objections to the match," said Mrs. John Fox, Jr., "was that he thought Jack would not have means enough to take care of me. He liked Jack personally."

"And my father did not want us to marry," said Mr. Fox, Jr., "just because he did not. He never wanted me to do anything I wanted to do."

According to the story of the young couple, Mr. Fox, Jr., found it necessary, in order to get funds from somewhere. A consultation was held. Then people who knew the family heard that the marriage had resulted in a quarrel. Soon thereafter the elder and the younger Fox were friendly once again. Then there was organized a firm in which the son was a partner. The name of the concern was Fox & Engel, and Mr. Fox, Sr., gave Mr. Fox, Jr., money to put into it as his share of the capital. The new firm was to do business in iron pipes and such materials.

"In September, 1899, after the firm had gotten under way, my wife and myself," said Mr. Fox, Jr., "now reconciled, went to Europe together. We intended at first to be gone only for a vacation of six weeks. When we reached the other side, however, we met with such a pleasant reception from numerous friends of my wife's father that we continued our stay."

Then Mr. Fox, Jr., told how the firm of Fox & Engel happened to be dissolved last year.

"It was in last April," the husband said, "that I decided to get out of the partnership. So I went to the American Consul in London and took the necessary steps to vest a power of attorney in a friend of mine here. This done, I told my friend to notify Mr. Engel of my purpose. He did so. Meanwhile, having the advantage of me in being on the spot, Mr. Engel forestalled me on taking legal action to bring about the dissolution. He applied to the courts, and the firm ceased to exist, it appearing that he had taken the initiative in furthering the separation of our interests.

"After that another concern was formed with the ostensible purpose of settling up the accounts of the now defunct firm of Fox & Engel. This new concern was called John Fox & Co., and the company consisted of my former partner, Nicholas Engel. But there came no settling of my accounts. I proposed to Mrs. Fox that we should come to this country and try to persuade my father to fix the matter up. She said that she had better come alone, as she thought she could do more with my father by herself than we could do together."

"That's it," interrupted Mrs. Fox. "I came by myself at my own suggestion, not because Jack and I had had a quarrel. It was when I reached here in the Fall that those stories about our supposed differences were published. It was said that my husband had gone a-fighting the Boers or had died mysteriously, or had deserted me in foreign lands. There was no truth in any of it.

"Well, after I got here, I couldn't do anything. Mr. Fox, Sr., refused to have the books of the old firm examined or to make any accounting. When I had put the matter in a lawyer's hands I sailed for England again, leaving here at Christmas."

Mr. Fox, Jr., took up the story. He said: "I was all not about any being opposed to my wife's taking to the stage. She is to go on just as soon as we get back to London, and with my full approval."

"Yes, I have already accepted an offer from Mr. F. R. Benson," Mrs. Fox, Jr., said.

An effort was made to see the elder Mr. Fox about his controversy with his son. On day before yesterday it was stated at his home, 10 East Fiftieth Street, that he was ill, and could see no one. He was not at home when a card was sent in yesterday. Neither could Nicholas Engel be seen at the office of the pipe company, 253 Broadway, yesterday afternoon. The attorney for the company, James Flynn, was seen in his office in the Staats-Zietung Building. He said:

"Young Mr. Fox did make a motion for a court order for the examination of the firm's accounts, but the order has not been issued. In fact, it is not necessary now that the son is in the city. He can see the books whenever he wishes, and he will get all that is coming to him. The firm was dissolved with the consent of both partners, and later the other firm (John Fox and Co.) was organized to straighten out the accounts of the defunct concern."

When asked as to the son's statements that he had been unfairly treated by his father, the lawyer said: "Not a bit of truth in it. Never was a boy better treated." Mr. Flynn said, in answer to a question, that he did not know of the young man having any independent income.

In regard to the story that his father thought him lost, Mr. Fox, Jr., said: "I can prove that I was in correspondence with his lawyer all the time of my supposed 'disappearance.' There was not a week during which he did not know exactly where to reach me. I was neither fighting the Boers nor wandering in any other far-away land. I was in England or on the Continent all the time."

RUBBER TRUST A DEFENDANT.

Justice Beach in the Supreme Court yesterday made an order directing Louis Schlichter, the plaintiff in an action against the United Statea Rubber Company to recover $4,650, which he claims to be due him, to file a bill of particulars, setting out more fully and in greater detail his various grounds of suit against the defendant company, and also to state in what transactions the firm of Reimer & Meyer, commission merchants and importers of crude rubber, were engaged.

Schlichter asserts that he agreed for the sum of $5,000 to divulge to the United States Rubber Company certain information regarding the manner in which the firm of Reimer & Meyer, with which he was employed, had transacted their business. He only received $350, he says, and sues for the balance.

HOWARD PLEADS GUILTY

Bigamist Sent to Sing Sing for Two Years and Ten Months.

Makes a Clean Breast of His Crime in Court and Gives Temporary Insanity as His Excuse.

Within the grim, gray walls of Sing Sing Prison yesterday George W. Howard, confessed and sentenced bigamist, began paying the penalty of having more wives than the law allows. When he walked into the Kings County Court yesterday morning for trial he surprised the crowd of curious spectators gathered there by pleading guilty, without any show of defense whatever. Temporary insanity was the excuse he gave for his crime of marrying Miss Helen Hawkes in Brooklyn last Summer while having a wife and child in Boston. His plea lightened his sentence. Justice Hurd sent him to Sing Sing Prison for two years and ten months. Howard asked for immediate sentence, and when it had been imposed, at his own request, he was taken at once to Sing Sing.

Neither of the two women whom Howard had married was in court. The prosecution was so completely prepared that the testimony was not required by District Attorney Clarke. Twenty-eight witnesses were ready to prove the two marriages of Howard. An interesting exhibit was a piece of the wedding cake of Howard and Miss Anna R. Kay of Red Beach, Me., whom he married in Cambridge in 1890. Another exhibit was a printed card sent out by Howard to his friends about a year after this marriage, announcing the birth of his son, George W. Howard, Jr. Three persons who attended the marriage were in court as witnesses from Boston.

Lawyer Stephen Baldwin, Howard's counsel, made the plea of guilty for him.

"I have to say, your Honor," said Mr. Baldwin, "that the defendant, Howard, withdraws the plea of not guilty, and enters the plea of guilty. I may say for Mr. Howard that, as he views the occurrences surrounding his marriage to the Brooklyn lady when he was already married to another woman, and other occurrences leading up to this indictment, it seems to him that he must have been laboring under some mental aberration.

"He wants me to say that there was an intimation that the lady in Brooklyn whom he married was cognizant of the fact that he had a living wife and son, and that there was also an intimation that the wife in Boston knew of the Brooklyn marriage and was a party to it. He wants everybody to know that both of these propositions are false. Mr. Howard takes upon himself all of the blame. He stands before this jury a truly penitent man, and throws himself upon the mercy of the court."

Howard, while his pedigree was being taken by the clerk, sought to inject some bitter humor into the situation. Asked where he lived, he replied with a wan smile:

"In Raymond Street Jail just at present."

Judge Hurd, in pronouncing sentence, spoke of the fact that the Hawkes family had failed to make any investigation into the past life of the man who was to marry Miss Hawkes. If they had done so they would probably have discovered that he already had a wife.

"It must be said in your favor," said the Judge to Howard, "that you have frankly acknowledged your guilt, and done all in your power to atone for the crime. You have acknowledged that the woman in Cambridge is your legal wife, and have established the legitimacy of your son and her son. You have also made it possible for the Brooklyn woman to procure an annulment of her marriage to you."

Mrs. Helen Hawkes-Howard, the Brooklyn wife of Howard, is ill at the home of her father, Henry Hawkes, at 201 Prospect Place. In discussing the outcome of the case, Mr. Hawkes said he was pleased that Howard had pleaded guilty, as it would enable his daughter to regain her freedom. He thought, however, that the sentence was a light one.

REV. DR. PARDINGTON RESIGNS.

Pastor of a Brooklyn Church Gives Up Because of Wife's Ill-Health.

The Rev. Dr. R. S. Pardington, pastor of the South Second Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, surprised his congregation at the close of the Sunday evening's service by reading his resignation, to take effect at the close of the conference year, in April. Many of the congregation were moved to tears, as it was expected that Dr. Pardington would accept the invitation which was extended by the church society for another year at the December meeting.

The action of Dr. Pardington is due to the illness of his wife, who never recovered from injuries sustained in an accident in April last.

Dr. Pardington will continue to fill the pulpit until after the coming conference. During the Summer he intends to take a trip with his wife to either California or Europe in hope that it will benefit her health.

Dr. Pardington will probably not leave Brooklyn, as he has received four calls for the coming year, and there is a possibility that he will take an assistant pastorate.

WANTS NEW PRIMARY LAW.

Wisconsin Legislator Frames a Bill to Abolish Conventions.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 28.—A Primary Election bill was introduced in both branches of the Legislature to-night and referred to Committees on Privileges and Elections. The author of the bill is Assemblyman E. Ray Stevens. Many of the objections that have been made to the provisions of the Minnesota law have been eliminated in the Stevens bill.

Caucuses and conventions are proposed to be entirely abolished by the bill, and all nominations made by the direct vote of the electors. No person can be a nominee unless he has received signatures to a petition with the names of 2 per cent. of the voters of his party, the signers so distributed as not to represent any one locality alone.

Political organiations are not in the least disturbed, though the people by direct vote choose their party leaders. The party platforms are framed by the State and legislative candidates, and must all be made public by a certain day.

Presidential Electors are chosen by the State Central Committees, and National delegates are elected at the Spring election by a direct vote of the people.

The bill tends to perpetuate non-political judicial nominations, all Judges being placed on tickets by petition.

Order for 5,000,000 Bushels of Coal.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Jan. 28.—Probably the largest order for coal ever taken for shipment through a single purchaser has just been consummated by the Monongahela River Consolidated Coal and Coke Company selling to a New Orleans agent and shipper 200 coal boats, averaging 25,000 bushels of coal each, which is for export trade. The total amount of 5,000,000 bushels was taken at a price 1 cent a bushel higher than the prevailing price of last year in the New Orleans market

Women's CAPES

Midwinter, yet the season's practically ended for us in this line. There's a splendid variety still here, embracing some of the handsomest garments you or we have seen this winter. But they've been re-priced, with the purpose of bringing about a literal ending of their stay here. That should be done in a hurry. The capes have been half-priced. All imported. Some of elegant velours, others of light colored cloths. The best efforts of the best Paris makers were put into these fine, exclusive garments. Hardly any two alike. The velour capes

Were $58 to $130—now $29 to $65

Cloth capes, suitable for evening and street wear,

Were $46 to $95—now $23 to $47.50

Opera garments, too, are greatly reduced in price. They are of rich Vicuna Chudda, with luxurious linings of quilted satin or silk.

Were $30 to $65—now $20 to $40

Second floor, Broadway.

Muslin Underwear

This Muslin Underwear looks better and better as it grows scarcer, and we realize how much more we must get for future goods of equal quality. "You never miss the water till the well runs dry." The month is almost out, and the goods are almost gone.

These hints to-day:

Petticoats—

85c—Of cambric with 2 lawn ruffles, trimmed with lace.

Drawers—

25c—Of muslin; deep cambric ruffle; plain hem and plaits above.

50c—Of cambric; trimmed with handsome embroidery and plaits above.

Night Gowns—

75c—Of cambric; V-neck trimmed with hemstitched lawn ruffle, insertion and plaits in yoke.

85c—Of cambric; square neck trimmed with lawn ruffle and torchon lace.

Chemises—

Lillian CORSETS

We don't know of an equally satisfactory imported corset that is sold so reasonably as the Lillian. It was our choice when we determined to have the best corset made. And we see no reason to revise that opinion after several years of experience. The Lillian is shown in every new model. A perfect-fitting, a perfectly made corset, and fairly priced.

$2—Of coutil; medium waist; white and drab.
$2.50—Lillian girdle; of whalebone; coutil, lace trimmed; in white only.
$3.50—Bias corset: low bust; long over hips and abdomen; white and drab. Same in black sateen, $4.

Second floor, Tenth street.

All Around the Store

Umbrellas. Two attractive items in our well-chosen gathering of umbrellas are: At $1—26 in. union taffeta, of good quality, with natural wood or fancy handles, and worth $1.50. At $1.75—of navy blue or garnet, all silk, or black union taffeta, with handsome natural wood handles; excellent value at $3.

Men's Collars. 55c. for half dozen. It was really a triumph over the manufacturers that enabled us to sell this collar for such a low price. Linen both sides; all sizes from 14 to 17½, in high turn-down, standing, and Piccadilly shape. Sold only by the box of half-a-dozen.

Where size saves money. If you're broad across the chest these suits and overcoats should prove mighty interesting to you. The suits, with sack coats, of blue or black cheviot, 42 to 46 in. chest measurement, are reduced from $12 and $15 to $10. The overcoats of navy blue or black kersey, and Oxford-mixed cheviots, regularly $15, are now $10 each.

Tally Cards. One would scarcely imagine that there could be as many styles as are to be found in our collection of them. In fact, we don't know of any assortment in the city that can equal it. Some of the cards fold like a dance programme, others are in fanciful shapes and colors, prettily decorated or embossed; and the price-range is from 15c to 50c a dozen.

Handkerchief Opportunities. Two noteworthy kinds among our large all-linen stock are men's unlaundered handkerchiefs, with hand-embroidered initial—a splendid value at 12½c; and women's unlaundered handkerchiefs, with embroidered initial, cheap at 75c and $1 a dozen.

The "Tinker's Dread." An appropriate name for a very useful household soldering outfit. It contains solder, soldering iron, box of rosin—in fact, all necessary materials for stopping a leaking pipe, or mending a hole in the tin ware. 12c a box.

Women's Jackets. $10 is the leveling price set on all the jackets now remaining, which formerly were marked $15 to $26. There are some of the best imported jackets among them, as well as domestic; in meltons, kerseys and cheviots, the majority black. All sizes are here, but not in each style.

Warm Dresses for Little Children. These cozy and attractive dresses are marked at exactly half-price, with lots of opportunity to wear them still to come. At $3, of cashmere and wool plaid, sizes 2 and 3 years; were $6. At $4.75, of red, dark blue, or tan whipcord; waist made with box plaits in back and front, and plaited skirt; reduced from $9.

Fur Scarfs. The searching winds of nowadays render some warm neck-protection essential. These cluster scarfs, of Alaska sable, with 8 tails, render prudence its ample and immediate reward—at their price, $10 each.

The "Skating Coat." A warm, comfortable reefer for boys of 4 to 16 years. Suggests indulgence in winter sports without being hampered in movement. Of Oxford frieze, with high storm collar. $5.

Hemstitched Decorative Pieces at Half. This is a group of scarfs, squares, tray cloths and center pieces, of plain, fine linen, with drawn work or lace edge. They are odd pieces which we have rounded up previous to stock-taking, and marked at half price or less.

Embroideries Low-priced. Have you inspected this collection of embroidered edgings and insertions, in nainsook and cambric? There is a remarkably attractive display of them—remarkable because of the little price—15c for 25c and 30c values.

Snapping Mottoes. We rather fancy our assortment of these—took a good deal of pains to gather them. Many quaint and original conceits are here shown, that will delight the children, as well as their elders. 8c to $4 a dozen.

The Wanamaker Store

DRESSING WELL on a Limited Income

In his story, "The Making of a Country Home," in the February number of Everybody's Magazine, J. P. M. gives what is probably a very fair estimate of how an income of $2,400 a year is divided among the various expenses of living. He gives to the item of clothes an appropriation of $300, which is probably very near the average amount spent by one family.

The problem for the wife—for she undoubtedly does most of the studying—is, how to make the best appearance with the amount that can be spent.

Probably the best suggestion that can be made is: Do as much buying as possible at Wanamaker's in January. If all could be done at this time, the $300 would probably buy $500 worth of clothes—enabling the family to dress almost twice as well as is possible by buying each item just when needed.

You can buy dress goods for either the winter or summer, at about half price. The style will be the latest when you make the material up. An overcoat, suit, or jacket, is usually bought for two or three seasons anyhow. Now prices, on splendidly-made sorts, are half or close to half their regular value. Ginghams, challis and other dress goods, also silks, are now obtainable at about half price. Underwear, and other garments for women are much less expensive now than regularly. Clothes for girls and boys are away under price.

Later on, this store will be as busy as it can be selling new goods at regular prices, and neither we nor the manufacturers will have goods to sacrifice.

The opportunity of making almost double the appearance on the amount you can spend for clothes is distinctly a January investment. Now is the time to make the most of it.

Black DRESS GOODS Half Price

The truest elegance in dress is black. Refined, appropriate to all occasions, suited to all seasons, not dependent on fickle fashion to be in style. And so any offering of Black Dress Goods under-price means very positive economy, with no sacrifice of correctness in style or undesirability of coloring.

To-day's offering consists of about a hundred dress lengths that were imported in only one or two patterns of a kind, so that it is quite out of the range of possibility for anyone you meet ever to have seen the same pattern before. This word of sorts and prices:

At $1.25, from $2—Imported Camel's-hair Cloth.
At $1.50, from $3—Imported Camel's-hair Cloth.
At $1.25, from $2.50—Silk-and-wool Figured Poplins.
At $1.25, from $2.50—Silk-and-wool Figured Crepons.
At $1.50, from $4—Velvet Chenille and Silk Crepon Striped Velour.
At $1.50, from $3.50—Silk Crepon, striped, and Spangled Venetian Cloth.
At $1.50, from $3—Silk-and-wool Crepons, designs in figures and stripes.
At $1.75, from $4—Chenille Figured Silk-and-wool Crepon.
At $2, from $3.75—Silk-and-wool Figured Crepon.
At $2, from $4—Silk-and-wool Bedford Cords.
At $2, from $4.50—All-silk Crepe Figured and Striped Mousseline.

Fourth avenue and Tenth street.

Deserved Prominence to a Lot of ORIENTAL Offerings

One would almost think that the entire Japanese Store had been moved to the Main floor, to view this splendid showing to-day. But only the very best bargains from a storeful have been brought out for this prominent display.

This is distinctly an event in the selling of Japanese decorative goods. It is not the logical outgrowth of long accumulating lots of undesirable stuffs, but an occasion planned and arranged within a few days, having to do with the distribution of comparatively new goods.

This is true of the bronzes especially. We had ordered and hoped to have here for the holiday selling a splendid collection of bronzes. Came too late, and were consequently marked at a lower-than-usual price. Not low enough for this sale, however. Another third has been taken off the prices of these new and handsome bronzes.

Vases—the universally admired Moriagi and numerous other beautiful kinds. Some of these at half prices. None at more than three-quarters.

Carved Ivories—exquisite and unique specimens, mostly at half prices.

Then there are Pearl Inlaid Stools at half or less—one at $25 instead of $65. Pearl Inlaid and Teakwood Cabinets, Teakwood Teapoys, beautifully Embroidered Screens, colored Photograph Fans, and so on—mostly at half prices. All of these on the Main aisle, Main floor.

On the Ninth street side, towards Broadway, an interesting collection of Bamboo Furniture. Useful goods in attractive shapes, but chiefly interesting through the method of pricing. 35c and upward—many greatly reduced.

Tailor-made SUITS And Costumes

This is likely to be our last offering of suits and costumes under-price this season. When these are gone, as they will be quickly, at to-day's prices, we shall have only new goods to tell of.

The new prices are radical, because we wish to have only one telling about them in the papers. Splended investments for women who love good clothes and appreciate a little price.

At $17.50—Dresses of cheviot, homespun and Venetian, that have been priced up to $36.
At $50—Tailor-made suits of broadcloth and cheviot; all trimmed and silk-lined throughout; have been priced up to $105.
Also a number of imported gowns at from $50 to $100, that have been much more.

Second floor, Broadway.

Vnder-price Store

More news to-day—highly interesting to those who have use for the goods on sale. Prices cannot stand in the way of possession.

Dress Trimmings for Very Little—

Perfect, wanted goods, but in reduced lots. Hence reduced prices; 3c to 50c a yard instead of 9c to $1.50. In the offering are black and colored silk, mohair and velvet guimps, colored bead guimps, and black and colored braids.

Hat Pins, Absurdly Low-priced—

Many kinds. All tasteful designs. Comparatively new goods. Prices were 25c to $2. Now 5c to $1.

50c Chenille Pompons at 25c—

Various colors—navy blue, gray, brown and black.

Rugs—Mostly at Half Prices—

There are 200 carpet-sample rugs, 1½ yards long, with ends neatly bound, at 50c to $1.50; easily worth double.

About 150 Axminster rugs are now $1.50, from $2.25 each.

Only 50 of the Persian Wilton rugs remain. Price, $1. They were $1.25 here—some sold same quality at $1.50.

$1 Corsets at 65c Each—

The well-known "P. N." Shown in white and drab; short hips; low bust.

Basement, Fourth avenue side.

Paris Notes

from the office of

JOHN WANAMAKER

44, RUE DES PETITES-ECURIES,
PARIS, January 11, 1901.

The "mondaines" are all busy making their New Year's visits and, thanks to the biting frost which has been our lot of late, have been able to don the lovely sable Empire coats and seal and broadtail capes that they have prepared in view of these important functions. For these New Year visits are most dressy affairs and every woman who values another's opinion is bound to appear in something absolutely new.

The hats at present worn by the elegantes are still low and flat, protruding over the eyes and very small at the back. The three-cornered or "Marquise" shape is still immensely in vogue, especially in white and in gray, with bunches of pale pink roses on one side. A very becoming hat lately seen on one of the leaders of fashion here was in pale pink felt, almost entirely covered with reddish autumn leaves, the ruddy tints of the foliage harmonizing delightfully with the soft coloring of the felt. Another charming hat was in pale blue mirror velvet, draped in soft shimmering folds about the crown and brim, and simply trimmed at the back with a large black velvet ribbon bow.

The milliners are all very much occupied preparing their creations for the Riviera. The prettiest hats made for wear at Monte Carlo by the great modistes here, are all made of flowers. One very pretty and smart Parisian actress is taking with her a toque of violets, on which she will place each evening an aigrette of natural flowers, orchids, lilies of the valley and so on. This dainty and novel idea will no doubt be widely adopted. A snow-drop toque, wide in shape and ornamented with black velvet bows, is to be worn by a very dressy "grande dame" with lovely white hair. Water lilies as a side trimming are being used by some of the best modistes. Some of the low-draped hats that are being made are very pretty. For instance, one model has a low crown of velvet ribbon, criss-crossed on a tulle foundation. The wide brim is swathed in various layers of tulle and underneath the topmost layer are ermine tails, which make a very original and pretty framework for the face.

Everybody is thinking of the coming festivities in the sunny South and the couturiers are busy evolving their latest creations, that will be donned by their fair customers at Nice and Monte Carlo. The latest novelty is an eruption of cloth Empire wreaths, overlapping each other in groups of three, five and seven, on a taffetas foundation. The Napoleonic emblems are outlined with a narrow gold thread and form a fantastic design by the irregularity in the grouping.

Among some of the elegantes this material will have great success, but the best class of Parisiennes dress quite simply and owe their elegance to the cut of their garments more than to any elaboration of trimming.

For Cannes, white cloth embroidered costumes are being made extensively and will be much worn there, for the tennis and golf parties are all the rage. And then, as most of the people who go to Cannes have carriages of their own, dainty costumes of this kind can be worn with impunity. The gowns being made for Nice are mostly of a different order, for Nice, although it is in the South, is a town where formalities must be observed, not a watering-place like Cannes. For Monte Carlo again, and particularly for evening wear in the rooms, the gowns are gorgeous, as they always are.

Very many of the Monte Carlo gowns now being finished by the couturiers, are in crepe de Chine; several, too, are in panne. An exqnisitely pretty crepe de Chine gown is pale mauve in color; the skirt is flat at the back and crossed over in front as though it were a shawl that the wearer had pinned around herself. It is, moreover, edged where it crosses and at the hem with a deep silken fringe, thus heightening the illusion. The bodice consists of a very short bolero of panne, of the same shade, over a draped and fringed front of the crepe de Chine, and a deep gold belt. The bolero is edged with a narrow band of sable, as are the elbow sleeves, below which come full puffs of mauve chiffon, having ornamentations of lace applique. The toque to be worn with this lovely gown is of mistletoe, and has a branch of mauve orchids at one side.

Men's CLOTHING

Surprisingly disastrous inroads were made on our very liberal stocks, during the early part of the month. We were compelled to plan wholly new lines at once. Though hurriedly done, the planning was well done. They're here—two very exceptional values in men's stylish, desirable military sack suits.

Suits at $16.50—would be cheap if priced $20. These suits are of black rough-faced cheviot.

Others at $12—good $15 values. Of Oxford-mixed cheviot—all wool, of course. Excellent business suits.

Also a lot of men's pure worsted trousers, in a fine variety of stylish patterns. These are $5—though $7.50 would be a very fair price.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Boys' CLOTHING

Is the winter suit or overcoat getting somewhat too shabby? Maybe you have a boy in that not uncommon predicament. Clothing too badly worn to attempt to pull through the winter, yet it's too early to buy spring wear. Here's the way out of the difficulty: Seasonable clothing at little more than half price, just because the lots are a bit broken.

Three-piece cheviot suits for boys of 9 to 16 years. Values up to $7. Price, $4.

Boys' reefers of kerseys and cheviots, for boys of 3 to 9 years. Values up to $9. Price, $5.

High-grade Raglans and other overcoats, for boys of 4 to 16 years. Values up to $15. Price, $9.

All-wool trousers for boys of 3 to 16 years. Price, 75c.

Second floor, Ninth street.

LINENS

The housekeeper who is not fully supplied with linens for the next six months, at least, will find rare opportunities in the Linen Store to gratify her taste for pure-flax linens at much less than equal goods cost regularly. Some very remarkable offerings are being made—part have been told of before; these get a particular word to-day:

At 12½c each—Hemmed Huckaback Towels; soft, heavy quality; 17x35 in. Finer and larger Towels, 20x40 in.; usually sold at 25c each, now 20c.

At $1.25 a yard—Flemish Table Linen, full bleached, full two yards wide; one of the best makes. Our regular $1.75 goods. Fourth avenue.

At $2.50 a dozen—Bleached Irish Denim Napkins; choice patterns; 23½ in. square. Our regular $3 quality.

At $3.25 each—Bleached Irish Damask Dinner Cloths; 2x3 yards. Our regular $4.50 quality.

At $1 each—Turkish Bath Sheets, snow white; 50x80 in. Usually sold at $1.50.

Infants' SLIPS

Even the lowest-priced of these slips show careful and tasteful trimming effect. Neat embroidery edging and dainty laces are plentifully employed on some of the higher-priced sorts. None is really expensive, as the list will show:

25c—Of cambric; 4 clusters of plaits in front; neck and sleeves finished with hemstitched ruffles.

38c—Of nainsook; some with full fronts; others with 3 box plaits in front; neck and sleeves finished with hemstitched ruffles.

65c—Of nainsook; pointed yoke, back and front, of all-over embroidery; neck and sleeves trimmed with neat embroidery edging.

$1—Of cambric; round yoke of embroidery insertion and fine plaits; yoke finished with embroidery ruffle; skirt trimmed with embroidery ruffle and cluster of plaits.

Long Petticoats—

39c—Of nainsook; made with waist.

38c—Of cambric; lawn ruffle edged with lace; made with waist.

85c—Of nainsook; lawn ruffle, hemstitched; edged with lace; made with waist.

WALL PAPERS

The sale is still going on. But the end is not far away. Stocks that formed part of this offering are dwindling fast. The assortment, however, is still remarkably good, considering the extensive selling of last week. Many very desirable patterns here still. And prices are mostly half—some even less than half.

Some attractive papers at only 5c, and up to 75c.

Choice colorings of ingrains at 12½c—formerly 20c. Still a fairly good supply. Also an excellent assortment of borders and friezes.

Third floor, Fourth avenue.

Creams and Lotions

For the skin. Haven't every good kind, perhaps, but every kind we have is good. If it's a preparation that we don't know to be perfectly safe, it can't be one of our exclusive list. Our own make of cold cream—"Queen Mary" is not as high-priced as some of the others. Yet it is thought by many to be just as good as the more expensive sorts.

Here's the list. Take your choice:

Queen Mary Cold Cream, 15c, 25c and 75c.
Guerlain's Cream Blanc, $1.30.
Blackwell's Cream, 25c and 40c.
Blackwell's Complexion Cream, 50c.
Mirabilis Cream, 25c, 50c and $1.
Czarina Liquid Pearl, 50c.
Czarina Skin Tonic, 50c.
Czarina Skin Food, 75c.
Beauty Cream, 45c.
Cream Emollio, 25c.
Royal Pearl, 50c.
Liquid Amandine, 39c.

STATE CHARITIES REPORT

Board Criticises the Governor's Economy Plan.

Says It Will Cripple the Work—Deplores Effects of Court of Appeals Decision Against It.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—The report of the State Board of Charities went to the Legislature to-night. The most interesting features of it to the members of the Legislature were two indirect references to Gov. Odell's recommendation that the State board be abolished. The Governor's policy for the administration of the State charities, without being named, was severely criticised. The Governor's argument of economy is thus met in the report:

"The attempt to economize by cutting down the board's force of employes could in no other way of any moment gain the expenses be reduced will not only be to cripple a work carried on in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution and the laws, but will also be to waste the valuable experience which the employes of the board have gained in prosecuting the State's work. This seems to be an undesirable and injurious policy, and is certainly the reverse of what a successful business house would be likely to adopt."

On the subject of the board's non-partisan policy, and in anticipation of the evils which will flow from a change to an administration in which political considerations will exert an influence, the report says.

No single official act of the board, including the employment of its officers, inspectors, and other employes, has been dictated by any political or personal consideration, all appointments having been made strictly in accordance with the rules of the civil service. The board has, therefore, been under no temptation to increase its force beyond the number necessary to accomplish the work intrusted to it by law.

The non-partisan character of the board has been considered and respected by the Governors of the State since the board was established, and the members now serving on its roll-call who, though Republicans, were appointed by Democratic Governors; and, on the other hand, there are Democrats sitting on the board who were appointed by Republican Governors. All the political affiliations of the State are represented while its membership, as also are the different forms of religious belief.

With a keen realization of the many serious evils and abuses that are fostered in the administration of public, charitable, and reformatory institutions where their management is controlled or directed by political considerations, this board has not only consistently maintained an absolutely non-partisan attitude in its supervisory relations to such institutions, but has not hesitated to seek to remove them from political influence whenever possible. So long as the present board remains in office, it will continue to adhere to this non-partisan policy.

Considerable space is devoted in the report to comment upon the decision of the Court of Appeals in the case of the State against the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The decision of the Court of Appeals, in brief, was that the jurisdiction of the State Board of Charities did not extend to any institution not receiving State aid, or money raised by taxation in a county, city, or village. The board's contention in the case before the Court was that the board had the right to inspect and investigate any organized charity, whether or not the charity received public money raised by taxation.

The board had been exercising such jurisdiction up to the time the Court of Appeals decision in the case of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children was rendered. While bowing to the authority of the Court, the State Board does not accept the Court's decision as a proper one. Many reasons are given in the report why, in the State Board's judgment, the decision is to be deplored. The report says:

Summarizing the points of the decision as briefly as possible, in the light of the former decision of the Court, the board understands them to mean that the State has no jurisdiction whatever over purely charitable institutions, (as distinguished from reformatory or correctional ones,) unless they are in receipt of public moneys. It has, therefore, notified all such institutions in this district that it would not thereafter seek to visit and inspect them, nor would it require reports of their receipts and expenditures.

The board has never claimed any authority to make rules or regulations for such institutions, except in the case of dispensaries where it is required to do so by law. When evils or abuses have been discovered in the management of these institutions, it has sought to have them corrected by bringing them to the attention of the respective Boards of Managers.

Without intending any disrespect to the Court, the board feels compelled to say that it considers the result of this case most unfortunate for the following reasons:

1. For the first time in a quarter of a century, by preventing the collection of reports from organized charities, it prevents the Legislature and the public from having any definite knowledge as to all the amount of dependency which exists in the State. For instance, the total number of dependent children in institutions cannot now be definitely known through any official source. It can hardly be believed that the Court intended this, but it is, nevertheless, one of the results of the decision.

2. The State is prevented from having any definite knowledge of the work of many of the charitable corporations it created, not a few of which receive annual appropriations in the shape of payments for boarding of dependent children.

3. The per capita which the State has hitherto expended for the inmates of such exempted institutions is removed.

4. The protection to trust funds left by will or otherwise for the use of the poor, amounting in some cases to hundreds of thousands of dollars, is also removed.

5. It has been said with relation to charitable institutions generally, and with added force to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, that the beneficent results of good accomplished by these institutions and the unselfish labors of many of those connected with their management. The State has, however, conferred upon them the most extensive powers until there is to-day, in the State of New York, no single public officer or department of government which has anything approaching the authority over dependent children which is exercised by these societies. This, too, with no supervision of the State Government authorized to inspect their work.

In conclusion, the board points out that the State has the right to grant to private individuals extraordinary powers over the children of those in humble station, but is denied the right to see that they are properly exercised. That this is a wrong state of affairs and one requiring remedy must be obvious, the report says.

POLICE BILL UP TO-DAY.

To be Passed by the Senate and Rushed Through the Assembly.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—The New York Police bill will be called up in the Senate to-morrow and passed without being further amended. Senator Grady will offer a number of amendments on behalf of the Democrats, and will speak to them.

There is considerable talk to-night to the effect that the bill will be rushed over to the Assembly as soon as passed in the Senate taken up in the Assembly at once, and passed without debate.

The Republicans are anxious to get the bill into Mayor Van Wyck's hands without further delay, and the Democrats realize the hopelessness of opposition.

FORESTRY SCHOOL IN TROUBLE

May Be Taken from Cornell University Because of Oleomargarine Found There.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—The State authorities are indignant over a report that oleomargarine is being supplied to the students in the State School of Forestry in the Adirondacks. The alleged discovery was made by agents of the State Department of Agriculture. Four tubs of oleomargarine were seized. They were consigned to the State School of Forestry, and were seized at the upper lake, where the school is located.

Commissioner of Agriculture Wieting stated to-day that they had been ordered by Superintendent Collins of the school, and the bills have been sent to the State Controller for audit.

Senator Ambler to-night introduced a bill providing that the State Agricultural Department shall have the power to audit the bills of the State School of Forestry. The introduction of the bill is the outcome of the reported discovery that the management of the college has been purchasing oleomargarine. The measure is designed to prevent any recurrence of that condition.

ITHACA, N. Y., Jan. 28.—Dr. B. E. Fernow, Director of the State College of Forestry in the Adirondacks, when seen to-night regarding the Albany report that the school may be taken from Cornell University because oleomargarine had been fed to the students of the college, said the report was entirely untrue.

Since November there had been no students in the forest, but they had been in Ithaca and, therefore, no oleomargarine could have been fed to them on the tract within the past week. He stated, however, that lumbering men in the college forest, as in the rest of the Adirondack woods, used oleomargarine, but it was not sold as butter and was plainly labeled "oleomargarine." Against the use of oleomargarine, if labeled as such, and not as butter, Dr. Fernow said that he believed the law did not operate.

GOVERNORS ISLAND PLANS.

Strong Opposition Developed at Albany—Bill is Made Special Order for To-day.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—The bill introduced by Assemblyman H. Wilson, giving authority to the Commissioners of the Land Office to grant and convey to the United States certain lands under water in the Harbor of New York, at Governors Island, and to cede jurisdiction to the United States over said lands, came up in the Assembly to-night and was strongly opposed.

Mr. Van Name of Richmond said the bill was improperly entitled. It should be called, he said, "A bill to obstruct navigation in the Harbor of New York and provide quarters for a great standing army in that city." The land which it was proposed to give the Government, Mr. Van Name said, if advertised for sale at public auction, would bring millions of dollars. By the charter of the City of New York the jurisdiction over this land was vested in the city. The island had been ceded to the Government to be used for fortification purposes. No fortifications now exist there, and it would be utterly useless to have any there in these days of long-range guns. The Government, Mr. Van Name continued, did not need the additional land. The reservations at Fort Hamilton, Fort Schuyler, and Fort Wadsworth were more than ample for all of the army's needs in the way of land around New York. The proposed extension of Governors Island would seriously interfere with the project of improvement for Buttermilk Channel, for which a large appropriation had been made by the Government.

"If an additional slip of land, one-half mile long by one-quarter of a mile wide, is added to Governors Island," said the speaker, "Buttermilk Channel will become a veritable Hell Gate."

In closing Mr. Van Name said, after drawing a picture of the prisoners in Fort William gazing out with hopeless eyes upon the Statue of Liberty: "The Island should be preserved as a park for the city Children should laugh and take no heed where men of iron have prepared to shed blood."

Mr. Wilson denied that the proposed extension of the island would in any way interfere with navigation. The Government, he said, would spend $1,500,000 in improving the island, and the improvement would be a great benefit to New York.

Mr. Lynn of New York spoke against the bill. Governors Island, he said, was a picturesque spot, and was not intended for arms or armaments. The waters intended to be filled in would narrow instead of widening the channel as claimed by the introducer. The real truth of the matter was that Mr. Wilson had introduced the bill for the accommodation of contractors who would thereby have a convenient dumping ground.

Mr. McKeown said he had a telegram from Brooklyn ferry companies stating that the proposed extension of Governors Island would interfere with navigation, and expressing a desire for a hearing. He asked that the bill be laid over for a week.

Alder Allds said he hoped this motion would be voted down. It was.

Mr. Van Name asked leave to introduce a resolution in connection with the bill. The Speaker ruled him out. Mr. Van Name's resolution called upon the Senators and Representatives of the State of New York to urge the Federal Government to deed Governors Island to the City of New York that it might be used for a city park and complete tunnel construction from the Borough of Manhattan to South Brooklyn and Staten Island, or, failing in that, to secure an agrangement by which the homely structures on the island would be removed and the island used as a parade ground for the navy.

Mr. Wilson asked that the bill be made a special order for to-morrow. His motion was adopted upon a yea and nay vote.

FOR ANOTHER REFORMATORY.

Bill to Establish One for Males Convicted of Misdemeanors.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—A bill was introduced in the Legislature to-night at the request of the State Prison Commission providing for a State reformatory for males convicted of minor offenses. The bill provides that within ten days after its passage the Governor, with the consent of the Senate, shall appoint five Commissioners to locate a site for the reformatory.

The institution is to be established "for the care, confinement, discipline, instruction, and reformation of such male criminals between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five years, convicted of misdemeanors, as may be sentenced thereto by the courts of this State. The object of said institution shall be the instruction in letters and trades and habits of industry of such male misdemeanants between said ages, as, in the judgment of the Court passing sentence on said offenders, may be substantially benefited by such discipline and instruction." The bill appropriates $1,000 for the expenses of the commission.

AGAINST POLICE REHEARINGS.

City Club Argues that the Legislature Cannot Judge Such Cases.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—The City Club of New York is again preparing to fight the bills to allow the rehearing of charges upon which New York City policemen were dismissed, and the reappointment of the policemen in case of acquittal by the Board of Police, and those empowering the Police Board to reappoint policemen who have resigned. Twenty-four bills calling for rehearings have already been introduced, and fourteen for reinstatement.

The club's memorandum in opposition to the measures says in part:

"If any legislation is necessary upon this subject, it should be in the form of a general amendment to the charter of New York City, giving to the Police Board power to reconsider such cases. The Legislature is not a body fitted to consider the merits of each particular case. Such consideration is a judicial act."

TO CHANGE JURY LAW HERE.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—Assemblyman Van Name introduced a bill to amend the act creating a Commissioner of Jurors in the several counties of the State. The amendment applies solely to New York City, and is as follows:

On or before Dec. 1 in each year the Commissioner must return to the County Clerk to be filed in his office certified copies of the lists prepared by him of the persons liable to serve as trial jurors in the courts of record in the ensuing year. Before filing such certified lists, however, he must select therefrom 200 persons for each district of the Municipal Court of the City of New York in his county, if he be a Commissioner for a county in the City of New York, and he must on or before the first day of December in each year, in open court, in the respective Justices of said Municipal Court in his county certified lists of persons so selected and struck off by him. The persons so struck off are to be residents of the Municipal Court district for which they are selected.

The lists so filed shall constitute the jury lists for trials in the respective districts where they are filed until a new list shall be filed in accordance with the provisions of this act.

For Five-Cent Fares in This City.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—Assemblyman Cooley introduced a bill to-night which provides that no surface or elevated roads in New York City shall charge more than 5 cents for a continuous ride. The purpose of the bill, Mr. Cooley explained, is to cut down the rates now charged on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad within the city limits from the maximum charge of 20 cents and the rate of 10 cents now charged on a horse-car line running from Bartow Station to City Island. The bill will also prevent the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company from charging two five-cent fares from the Brooklyn Bridge to Coney Island.

For an Additional Judge in Kings.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—Senator Fuller of Brooklyn this evening introduced in the Senate a bill "to facilitate the administration of criminal justice in the County of Kings in establishing another additional court for the trial of indictments." The bill will create an additional County Judge, who will preside over "the Kings County auxiliary court." Besides, stenographers, clerks, and other attachés to the number of twelve will be created. The salaries are the same for Judge and attachés as in the present County Court.

No Decision on the Elections Bills.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—The Republican leaders have not decided apparently whether the Raines bill as amended or the Strannahan Elections Bureau bill is to receive their support. Their decision probably will be controlled by the sentiment which is developed upon the two bills during the week. The Democrats will not oppose either one of the bills in its entirety. An amendment will be asked for to provide for two clerks at $3,500 per annum, one of whom shall be of one political party and the other of another party.

Eighth District Contest Settled.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—Assemblyman Julius Harburger of New York to-night, in the Assembly, submitted a notification of the withdrawal of the petition of ex-Assemblyman Isidor Cohen of New York, who contested the seat of Charles S. Adler, Republican, of the Eighth Assembly District, New York City. This settles the contest, and the Committee on Privileges and Elections will cancel the dates for sittings. Mr. Cohen's claim was that there was an illegal count in the interest of his opponent.

A State Board of Architects.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—A bill favored by the architects of the State was introduced to-night by Mr. Knipp. It provides for a State Board of Architects, to consist of nine persons, to be appointed by the Governor, and to serve without compensation. The board shall hold at least eight examinations a year for the registration of those desiring to practice architecture. The examination fee shall be $5. Registration shall be $15 additional. Architects practicing now shall pay a registration fee of $20.

MISCELLANEOUS BILLS.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—The following bills were introduced to-night in the Senate:

Senator GOODSELL—Providing for a uniform series of text books in the common schools of the State.

Also a bill amending the law authorizing electric light companies to acquire real estate, so that it does not apply to land belonging to the forest preserve.

Senator RAINES—Providing office and library facilities at the New York Agricultural Experimental Station at Geneva and appropriating $8,500 therefor.

Senator HILL—Appropriating $30,315.49 from Buffalo's treasury to pay assessments for local improvements in the City of Buffalo.

Senator AMBLER—Giving the Commissioner of Agriculture power to audit bills of the College of Forestry.

Senator SULLIVAN—Regulating the price of gas in cities of 400,000 inhabitants and upward at 75 cents per thousand cubic feet.

The following bills were introduced in the Assembly to-night:

Mr. MANSFIELD—Appropriating $10,000 for the construction of a steel bridge over the Champlain Canal at Waterford.

Mr. WEEKES—Including New York and Kings Counties in the provisions of the fish and game law relative to the powers of game protectors.

Mr. WEEKES—Amending the fish and game law by providing that no person shall take more than twenty-five wild fowl in one day.

Mr. BRILL—Providing that the citizens appointed to town Boards of Health shall be appointed biennially instead of annually, and for two years instead of one.

Mr. STEVENS—Amending the highway law by providing that not more than $1,000 shall be expended for the repairing or rebuilding of bridges in towns, unless the State Engineer or a competent engineer appointed by him shall certify that the expenditure of such an amount is reasonable. If $2,000 or more is to be expended the question must be submitted to the voters.

Mr. MORGAN—A resolution urging the New York Representatives of the United States Congress to use their influence in securing the passage of the bill now pending before that body to secure for the use of Temple Farm in York County, Va., by the United States Government. The Moore House, which is located on the Temple Farm, is where the surrender of Gen. Cornwallis, the English commander, to Gen. Washington occurred.

Mr. JUENGST—Including the real property of a cemetery association in the list of associations subject to taxation.

Mr. RICHTER—Providing that front doors on surface or elevated road cars in New York shall be closed against ingress and egress from Oct. 15 to April 15 each year, under a penalty of $200 for violation of the act.

LEGISLATURE'S PROCEEDINGS.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—In the Senate to-day Assemblyman Snyder's bill providing for the payment of Erie County employes twice a month was received and advanced to a third reading on motion of Senator Davis.

The Senate passed Assemblyman Traub's bill providing for a system of taxation for repairing highways in De Witt, Onondaga County.

Acting as a Committee of the Whole, the Senate considered the Ellsworth bill forming a department of labor, creating a Commissioner of Labor, and consolidating the three labor bureaus. Senator Raines demanded an explanation of the bill, and Senator Ellsworth not giving it, Senator Raines insisted on the reading of the bill in full. The motion to strike out the first section for the purpose of an explanation was voted down, which irritated Mr. Raines, who obliged the Senate to listen to the tedious reading of the whole measure. The bill was then advanced to third reading without objection or comment.

The single-headed State Prison Commission bill was advanced to third reading without debate or objection. The bill has been amended to conform with the Assembly measure on the same subject.

In the Assembly also the Labor Consolidation bill was advanced to third reading. Mr. Costello, introducer of the measure, said it was in the interests of economy and at the same time would better protect the interest of the labor people. The bill was advanced without debate.

Mr. Geoghan of Erie offered an amendment to the Fancher Tuberculosis bill which caused quite a little debate. The bill places the inspection of animals afflicted with tuberculosis under the jurisdiction of the State Board of Health, the Commissioner to appoint a State appraiser of condemned animals at an annual salary of $1,800. Mr. Geoghan said his amendment provided for the appointment of an experienced cattle man as appraiser instead of a farmer, and that $50 instead of $40 a head be the appraised value of condemned cattle.

Mr. Allds intimated that Mr. Geoghan was trying to sell the members a good-sized gold brick, and that, if his amendment prevailed, diseased cattle would be dumped into the State from all quarters.

The amendments were killed, and the bill was passed, 104 yeas, 13 nays.

Mr. Babcock of St. Lawrence offered a resolution urging the New York State members in Congress to use their influence to secure the passage of the Grout Oleomargarine bill, now pending, and upon which a minority report has been made. The resolution was adopted.

ASSEMBLY BILLS PASSED.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—The following bills were passed by the Assembly to-night:

Mr. COOLEY—Providing that the Westchester Exempt Firemen's Association of New York City shall receive the tax of 2 per cent. upon the receipts for premiums of foreign fire insurance companies upon the insurance business done by them in the Twenty-fourth Ward of the Borough of the Bronx.

Mr. POWLER—Fixing the number of Trustees in a village of the fourth class at four.

Mr. ADAMS—To settle and adjust an assessment for certain expenses incurred by the City of Brooklyn and New York City in reference to the Jamaica and Brooklyn plank walk road.

Mr. REMSEN—Providing for a municipal garbage plant for the City of Binghamton.

Mr. REMSEN—To provide for the payment of the claim of Kingsley Lloyd for services rendered to the New York City Board of Education.

Mr. SWIFT—Amending the highway law by making it a misdemeanor for any person to throw loose stones in the gutter or the grass adjoining a highway from which they have been removed. The penalty fixed is $10. This bill is introduced in the interests of bicyclists.

ONE DEATH FROM SMALLPOX.

Three New Cases of the Disease Reported to Board of Health.

There were three cases of smallpox reported to the Board of Health yesterday, and one death from the disease. The death was that of George Vogel, one year old, of 344 East Forty-sixth Street, who had been transferred to North Brother Island three days before.

The other cases reported were as follows: Edward Kelly, ten years old, of 156 Third Street, Long Island City; Eleanor Smith, twenty-seven years old, of 725 East One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street, and Nellie Sullivan, twenty-six years old, a cook, of 127 West Seventy-seventh Street.

Last night Hannah Belleteri, six weeks old, was removed from her home, 2,163 First Avenue, to the Reception Hospital for observation. It is thought she has the smallpox.

ANNOYED LADY FRANCIS HOPE.

A Private Detective Arrested for Watching Her.

William Foley, thirty years old, a private detective living at 215 West Thirty-second Street, was arreated at Thirty-fourth Street and Broadway last night by Detectives Dale and Kammer of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, but was not locked up. Complaint has been made to Capt. Denohue of the West Forty-seventh Street Station that a man answering Foley's description had been annoying Lady Francis Hope, who is playing in a Broadway theatre.

Last evening the detectives watched the actress leaving her home at 229 West Thirty-fourth Street and claim that they saw Foley standing near by and watching her. At the station house Foley produced credentials showing he was attached to a private detective agency. He was discharged from custody.

COLLISION IN THE TUNNEL

West Shore Passenger Strikes a Construction Train.

Two Men Killed and Six Seriously Injured—Thought to be Due to Switchman's Error.

Two persons were killed and seven injured in a collision in the east end of the Weehawken Tunnel, between a passenger train and a gravel train on the West Shore Road yesterday morning. The victims were at work on board a construction train at the time and were all employed by the West Shore Railroad Company.

The killed are:

ALLOW, JOSEPH, New York.
DEANRO, JOSEPH, New York.

The injured are:

EVINO PATRICIO, North Ninth Street, Brooklyn.
GEOGHAN, JAMES, Esopus, N. Y.
LABRA, JAMES, 301 Monroe Street, New York.
MONNELL, TONY, 301 Monroe Street, New York.
PAYNE, JOSEPH, Staten Island.
SUMMELL, JAMES, 38 Richardson Street, Brooklyn.
WALKER, DANIEL, Kingston, N. Y.

The bodies of the two men killed were taken from the wreck and placed in a shanty close to the scene of the wreck, where they remained until removed later by an undertaker.

All the injured, except Walker, were placed on a special train and taken to Hoboken, and from there were transferred in an ambulance to St. Mary's Hospital. Geoghan's spine is injured. His condition is critical, but there is hope that he will recover.

Evino's right ear was almost torn off, and he has several scalp wounds. Monnell is also suffering from several scalp wounds. Summell's collar bone was broken. Labra sustained a fracture of the right arm, and he has several contusions on the body. Walker, who was only slightly injured, walked from the scene of the accident and took a train for his home.

The accident happened near the east end of the tunnel, where John Wiedman was stationed to manipulate some switches. Train No. 66, the Haverstraw local, was due at the station in Weehawken at 8 o'clock. On the train emerging from the tunnel the switch was thrown open directly in front of it by Wiedman, it is alleged, with the result that the train was turned off on a wrong track, a side one leading to the freight yards, and upon which the construction train had been run only a few minutes before.

The construction train consisted of a caboose and several flat cars. The caboose was at the end nearest the tunnel. Its proximity and the suddenness of the mistake made by Weldman, it is alleged, rendered it impossible for the engineer of the passenger train, George Madden, to slacken speed. There was no time. He and the fireman stuck to their posts, and were unhjured.

The locomotive of the passenger train crashed into the caboose, which was filled with workmen. It was demolished and was thrown forward over the two flat cars next in front of it, which were also telescoped by the locomotive. A stove fire in the caboose set the wreck on fire. A line of hose was stretched by some railroad employes and the blaze was extinguished. The locomotive was damaged by the crash.

The dead and injured were in the caboose, and as quickly as possible the rescue work was begun. After that a special train, consisting of a car and a locomotive, was quickly put in readiness, and the injured were placed on board and taken to the hospital.

In the collision the passengers in the local train were badly frightened and shaken up. They were thrown from their seats by the shock. Some of them were scratched and otherwise slightly injured. Having recovered from the effects of the shock, they alighted from the train and walked to the ferry through the yards.

County Physician Converse will probably hold an inquest. Superintendent Austin of the West Shore Road said that Weldman, when questioned, said in explanation that he thought the gravel train was going to back out on the main track at once, and he did not think of the passenger train. Mr. Austin said that no blame attached to Engineer Madden as the miss-set switch could not be seen by him until he was almost upon it.

HEARING ON STREET OPENING.

Friends and Opponents of 135th Street Measure Will Appear Before Legislative Committee.

There will be a final hearing at Albany to-day on the bill which provides for the opening of One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street, between St. Nicholas and Amsterdam Avenues. The North Manhattan Taxpayers' Association, which has been especially active in its support of the measure, will be represented at the hearing by a committee headed by William Whitehead.

The bill is not altogether a new one, having been introduced at the last session of the Legislature, only to be defeated by a very few votes. Those who were its supporters both then and now, however, believe that the hostile interests have, in large measure, been overcome and feel confident that the improvement will now be authorized.

As matters now are, there is no thoroughfare between Eighth and Amsterdam Avenues, from One Hundred and Twenty-seventh to One Hundred and Forty-first Street. The proposed improvement is simply to complete One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street by means of a cut through Convent Hill, and to make of it a continuous cross-town thoroughfare. The difference in grade between St. Nicholas and Amsterdam Avenues at One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street is about 95 feet, but it is asserted that the ascent through the proposed cut will not be so steep as that on One Hundred and Forty-first or One Hundred and Forty-fifth Street. The estimated cost of the improvement is about $200,000.

Supporters of the bill point out that the proposed change will be one of far-reaching benefit. Communication between the section at One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street and Amsterdam Avenue and that immediately to the eastward beneath the hill is now to be had only by a long detour either to the north or south. Besides its advantages to the immediate neighborhood, the opening of One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street and the probable extension of the trolley road westerly from its present terminus at Eighth Avenue will also open up a new and fairly direct line of communication between the entire Washington Heights section and the Bronx.

A representative of large real estate interests in the sections to be affected by the improvement said yesterday: "I think the bill is a very sensible one, and I have heard no really valid objection to it. There is, of course, the usual cry from those who have a chronic fear of extra assessments, but I think that the cost of this work will prove insignificant in comparison with its benefits. Merchants and owners on One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street naturally do not view the bill with any great amount of favor, because they fear that some of the business and travel that now has to come their way may be diverted to One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street. This, however, is a short-sighted policy, and whatever injury may be done in that direction will be more than counteracted by the increased development of Washington Heights."

To Abolish Catharine Market.

Assemblyman Weekes introduced a bill to-night authorizing the Sinking Fund Commission of New York City to discontinue Catharine Market and cause to be removed the market sheds on Catharine Slip preparatory to improving it for slip purposes. The Board of Public Improvement is empowered to institute condemnation proceedings to acquire the property lying between the westerly line of Cherry Street, the easterly line of South Street, the southerly line of Catharine Street, and the northerly line of Catharine Slip.

FOSBURG OUT ON BAIL.

Family Stands by the Man Accused of Killing His Sister.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Jan. 28.—Robert S. Fosburg, charged with killing his sister, May Fosburg, was bailed shortly after 11 o'clock this morning. The bonds, which originally were placed at $20,000, but which were reduced to $12,000 on Saturday night, were furnished by Jamea M. Burns and Arthur A. Mills, prominent business men of this city. These two men are secured by a check from the Stanley Electric Manufacturing Company, which was given to the young man's father on account, in consideration of his contract with the company for the erection of new buildings.

Young Fosburg went to the Hotel Wellington immediately after his release and there met the members of his family. He refused to make any statement whatever in regard to the case. Ex-District Attorney Charles E. Hibbard has been retained as counsel by the Fosburg family.

COTTON MARKET CORNERED

January Advances 255 Points During the Trading on 'Change.

SQUEEZE WITHOUT PRECEDENT

"Spot" is Practically Unaffected by the Speculative Fluctuations—Great Excitement Prevails.

A "corner" in the January option caused the greatest excitement on the Cotton Exchange yesterday, and the shorts were badly squeezed. On Saturday January cotton sold at 10.20, and it opened yesterday at 10.30. The quotation was steadily advanced until, at 11 o'clock, an hour after the opening, the remarkable figure of 12.75 was reached, an advance of 255 points from the opening. Afterward the quotation eased off to 11.50 on reports that the corner would be broken.

The corner was managed so well and quietly that the shorts had no idea that the squeeze was on until they were driven to cover. The bulls—known as the New Orleans clique—proceeded with great caution, and at the close of the market on Saturday were in a position to begin operations. As soon as the Exchange opened they showed their hands by marking up the January options to 10.30. A good deal of short selling came in even at this price, and continued on a rising market until the price was 12.25. Then, amid the greatest uproar and excitement, the price leaped between sales to 12.50, and then to 12.75. It was said by old traders that it was the most merciless clique that ever manipulated a market in this city.

From the highest point the price broke to 11.50 on a report that the corner would be broken by large New England houses, who were said to be shipping to New York enough to meet all contracts. A story that what was lacking would be sent from the South was met with jeers of derision, founded on the knowledge that cotton could not get here in time for the settling up, even if shipped by the fastest freight trains running from that section.

Something of a sensation was then sprung by the statement that the cotton was coming by express. The bears maintained that at the present prices express rates could easily be covered. A large amount of cotton changed hands during the excitement. The shorts added 30,000 bales to their liabilities, and covered afterward to the extent of 70,000 bales. The remaining shortage was estimated at 100,000 bales.

The squeeze had been threatened for some time. A week ago there was a very large outstanding short interest in the option, but most of it had been covered Friday and Saturday. That which remained to-day was largely for New England, Chicago, and Southern speculators who had been skeptical of any further advance, and who had been holding off until the last day in the expectation that the deal would collapse.

All the time the squeeze was in progress spot cotton was selling around 10 cents. The game was therefore a speculative one purely in the January option, in which the bulls were enabled to win with ease and carry off a handsome profit. There was light trading in the rest of the options and a slight sympathetic advance of about 7 points in February, March, and May deliveries.

The extraordinary conditions developed by the corner, with the consequent rushing of cotton to this city from the South for delivery on the January contracts, has given the Inspection Bureau of the New York Cotton Exchange a great deal of extra work. Superintendent King issued a notice yesterday requesting the members of the Exchange having samplers and weighers who are disengaged at the present time to notify him at once, so that the help thus offered may be made immediately available by the Inspection Bureau.

Speculators declared at the end of the day that the "squeeze" was without precedent in the history of the present Exchange.

THE "DIVVERS" EAT BEEFSTEAK

Second District Leader's Association Has a Dinner and a Roaring Time Withal.

The members of the Patrick Divver Association met last night at their headquarters, 59 Madison Street, and there was "a little beefsteak dinner" of some 700 pounds of steak, which was distributed freely among 400 solid Tammany Hall men of the Second District. They appeared at 9 o'clock, and they ate, and they stood around the halls and they ate, and they listened to jokes and laughter and song, and they ate, and they ate, and ate till there was nothing left of those 700 pounds but pleasant recollections.

The old hall, the scene of hard-fought political ward battles, was gayly decorated for the occasion. American flags and flags of all nations draped the walls. Gaudy garlands of red, white, and blue paper, weighted with Japanese lanterns, dangled from the ceiling. The stage at the west end of the hall was backed by an American flag, and, in illuminated letters, the name of the association. A picture of "Paddy" Divver himself was on an easel in a corner of the stage, and smiled complacently on the piano player, a man who made a fiddle wail, and through banks of tobacco smoke and on the beer kegs and the beefsteak emporium in the other end of the hall.

Beefsteak floated in the very atmosphere. Its odors came out of the doors of No. 59 in redolent waves and were wafted up and down the street. Within the vestibule it was beefsteak from the word "go," and as each newcomer arrived, before he took time to turn down his coat collar, he lined up at the emporium. The steaks had undergone a special training for the occasion, and were in the hands of experts whose specialty is to prepare beefsteak dinners. For three weeks the steak had been stored on ice to make it tender, and tender it was. Along the length of the hall rows of benches had been placed and these were soon filled. From the seats the diners were within reaching distance of huge bouquets of celery and took handfuls many times and often. For celery was the flower of the night. There was no toast master and there were no set speeches, but there was an announcer and there was "talent" to amuse the crowd.

Meanwhile the audience was enjoying itself drowning the songs and the "character speeches" of the "talent." Down on the bowling alleys of the club two teams, the "Dunns" and the "Divers" were fighting a friendly duel, between mouthfuls and mugfuls, with the pins. The "Dunns" were a team from the Delaware Club. They lost both games to their hosts, but the match will be replayed on a night when there is no beefsteak dinner.

BOY'S SKULL FRACTURED.

Thomas Lafferty, ten year old, is dying at his home at 1,877 Second Avenue from the effects of a fracture of the skull at the base of the brain, received during a game among playmates on the street last Wednesday. The boy who is alleged to have struck the fatal blow is Charles Dresser, fourteen years old, of 1,671 Second Avenue. He is under arrest.

The story told by the dying boy is that he and some other boys were playing a game known as "cops and robbers." He and Louis Vogel, ten years old, of 1,871 Second Avenue, were the "cops" and Ardo Dresser, ten years old, a brother of Charles Dresser, was the "robber." Lafferty and Vogel, in their rôle of officers of the law, chased the robber to the doorway of his home, where he rang the bell. A moment later the two "cops" were upon him, and were trying to arrest him when his brother Charles came out on the stoop. Seeing his brother wrestling with the two boys, it is alleged, he struck young Lafferty a blow between the eyes, knocking him down.

Lafferty went home and told his parents about the matter, but they paid no attention to it. The following day the boy went to school, but on Friday he complained of being ill and began vomiting. A doctor was called in, and said the boy had a concussion of the brain. He gradually grew worse, and on Sunday the physician found that the lad had a fracture of the skull and told the parents to lay the matter before the police.

Detective Reid of the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station arrested young Dresser, who stoutly denied that he had struck Lafferty. He was taken before the injured boy, who said that he had struck him, and also before young Vogel, who made the same charge. Then Dresser was committed to the Children's Society to await the result of Lafferty's injuries. The Coroner has been notified to take the injured boy's ante-morten statement.

ALONE ON DESERT ISLAND

Reported Unhappy Plight of Four American Contract Workmen.

Went to Navassa, in the Caribbean Sea, for the Purpose of Laboring in the Phosphate Beds.

Four Americans, James A. Woodward, William A. Humphrey, John Hill, and John A. Bell, all of Baltimore, Md., were sent to Navassa Island in October last by the Navassa Company and have since been shut out from communication with the outside world.

Navassa is a small island of the Caribbean Sea off the west coast of Haiti at the southwest entrance of the Windward Passage. Its latitude is 18 degrees 25 minutes north, longitude 75 degrees 2 minutes west. It was discovered several years ago by Capt. Coleman of Baltimore, who planted the American flag upon it, and claimed it as his property. He subsequently sold the island to a syndicate for $200,000. This syndicate organized the Navassa Phosphate Company, expecting to reap a rich harvest from the guano deposits on the island.

Three hundred laborers, chiefly negroes, were sent to the island from Baltimore. As the place was destitute of vegetation the laborers were compelled to depend solely upon the company's stores. The first shipment of the guano demonstrated that it was of no great commercial value and the principal shareholders in the syndicate dropped out. The result was that the stores on the island were not replenished, and the laborers, believing that the white men in charge of them were deliberately withholding provisions, attacked and killed every white man on the island. This was in the Summer of 1889. The United States man-of-war Galena stopped at the island shortly afterward and brought the starving laborers back to the United States.

On Sept. 22 last the island, together with its guano deposits and all rights pertaining thereto, were sold at public auction by Peter F. Meyer, at 111 Broadway, to Wm. B. H. Jefferson of Baltimore, Md., with offices in the Fidelity Building there, became the purchaser of the island, paying for it the sum of $25,000. He took into partnership Capt. Wyatt Owen, also of Baltimore. James A. Woodward was engaged as Superintendent, and with William A. Humphrey, John Hill, and John A. Bell, was sent to the island. At the time of their departure the Atlas Steamship Company, it is alleged, agreed to take the men back at any time for the sum of $110.

Mr. Jefferson, shortly afterward, realized that there was no money to be made out of the guano, and in order to avoid further liability, he sold the island to Capt. Owen for $1,000, taking the latter's note for that amount, payable in one year, with the privilege of renewing the same at the expiration of that time should Capt. Owen be unable to meet the note. Mr. Jefferson also asked the steamship company to send a ship and take the four men off the island. Capt. Owen, however, countermanded this order, claiming sole proprietorship of the island.

The steamship company is willing to take the men off the island, but hesitates to become involved with Capt. Owen. Mr. Jefferson has retained Lawyer Henry W. Shomas of 31 Nassau Street, this city, to protect his interests. Speaking of the case, Lawyer Shomas said yesterday:

"By the terms of the dissolution agreement of the partnership of Jefferson and Owen, Jefferson was to be absolved from any further liability, except for the return of these men to New York, for which an agreement was made by him with the Atlas Steamship Company of this city for $110, a check for which sum was sent to that company and demand made that they bring back the men unless the men were willing to stay and work for Owen, to which Jefferson had no objection so long as they should have received notice of the dissolution of copartnership which was given to the steamship company to deliver. But when the company was about to perform its cont

PHILIPPINE QUESTION AS MR. TOWNE SEES IT

Minnesota Senator Makes His First, Last, and Only Speech.

Pleads for Self-Government for the Filipinos—His Successor, Mr. Clapp, Then Presents His Credentials.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The Senate turned from the grind of appropriation bills to-day to listen to a speech, which partook of the character of an ovation, from Senator Towne of Minnesota. As his reputation as an orator had preceded him, there was much interest in his speech to-day, which was in advocacy of his resolution for a cessation of hostilities in the Philippines. The floor was crowded with Senators and members of the House of Representatives, and the galleries, public and private, were crowded to overflowing. The Senators on the Democratic side gave Mr. Towne marked attention. On the Republican side the attention was less noticeable.

In opening his address Mr. Towne referred to the petition presented to the Senate a few days ago by 2,006 Filipinos for a cessation of hostilities and for the granting of independence to the people of the Philippines.

While discussing events which led the United States forces to the Philippines, Mr. Towne referred with particularity to the charge that Aguinaldo had sold his country to the Spaniards for a bribe. He declared the accusation was "gratuitous in the calumny, when we consider that the official publications of our own Government contradict and destroy it." The Senator declared that we were in alliance with the Filipinos, "an alliance sought by ourselves, availed of by us for our own advantage, and finally, to our everlasting shame in the estimation of honorable men, repudiated by us when we found it no longer necessary and when lust of empire had so blunted our moral sensibilities that we could mount from an act of perfidy to the grand larceny of a nation."

Referring to Admiral Dewey's denial that he had ever treated the insurgents as allies, Mr. Towne said sarcastically: "I fear the honest sailor's terminology has suffered from recent contact with the nice discriminations of Administration diplomacy."

Mr. Towne declared that upon the arrival of Gen. Merritt at Manila "a distinct change of tone was observable" between the United States officials and the Filipinos, the altered attitude being so marked as to force the conclusion "that part of Gen. Merritt's prearranged task was to manoeuvre out of an awkward friendliness with Aguinaldo and thus to reach a footing for the convenient development of some secret policy with which he had come fresh-freighted from Washington."

If there was doubt of the prearrangement of the plan it was banished, in Mr. Towne's opinion, by the President himself. The third article of the protocol with Spain read: "The United States will occupy and hold the city, bay, and harbor of Manila pending the conclusion of a treaty of peace which shall determine the control, disposition, and government of the Philippines."

Yet despite that definite provision, the President, the Senator urged, issued on Dec. 21, 1898, his famous "benevolent assimilation proclamation."

"If we are bent on slaughter," said he, "let it be in open guise. If we lust for this people's land, let us not glaze our enterprise with false and sinister pretense. Rather let us boldly raise the sombre flag of international piracy, whistle scruple down the wind, and then close in upon our feeble victim to the cries 'loot and glory.'"

Senator Towne then argued at length in support of his contention that the Filipinos were capable of governing themselves, pointing out that 80 per cent. of the population of Luzon can read and write and boiling that the government established by Aguinaldo was strong, symmetrical, and progressive, even in the difficult and disturbing conditions which surrounded it. He declared that the Filipino statesmen "would creditably meet almost any emergency of administration in even the most advanced government and would have dignified and ornamented the early struggles for nationality of any people known to history."

"There is excellent reason to believe that even at this day the existing Filipino government, low as it is in estate and migratory to some extent as to location, exercises a wide and respected authority in the Philippine Islands, and is obeyed quite generally by the local authorities in the interior. There is not the slightest ground for believing that any appreciable impression has been made upon the determination of the Philippine people to resist us to the end. There is no evidence that any strong native pro-American element has ever existence whatever. As the result of two years of wasting war we occupy about one-five-hundredth part of that archipelago. No district is really 'pacified.' We hold the ground our troops stand on, practically nothing more.

"During the campaign of 1900 it was a favorite argument against the opponents of the Administration policy that they were keeping alive a smouldering 'rebellion' in the Philippines. The newspapers and magazines made much of this foolish argument, and in many a pulpit where the gospel of the bullet has supplanted the Christianity of the Bible the pious anathema of prudent priesthood rose to Heaven on the wings of prayer."

Mr. Towne then declared that after the elections the resistance in the Philippines increased, and it had been announced in the Senate within a week that 60,000 American soldiers would be needed in the islands for an indefinite period.

"It was a habit of the defenders of the American policy to sneer at the term 'imperialism,' he said, but it could not be sneered away.

"The retention of the Philippines will commit us to the whole programme of empire. There is a law among nations, as Hamlet says there is among men, by which a bad appetite grows by what it feeds on. No nation in history has resisted it, and to every nation that has yielded to it it has brought disaster. Are we, with all the lessons of history before us, to prove a victim of this insatiate passion, the greatest, most lamentable, the most gratuitous sacrifice in all human tragedy?

"I do not wish to convey the impression that in my opinion the present policy will at one fell swoop convert this Republic into an empire in fact. But I do say that the seeds of empire lurk in this policy, and that time and favoring environment will and must bring them to their flower and fruit unless we make a seasonable prevention. God speed the day when the American people shall have the moral courage to do their civic duty, and with their sovereign voice declare that this unholy war for greed and empire shall be stopped, and that no soldier of the United States shall ever again in all our history be sent to other lands to war on people fighting for their liberty."

Immediately following Mr. Towne's speech, the credentials of his successor, Mr. Clapp of Minnesota, were presented, and, after being sworn in, the new Senator took his seat and Mr. Towne retired.

NATIONAL BANK CHARTERS.

Consideration of Bill to Extend Them Blocked in the House.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—In the House to-day Mr. Broslus, (Rep., Penn.,) Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, called up his bill to extend National bank charters for twenty years. Mr. Richardson, (Dem., Tenn.,) the minority leader, demanded an explanation of the bill, and Mr. Broslus explained that the charters of 1,713 National banks would expire July 14, 1902. Mr. Richardson objected.

"Does the gentleman understand," asked Mr. Broslus, "that this bill is absolutely necessary to continue the existence of the National banks?"

"If it is absolutely necessary," replied Mr. Richardson, "why has it not been brought in before this time? I object to its consideration by unanimous consent."

SPANISH WAR CLAIMS BILL.

House Postpones Action on Measure Providing for an Investigation.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The most interesting feature of the day in the House was an attempt to secure a vote upon the Senate bill to appoint a commission to consider and adjudicate the claims of United States citizens against Spain arising out of the war with Spain, which this Government assumed by Section 7 of the treaty of Paris, and which already aggregate $28,000,000. The House at the last session recommitted a similar bill, with instructions to report back a bill to confer jurisdiction in these cases upon the Court of Claims.

Mr. Haugen (Rep., Iowa,) of the Committee on War Claims secured consideration of a substitute for the bill drawn in accordance with the instructions of the House, and then appealed to the House to vote down the substitute and pass the Senate bill. There was some intimation of sharp practice over this mode of procedure, but the matter was settled temporarily by postponing consideration of the bill until next Monday.

WARM TALK IN THE HOUSE.

Delegate Flynn and Stephens of Texas Have a Wordy War.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—A rather sensational passage occurred in the House today between Mr. Flynn, delegate from Oklahoma, and Mr. Stephens, (Dem., Texas.) It arose out of the refusal of Mr. Stephens, early in the day, to give unanimous consent for the consideration of an Oklahoma bill. Mr. Flynn declared that the proposed legislation was imperative, and if it failed he (Mr. Stephens) would be responsible. He then attacked Mr. Stephens personally, charging that he had surreptitiously placed in the Fort Hall Reservation bill a section which no one knew was in the bill.

"Then," he continued, "he telegraphed a man in Texas that he had gotten the section in the bill, advised him to throw up his job, locate a claim, and said that he (Stephens) was 'in with it.'"

"Any one who makes that statement, no matter who he is," shouted Mr. Stephens, jumping to his feet, "tells a willful falsehood."

"Do you deny that you telegraphed a blacksmith to that effect?" asked Mr. Flynn.

"I reiterate that it is a falsehood."

"I received my information of the man to whom the blacksmith sold out," replied Mr. Flynn, "but, if the gentleman says it is untrue, I will take his word for it."

NIGHT SESSIONS IN THE SENATE.

May Be Necessary to Dispose of the Indian Appropriation Bill.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The Senate today considered the Indian Appropriation bill, but made little progress with it. The discussion ran chiefly to the subject of irrigation. Mr. Chandler (Rep., N. H.,) gave notice that if the Indian Appropriation bill was not disposed of to-morrow he would ask for night sessions.

Shortly before 6 o'clock the Senate found itself without a quorum. At the same time motions to adjourn were defeated, and the Sergeant at Arms was dispatched to summon absent Senators. After much delay, the Senate finally at 6 o'clock adjourned until to-morrow.

Postal Bill Passed by the House.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The major portion of the day in the House was occupied in the transaction of District of Columbia business. The bill to revise and codify the postal laws, which has been under consideration at intervals for ten days, was finally passed to-day. Its friends succeeded in confining the measure strictly to the purpose for which it was framed—a codification and revision of existing laws. All attempts to amend it in any vital particular failed.

Hyatt Patent Extension Bill Killed.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The House Committee on Patents to-day killed the bill to extend the Hyatt patent. The bill has attracted a great deal of attention, owing to the fact that over 250 cities and towns are paying royalties on the patent in connection with their filtration plants. The bill was vigorously opposed by the municipalities interested. Extended hearings were given. The vote in committee to-day stood 6 to 2 in favor of indefinite postponement. Mr. Sulzer of New York and Mr. Jack of Pennsylvania voted against the motion to postpone.

Presidential Nominations.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The President to-day sent the following nominations to the Senate:

Daniel B. McCann of Montana, to be Register of the Land Office at Rampart City, Alaska.

Thomas B. Hildebrand of California, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Saint Michael, Alaska.

Army—Artillery promotions: Major E. V. Andruss, Fourth Artillery, to be Lieutenant Colonel. Capt. Frank Thorp, Fifth Artillery, to be Major.

First Lieut. John E. McMahon, Fourth Artillery, to be Captain.

Second Lieut. Fox Conner, Second Artillery, to be First Lieutenant.

Federation of Women's Clubs.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—Senator Hoar from the Committee on Judiciary to-day reported favorably the bill granting a charter to the Federation of Women's Clubs.

BALLOTS FOR SENATORS.

DOVER, Del., Jan. 28.—To-day's vote for two United States Senators by the Legislature in joint session showed no material change over the preceding ballots, each faction of the Republicans still holding its own, and the Democrats still voting as a unit.

HELENA, Mon., Jan. 28.—The vote for United States Senator to-day resulted: Mantle, Rep., 29; Frank, Dem., 22; scattering, 34.

SALEM, Oregon, Jan. 28.—The vote for Senator to-day was as follows: Corbett, 20; Smith, 24; McBride, 18; Herrman, 6; Moore, 2; Williams, 2; Fulton, 4; Lowell, 1; Orton, 1; absent, 2; not voting, 1.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 28.—The vote on United States Senator to-day was as follows: Allen, Fusion, 45; W. N. Thompson, Fusion, 33; Hitchcock, Fusion, 12; Grounse, 5; Currie, 18; Hinshaw, 12; Melklejohn, 25; Martin, 6; Rosewater, 17; D. M. Thompson, 35; scattering, 15.

MR. MAHANY MAY CONTEST.

Defeated Congressman Interested in Reapportionment—He Sees Mr. Platt.

Congressman R. B. Mahany of Erie County is in the city, and had a talk with Senator Platt yesterday. Mr. Mahany was a candidate for re-election last November, and was beaten by 300 votes in a district that gave the Democratic Presidential electors a plurality of 4,000.

It is possible that Mr. Mahany may make a contest. He is very much interested in the reapportionment of the Congressional districts in his county, where the number is to be increased by one.

There is some talk of nominating Mr. Mahany for Mayor of Buffalo.

NEW CONGRESS DISTRICTS.

County Republicans Will Confer with Members of Legislature.

For nearly two hours yesterday the Executive Committee of the Republican County Committee discussed the proposed reapportionment of Congressional districts in this State. On general lines the committee favored the creation of one district out of the Nineteenth, Twenty-first, and Twenty-third Assembly Districts and another of the Twenty-seventh, Twenty-ninth, and part of the Thirty-first.

It was finally decided to have President Morris and Executive Chairman Ten Eyck confer with the State leaders and members of the Legislature and to prepare a report.

Young Republicans Appoint Committee.

At a meeting of the Brooklyn Young Republican Club, held in the Johnston Building, on Nevins Street, last night, a committee of three was appointed to confer with committees from other organizations with regard to plans for the coming campaign against Tammany Hall. The committee comprises Judson Wall, John West, and Chester B. Lawrence.

NEW JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

House Passes Bill Exempting Veterans from Certain Taxes.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 28.—The House tonight passed the bill giving cities the power to establish public baths, and also granting certain tax exemptions to veterans of the Spanish war.

Among the bills introduced in the Senate were these: By Mr. Hutchinson, appropriating $50,000 for the establishment of a sanitarium for consumptives; by Mr. Hutchinson, appropriating $150,000 for an armory in Trenton.

FILIPINOS PETITION FOR CIVIL GOVERNMENT

Directory of the Federal Party Appeals to Congress.

Growing Sentiment for Peace, It Is Said, Will Be Checked If Action Is Not Taken Now.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—When the Senate convened to-day the presiding officer, Mr. Frye, called attention to a dispatch received from the Directory of the Federal Party in the Philippines, praying that action be taken on the measure to enable the President to establish a civil government in the islands. The cablegram, which was read, is as follows:

MANILA, Jan. 27.

President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington:

Accessions to the Federal Party by thousands in all parts of the archipelago. The attitude of the hitherto irreconcible press and general public opinion show that the labors of the party to bring peace will soon be crowned with success. Until now the political parties have attempted formation on plans more or less questioning American sovereignty. Our platform makes the main plank sovereignty of the United States with liberty to each citizen to pursue peacefully his political ideas.

The hour of peace has sounded. On our platform are grouped many Filipinos of hitherto irreconcilable ideas, but some more obstinate decline to join, for, though willing to accept the sovereignty of the United States, the prospect of an indefinite continuance of the military government makes them distrust the purposes of the United States and delays their submission.

An adjournment of the present Congress without giving the President authority to establish a purely civil government, with the usual powers, and a postponement for at least a year of such government until the new Congress, will certainly confirm this distrust. The Directory of the Federal Party believes conferring such authority on the President would inspire confidence, hasten acceptance of the sovereignty of the Union, and the coming of peace. The Directory therefore prays both houses of Congress to authorize President McKinley to establish civil government whenever he believes it opportune.

MORE FILIPINOS SURRENDER.

MANILA, Jan. 28.—Reports from Southern Luzon say there is much dissaffection in the insurgent camps. A thousand persons swore allegiance to the United States in a church at Malabon Sunday.

Gallic's camp, near San Antonio, was surprised and attacked Friday by a detachment of the Fifteenth Infantry. The insurgents escaped, but a score of houses were destroyed.

Detachments of the Fourth Infantry and Fourth and Sixth Cavalry, with a platoon of Marines, have captured a hundred and forty identified insurgents and ladrones in Cavite Province.

Twenty wire repairers were attacked recently south of San Pablo by 300 insurgents, half of them armed with rifles. Two Americans were wounded and one was captured, but was subsequently rescued by reinforcements of the Forty-ninth Regiment. One native was killed, seven were wounded, and several were captured.

Valles, late Chief of Police of the Island of Cebu, who has been in hiding since August on account of his activity in the insurgents' interests, has taken his family to Hongkong. The other Cebu police have been compelled to swear allegiance or be deported. They have chosen the former.

Minor insurgent activities continue in Cebu and Bohol.

Gen. MacArthur this evening reviewed and addressed the Eleventh Cavalry. He highly complimented the troopers, who are the only cavalry volunteers, prior to their departure for home.

Gen. Funston reports that practically all the organized insurrectos in his district have been dispersed, with the exception of disconnected bands in the mountains.

Sixty-five more rebels in the Island of Panay have surrendered to the United States authorities at Cabatuan.

PHILIPPINE LEGISLATION.

MANILA, Jan. 28.—The Philippine Commission has passed an act annulling that portion of the Spanish Code which disqualified Judges and Magistrates for trying certain cases on account of alleged incompetency. The act declares that the Judges are incompetent only when pecuniarily interested in the litigation or related to a litigant.

The General Criminal and Civil Codes are almost completed.

The hearing on the Municipal Government bill was finished to-day, and the measure will be enacted on Wednesday. Only two natives objected to the Church property taxation feature, and no objection was entered on behalf of the Church or other organization.

Manila Editor Is Deported.

MANILA, Jan. 28.—George T. Rice, editor of The Daily Bulletin, who was ordered by Gen. MacArthur to be deported because of the publication in his paper of allegations against Lieut. Commander William Braunersreuther, Captain of the Port, sailed today. It was ordered that he be held as a prisoner until his arrival at San Francisco.

POOR PEOPLE THEIR PREY.

Sharpers Fleece Candidates for City Employ, Alleging Influence with Civil Service Examiners.

Chief Examiner F. G. Ireland of the Municipal Civil Service Commission is incensed because poor people are being fleeced by sharpers who go around claiming to have influence with the Civil Service Examiners and exact sums of money on promises that they will certainly pass the examination. Chief Examiner Ireland made public the following letter received by him recently:

Kindly inform me how I can obtain a position in regardless to pass the Civil Service Examination. Can I obtain a position within a year's time from now on? before I commence to prepare for the Exam. I would like to know it plain. If any money is required. No objection whatever, will pay. I am willing to try very hard for the position. Hope to hear an advice from you. Kindly answer.

"I venture to ask the newspapers to publish this letter because its evident sincerity and unconsciousness show that there is among a certain class of persons a fixed belief that bribery is the only path to appointment. It is upon this belief that a particularly contemptible class of swindlers are trading. They fleece these poor wretches out of their scanty pennies on the assurance that they have the requisite pull.

"It is with the hope of interfering to some extent with the industry of these latter gentry that I ask you to publish the fact that when such a communication is received, the writer's name is noted and no application from him for any position whatever is thereafter accepted."

MUST PAY OR GO TO PRISON.

Henry S. Bergman was yesterday adjudged in contempt of court for failure to pay a judgment of $831.38, obtained against him on surety on a mechanic's lien, he having given a bond in proceedings instituted by Franklin L. and Howard R. Sheppard, who put in ranges in a building on West One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Street. He will be sent to prison if he does not satisfy the judgment, and kept there until it is paid.

Bergman testified that he had formerly been in business speculating in real estate, but had been, since April last, a clerk with a cutler in Broome Street at a salary of $10 a week. His real estate, upon which he justified as surety, consisted of a water front at South Beach, and he had not seen it since 1893, when he became involved in an ejectment suit. He had no other property since January, 1896.

Justice Leventritt says it appears that Bergman had given similar worthless bonds in the United States courts to release liens, and that, after judgments had been obtained against him the courts found fraud had been committed by him. This bond he considers equally worthless. He therefore adjudges him in contempt.

The enthusiasm of Pianola owners would indicate that those who have not yet purchased this instrument are depriving themselves of more genuine enjoyment than they realize.

The Pianola in England

A concensus of opinion which cannot be explained except by the fact that the Pianola affords pleasure to those of culture and refinement. Scarcely a week passes without two or three new names of those prominent in English society being added to the lists of Pianola purchasers.

We publish here a list of some of our patrons in England, with the additions which have been made during the past month:

Two years ago the Pianola was unknown in England. To-day it is found in the homes of a large percentage of the nobility.

Enthusiastic appreciation in England.

The fact that any one particular personage of royal or noble birth and cultured taste has purchased a Pianola for his own pleasure does not add to the value of the instrument. When, however, these representatives of culture and refinement, with wealth sufficient to procure whatever they desire, are unanimous in their appreciation of the Pianola, and purchase the instrument for their own homes, it represents a concensus of opinion which it is impossible to ignore.

Enthusiastic appreciation in this country

The popularity of the Pianola in this country is unprecedented in the history of any musical instrument.

While this enthusiasm manifested by the non-professionals is the result of the genuine enjoyment and pleasure derived from this dexterous little piano player, the Pianola has also passed the critical censorship of the musicians. They pronounce its renditions artistic in the true sense of the word. The achievement which most astonishes the musical authorities is the perfect control which the player exercises over expression. This preserves the player's individuality—at the same time he is relieved of the burden of technical execution.

Enthusiastic appreciation among musicians

Pianola in use with Upright Piano. Price $250.

The Pianola is an aid to musical education, as it develops a taste for the higher class of music by making it accessible at all times, but first and foremost the Pianola is a source of pleasure.

Pleasure to both novice and skilled musician.

It brings pleasure to both the skilled and the unskilled. To the former by increasing his repertory from perhaps a dozen pieces, which he can play well, to practically everything that has ever been written for the piano. It gives to the novice the enjoyment of actually producing music himself.

PRICE $250

It can be bought by moderate monthly payments if desired.

AGAINST CHICAGO "DITCH"

Demurrers of the State and Sanitary District Overruled.

Court Orders Defendants to Answer Missouri's Plaint that Flow of Sewage Is a Nuisance.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The United States Supreme Court rendered an opinion in the case of the Chicago Drainage Canal, overruling the demurrers filed in the case by the State of Illinois and the Chicago Sanitary District. The proceeding was brought by the State of Missouri against the State of Illinois and the Sanitary District, the end sought being to prevent the use of the canal because of its supposed pollution of the drinking water of St. Louis. The effect of the decision is to sustain the contention of the State of Missouri. The opinion was handed down by Justice Shiras. The Chief Justice, and Justices Harlan and White united in a dissenting opinion.

In his opinion Justice Shiras cited the original bill and the demurrer in the case. Then, taking up the case, he said that two questions are presented in it. The first of these was: "Whether the allegations of the bill disclose the case of a controversy between the State of Missouri and the State of Illinois and a citizen thereof within the meaning of the Constitution and the statutes of the United States which create and define the original jurisdiction of this Court," and the second, "whether if it be held that the allegations of the bill do present such a controversy, they are sufficient to entitle the State of Missouri to the equitable relief prayed for."

In passing upon the first of these points the Court presented the result of the examination of numerous authorities, saying in conclusion: "An inspection of the bill discloses that the nature of the injury complained of (the pollution of the drinking water of people of Missouri by the deposit of the sewage of Chicago into the Mississippi River through the drainage canal and the Illinois River) is such that an adequate remedy can only be found in this Court at the suit of the State of Missouri. It must surely be conceded that, if the health and comfort of the inhabitants of a State are threatened, the State is the proper party to represent and defend them.

"The health and comfort of large communities inhabiting those parts of the State situated on the Mississippi River are not alone concerned, but contagious and typhoidal diseases introduced into river communities may spread themselves throughout the territory of the State. Moreover, substantial impairment of the health and prosperity of the towns and cities of the State situated on the Mississippi, including its commercial metropolis, would injuriously affect the entire State."

Discussing the contention that the bill does not on its merits entitle the State of Missouri to the relief prayed for, Justice Shiras took up the argument that the drainage complained of is only problematical or contingent, and asked: "Can it be gravely contended that there are no preventive remedies by way of injunction or otherwise against injuries inflicted or experienced, but which would appear to be the natural result of acts of the defendants, which they admit or avow it to be their intention to commit?"

Continuing, he said that the relief prayed for by the bill was not merely against the creation of a nuisance, but also against its maintenance. "Our conclusion therefore is," he went on, "that the demurrers filed by the respective defendants cannot be sustained. The demurrers are overruled and leave is given to the defendants to file answers to the bill."

Chief Justice Fuller read the dissenting opinion, holding that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court could not be invoked in cases in which it appears that States are in direct antagonism and that this is not true in this case. He also said that it was "difficult to conceive what decree could be entered in this case which would bind the State of Illinois or control its action." He added:

"The act complained of is not a nuisance per se and the injury alleged to be threatened is contingent. As the channel has been in operation for a year it is probable that the supposed basis of complaint can now be tested. But it does not follow that the bill in its present shape should be retained. In my opinion both the demurrers should be sustained and the bill dismissed without prejudice to a further application as against the Sanitary District, if authorized by the State of Missouri."

Judge William M. Springer, counsel for the defendants, in speaking of the Court's action, said:

"To-day's decision merely brings the case to a point where it will have to be tried on its merits. The amended pleadings having been submitted, the court probably will appoint a commissioner to take testimony, and the plaintiffs will have to show what actual damages, if any, have been inflicted by the flow of the waters of Lake Michigan through the canal, which has been in operation for about a year.

"Our contention will be that, instead of inflicting damages, the flow of the lake water actually has improved the conditions in the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, both as to navigaton and from a sanitary standpoint. The defendants will have to prove the contrary to the satisfaction of a jury or to the satisfaction of the Court if a jury is waived. This being an original case, each side has a right to a jury trial. There has been but one jury trial heretofore in the United States Supreme Court."

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—President Alexander J. Jones of the Sanitary District, when advised of the Supreme Court's adverse decision in the Chicago Drainage Canal case, said:

"The decision is somewhat of a surprise to us, but, after all, it simply means that the case must now be tried on its merits. Henceforth the inquiry of the court will be directed to the question of whether or not the opening of this channel and the moving of Chicago sewage down the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers has really resulted in the pollution of the St. Louis water supply. If so, equity will justify the grievances of St. Louis and the State of Missouri and the Sanitary District will have to find some remedy to prevent further pollution.

"The Sanitary District of Chicago has expended $34,000,000 in the abiding faith that flowing water purifies by the principle of oxidation, and to dispute this is to dispute what we contend is an acknowledged scientific fact—at least acknowledged by all scientists the world over, except those of St. Louis. The Sanitary District will stand or fall by this principle, and we are prepared to face the issues in the United States courts of equity, which are now opened to the complaints of the citizens of St. Louis and the State of Missouri."

INDEPENDENCE OF CUBA

Talk of Extra Session to Consider Constitution Is Ridiculed.

A Senator Says Cuban Government Will Be Subjected to a Long Period of Probation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—"The talk about an extra session," said a Senator this afternoon, "is very weak when it is found necessary to refer to the importance of approving the Cuban Constitution as a reason for bringing the Fifty-seventh Congress together before the regular meeting day in December next. If that were the best reason for expecting the calling of an extra session, all reports to that effect could be dismissed at once as the feeblest of rumors."

As pointed out, later on, by this Senator, all that is known about the Cuban Constitution is that a draft, prepared by a committee of the Constitutional Convention, has been prepared and submitted to the convention for consideration. To expect Congress to form an opinion or express a belief about what will be done, or how soon anything will be done, under such circumstances, is preposterous, this Senator says. After this draft has been taken up it may be discussed for weeks before it is finally adopted, when a little time may be needed to whip it into style. Before that stage has been reached the fifty-sixth session of the United States Congress will have ended.

Administration Senators who have paid no attention to the extra session report say that when the Cuban Constitution is finished, excepting for the consent of the United States, the President and his Cabinet may desire time to ascertain, by examination, how its provisions will affect the United States as to its responsibilities and opportunities. Great care is bound to be observed, under our own self-imposed responsibility, to see that Cuba has a form of government promising stability and peace. Without stability, capital will be driven from the island, and that would annoy and perhaps ruin some American investors.

With a return to old revolutionary conditions or to new disturbances, the opportunities that the United States expected to secure for the resumption of trade with Cuba would be destroyed, and the intervention invited of powers that might make short work of taking from us the advantages rightfully secured by getting the island from Spain and giving it the chance to stand upon its own feet.

War Department information makes light of the talk about a withdrawal of troops before the Constitution is perfected or until a really stable Government has been in operation long enough to prove its stability and probable permanency. That a selected body of men can get together and make a Constitution is not considered proof that those men would be able to restrain the impulsive population if a revolutionist should stir up the easily agitated part of the people.

While the Administration is fully determined to give the Cubans all the help possible to enable them to assume the full responsibility for the government of the island, it is not blind to the fact that Cuba has been but a short time quite free to discuss problems of government, and that only a very few men have had any experience in administrative work.

"The fact is," said a Senator who has always favored ultimate Cuban independence, "we have been going too fast with this Cuban problem, and we have given the Cubans the impression that they were not to be subject to a prolonged probation. That such should have been the case no one can doubt. Just how to correct our mistake, after having urged the Cubans to prepare to take over the island without assistance, is more than I am prepared to say, but I will say that we must not make the second blunder of permitting a revolutionary outbreak after we have left the island and then accept the distasteful and expensive task of making a new campaign in Cuba with the Cubans as our enemies."

Detroit to Chicago by Trolley.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 28.—The Detroit and Chicago Traction Company filed articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State to-day. Duchess of Manchester Nearly Well.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 28.—The Duchess of Manchester, who has been confined to her rooms in the Palace Hotel since Saturday night, owing to an attack of sore throat, has almost entirely recovered and will go to Monterey to-morrow or next day. The Duke expresses his annoyance at the exaggerated reports of her slight illness which have been circulated.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL

"Barbara Frietchie" Put Forward on the Big Academy Stage.

Effie Ellsler in the Title Role—An Already Old Sudermann Play at the German Theatre.

Clyde Fitch's "Barbara Frietchie" is not essentially a war play or a stirring melodrama. It is rather a domestic tragedy, with love as its dominant and all pervading theme, love overcoming all obstacles and triumphant in death, and it does not lend itself so readily to exhibition on a large stage as plays like "Monte Cristo" and "Quo Vadis." But there is enough of the bustle and panoply of war, and almost enough of melodramatic device in the play to make it acceptable to the Academy's huge and mixed audiences when it is as vigorously acted there as it is now by Effie Ellsler and her associates. The piece is reproduced in the Fourteenth Street house with all the pictorial accessories employed last Winter at the Criterion, and it must be admitted that the two street scenes show better on the big stage. The room scenes are less effective.

Few changes have been made in the play. It is noticeable, though, that Barbara does not confess now that in her anger she tore the banner of the brave into strips. That will not do with the Academy's gallery boys. In their patriotic condemnation of that treason they would forget to admire her heroic act of piecing and sewing it all together again.

Miss Ellsler, always an uncommonly efficient and sympathetic actress, denotes all of Barbara's traits intelligibly and gracefully, lacking neither power nor pathos in the tragic episodes that lead to the drama's touching pictorial close. She is still the trimmest and daintiest of heroines, but the buoyant charm of Julia Marlowe is not hers, and that charm must ever be associated with the heroine of Fitch's pretty play.

Frank Weston is a rather mature hero, but he, too, is efficient, and the remainder of the cast is at least adequate. So that the general verdict will be that the play is well worth seeing again in its new environment, if only for the sake of the pictures, while those who did not see it last year will doubtless not miss the little subtleties of expression which seemed essential in its performance at the Criterion, but are lost in the big audience room of the Academy. There was plenty of applause last night.

IRVING PLACE THEATRE.

Sudermann's "The End of Sodom" Revived for a Few Performances.

In the decade that separates his "Sodom's Ende" from his "Johannisfeuer," Herman Sudermann's technique has developed, but neither his imagination nor his observation has measurably improved. The earlier play was revived for a few performances, and with an efficient cast, last night at the Irving Place Theatre, where, doubtless, his newest and most highly praised drama will shortly have a hearing. As a matter of record, it may be well to recall that "The End of Sodom" was first acted here in the same theatre, then called the Amberg, in March, 1891.

The title relates directly to a painting made by the hero, an artist, for a rich and powerful female patron whose influence has helped him materially. Symbolically, the title refers to the havoc the vanity and weakness of the hero make of his life. He really loves Klärchen, his foster sister, though he has betrayed and deserted her. He is under the spell of his powerful enchantress, and, at her bidding, is about to marry her niece, Kitty, who is, however, smarter than her amiable aunt takes her to be. The marriage never takes place, though. There is the inevitable marplot in the person of the patient and honest true lover of Klärchen, and he avenges the wrong done to that poor girl after she has killed herself.

The influence of Ibsen is strong in the subject, and drift of the play, if not in its construction, which is rather loose. The talk in the Barszinowski salon is not all essential in the development. Five acts and six tableaus is rather too much of a good thing in a modern prose play, and the "satire" of "Sodom's Ende" is already rather faded.

The cast last night included Hedwige Lange as the enchantress, Ada Barszinowski; Max Hanseter as her complacent husband, Adolf Hofmann, who staged the play, as Dr. Weisse; Franz Klerschner and Meta Bunger as the artist's plain old parents, Adolf Zimmerman as the hero, Willy, and Yona Grahn as Klärchen.

"LES HUGUENOTS" ONCE MORE.

Meyerbeer's Favorite Work Sung at the Metropolitan Last Night.

Tradition rides close in the saddle, and it takes a mighty shock to overset it. There is a tradition that Meyerbeer's opera, "Les Huguenots," is one especially adapted to the display of remarkable voices and vocal brilliancy. This tradition is accompanied by a corollary to the effect that the work is always finely sung. Therefore many persons go to any performance of "Les Huguenots" convinced that they are about to hear something out of the ordinary in the way of singing. Last night's audience—or o considerable part of it—appeared to be of this mind, and therefore the applause was of a most enthusiastic kind. It fell alike upon the just and the unjust. The latter screened the former so thoroughly that they had not much joy of the night. The truth is that last evening's presentation of Meyerbeer's work was unfortunate. There was a cast of competent artists, some of them really great, and yet none of them did what they can do in better circumstances. Nearly all of them seemed tired, most of them sang flat or sharp, and at least one was careless. The chorus was palpably weary, and when the women in the beginning of the third scene lost the pitch entirely and sang in four or five different keys, they did only what the principals had previously been doing, but they did it all at once. The effect was gruesome.

It is difficult to report individual merits in such a case, but the honors of the evening went easily to Mr. Plançon, whose art in St. Bris never failed him, though his voice seemed unusually hard. Mme. Melba, who was in good voice, was reprehensibly careless in her garden scene aria, and her singing was not what should be expected from a vocalist of her rank. It ought to be recorded right here that she was applauded and cheered as if she had given a dazzling display of vocal virtuosity. Perhaps in such circumstances she was not altogether to blame for further carelessness. In the finale of the scene she sang out with unusual power, and she was very handsomely attired as the Queen. Mme. Bréval was the Valentine. Her big, full-bodied voice ought to have been well suited to the part, but her peculiarly defective vocal method prevented her from achieving results pleasing to the judicious. She sang stridently at times, and again with choked tones, while occasionally her tremolo was extreme. She aided in the general cacophony by singing out of tune occasionally. Her acquaintance with the routine of the part was not large, and her poses and gestures were deficient in variety. There was warmth in her work, however, and it was that which carried weight with her hearers.

Mr. Saleza as Raoul was also affected by the general depression of the evening. It was a depression in pitch, and he did a good deal of flat singing. His phrasing was however, extraordinarily fine and unique in its breadth. Mr. Edouard de Reszke is always a commanding figure as Marcel, and he sang with judgment. He was not in his best voice. Mr. Sizes was a nasal and tremulous De Nevers. Mme. Louise Homer looked very well indeed as Urbain, the page, but her singing was far from satisfactory. She has no colorature at all, and this is essential in the music of Urbain. The minor parts were, of course, performed in a perfunctory manner. The orchestra discharged its duties efficiently and Mr. Flon conducted with authority.

Lillian Burkhart Reappears.

Miss Lillian Burkhart, who has long been missed from the local stage, returned last night and won a distinct success at Proctor's Palace Theatre in a charming little playlet, entitled "Captain Suzanne." Miss Burkhart's vivacious comedy talents were never seen to better advantage than in this dainty little play, which has the merit of being full of action. For a climax there is a sword duel, which Miss Burkhart, attired in the uniform of her husband, an officer in the French Army, fights with a Prussian officer, while her husband makes his escape.

THEATRES AND MUSIC HALLS.

DEWEY THEATRE.—The Merry Maiden Burlesquers made their appearance, preceding a long olio.

HUBER'S MUSEUM.—The programme was a long and an entertaining one. It included the projectoscope, reproducing the McGovern-Gans fight; the Leonzo Brothers, Tyrolean Quintet, and an aggregation.

AMERICAN THEATRE.—The performance of "Held by the Enemy" by the stock company of this theatre was greeted with generous appreciation by a large audience that attended last night. The play is presented in a manner calculated to please all.

EDEN MUSEE.—The figure of King Edward VII., as well as that of Queen Victoria lying in state, attracted considerable attention. New moving pictures were placed on view last night, and will be shown hourly at the exhibitions throughout the week.

HARLEM OPERA HOUSE.—"Papa's Wife," that most attractive musical comedy, with Anna Held in the leading rôle, began last evening its first and only engagement in New York this season, to a crowded house, which again laughed at and applauded its many bright things.

NEW YORK THEATRE.—Many new members were introduced in the programme last evening, important among them being Nina Farrington and Henry Bergman, in a sketch entitled "A Case of Divorce." In addition to the sketch, "The Giddy Throng," "The Devil's Dance," and a new olio were presented.

MURRAY HILL THEATRE.—The revival of "A Social Highwayman" yesterday delighted large audiences at both the afternoon and evening performances, and it was again demonstrated that the play meets the approval of the patrons of this house. Some elaborate and artistic stage settings have been provided.

HURTIG & SEAMON'S MUSIC HALL.—Three is an abundance of funmaking of an excellent order in the long vaudeville entertainment provided at this house. Maud Raymond distinguishes herself, as does George Fuller Golden. Others are George Evans, Alice Capatine, Binns and Binns, Rosford brothers, McCale and Daniels, and Bickel and Watson.

PROCTOR'S PALACE.—The topliner this week is Charles R. Sweet, the humorous burglar musician, in his comical specialty. The others were Cushman, Holcombe, and Curtis, in "The New Teacher"; Lew Hawkins minstrel jester; Montague and West, musical act; Hanley, McGownan, and Hanley, comedy trio; Gilbert Ssrony, the old maid, and Vera King, comedienne.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—Harry Lacy received a warm welcome when he made his appearance last evening in the character of Jack Manley in the revival of Joseph Arthur's melodrama, "The Still Alarm." The play seems to have lost none of its old-time attractiveness to theatregoers, and with its many innovations appeared to please the patrons of the house last night, who showed their approval on every possible occasion.

KOSTER & BIAL'S MUSIC HALL.—An interesting and entertaining programme was presented yesterday and was well received by the audience. The entire bill is composed of good acts, many of those taking part being well known in their particular specialties. Prof. Loris, champion sharpshooter; Clifford and Huth, Hope Booth, the Three Mortons, Smith and Fuller, St. Onge brothers, Clemence sisters, and numerous others appeared.

PROCTOR'S ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIFTH STREET THEATRE.—An unusually pleasing bill was offered yesterday, when Clayton White and Marie Stuart played their amusing farce, "Dickie." The balance of the entertainment included Hill and Hull, European grotesques; Carroll Johnson, clever blackface talker; Doherty's trained poodles, Lizzie B. Raymond, singing comedienne; Martine brothers, on the rebounding table; Howard brothers, banjoists; Hornmann, magician; Trask and Gladden, dancers, and others.

PROCTOR'S FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.—Al Leach, an eccentric comedian, proved successful yesterday in a farce that he appeared in, called "Examination Day at School." Miss Florence Reed, daughter of Roland Reed, delivered a capital monologue, which served admirably to introduce her to vaudeville audiences. The other features were Marcel's living basreliefs and pictures, Mlle. Delbosq, in her wire act with Arabian thoroughbred horses; Ralph Johnstone, the daring cyclist; Max Waldron, female impersonations; Frank Cushman, the up-to-date minstrel; Spencer Kelly, baritone, and Maddox and Wayne, comedians.

PROCTOR'S TWENTY-THIRD STREET THEATRE.—A fairyland farce, entitled "Pat and the Genii," giving Tom Nawn, a clever Irish comedian, a capital opportunity to create considerable laughter yesterday among the patrons of this house. The entire bill was noted for its odd features, which included Harry Watson and his company, in a German dialect farce, "The Two Flats"; Mr. and Mrs. Perkins Fisher, in "The Half-Way House"; Naomi Etherdo, direct from Europe, in a hand-balancing act; Benaro and Bailey, premier cakewalkers; the Three Mascagnos, European acrobats; Lew Simmons and Frank White, two funny black-face men, and Claudius and Corbin, banjoists.

KEITH'S UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—New acts of the first class and strictly novel are so rare in vaudeville nowadays that when one turns up, as was the case yesterday, it is greeted with acclaim by all. Consequently, a demonstration followed when Mme. de Sousa, assisted by a large chorus and orchestra, rendered the ballad entitled, "Dear Midnight of Love," a composition which is credited to the Hon. John J. Coughlin, an Alderman of Chicago. The remaining part of the bill included Eva Williams and Jack Tucker in their talking act entitled, "Skinny's Finish"; James O. Barron and his company in a new sketch called "A Thoroughbred"; Press Eldridge, Smith and Campbell, and others.

GRAND OPERA NEXT SEASON.

Everything Seems to Depend on Jean de Reszke.

To have or not to have grand opera next year at the Metropolitan Opera House is the question which at present is agitating the minds of Maurice Grau, his Directors, and the Directors of the Metropolitan Opera and Real Estate Company. The situation is apparently one which is very much in the balance, and from the best obtainable source it is said that the giving of a season depends to a great extent on what Jean de Reszke decides to do. He may return to this country next season and fill a farewell engagement, and he may remain abroad, and return here for the season of 1902 and 1903, making that his farewell engagement.

This question has not as yet been definitely decided upon by M. de Reszke. He has, however, decided not to sing in London at the conclusion of his season here, as has been his custom for the last three seasons, or ever since Maurice Grau assumed the directorate of Covent Garden.

A conference was held in the Directors' room of the Metropolitan Opera House last evening between some of the prominent Directors of the Metropolitan Opera and Real Estate Company and Maurice Grau, when the subject of next season's opera was discussed. At the conclusion of the meeting Mr. G. G. Haven was asked if any definite arrangement had been arrived at with Mr. Grau as to opera for next season. He absolutely refused to discuss the subject, except to say that the meeting was simply of an informal kind.

Mr. Grau was likewise uncommunicative.

A meeting was held yesterday afternoon by the Directors of the Metropolitan English Opera Company at the Metropolitan Opera House, when accounts and various other matters of no public interest were gone over. Several of the prominent artists who were identified with the disbanded company, and who claim to have contracts with Maurice Grau, called upon him yesterday to ascertain definitely what he intended to do with them, as they were prepared to fulfill their contracts. They were given no direct promises, and asked to call to-day, when Mr. Grau will inform them whether they will be retained for his organization or not.

"CYRANO DE BERGERAC" DISPUTE.

S. E. Gross Will Not Interfere with Production in Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—Samuel E. Gross, author of "The Merchant Prince of Corneville," which play, he alleges, Edmond Rostand used as the basis of "Cyrano de Bergerac," declares he will not interfere with the production of "Cyrano de Bergerac" by the Bernhardt-Coquelin company.

"I do not desire to interfere with the pleasures of the citizens of Chicago," said Mr. Gross. "Besides, I want to see the French production myself."

Mr. Gross intimated, however, that as soon as the French company had left off its production of Mr. Rostand's play in Chicago he would again take up his prosecution and carry it to a finish.

Sothern Appears in Detroit.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 28.—Since last Tuesday night, when the Grand Theatre in Cincinnati was destroyed by fire, E. H. Sothern has secured a complete set of scenery for his production of "Hamlet," and to-night gave a magnificent presentation of the play in the Detroit Opera House before a crowded house. Despite the handicap of incidental music which the company had never before heard, Mr. Sothern scored a great success and was called before the curtain at the end of the second act.

Enjoined from Producing "L'Aiglon."

Samuel Kalisch, counsel for Charles Frohman, late yesterday afternoon applied to Vice Chancellor Pitney, at Jersey City, for an injunction to prevent H. R. Jacobs from presenting an English version of "L'Aiglon" at his theatre in Newark. Mr. Jacobs was not represented by counsel, and the Vice Chancellor said that the defendant did not seem to have been properly notified. It would not, therefore, be just to grant an injunction restraining Mr. Jacobs from presenting the play in the evening. He granted a rule to show cause returnable at Chancery Chambers, in Newark, at 9:30 o'clock A. M. to-day.

The Actors' Fund Home.

The Actors' Home Committee of the Actors' Fund of America will meet at the rooms at 2 o'clock on Thursday afternoon in response to a call from President Louis Aldrich. The meeting is a special one, and has been called for the purpose of definitely deciding on the acceptance or rejection of a site for the proposed home. Although no less than forty sites were offered to the committee when the project was proposed, the choice has now dwindled down to three, within the limits of New York City. The site is to be not less than ten nor more than twenty acres in size.

MORE WOES FOR SCHLISMANN.

Man Accused of Robbing Lohmann Held on Another Charge.

William Schlismann, twenty-four years old, who was employed as a porter by William Lohmann of 122 West Seventy-fourth Street, and who was thought by his employer to be a "jewel" until he and $2,500 worth of jewelry disappeared at the same time, had a fresh complaint of larceny entered against him yesterday.

Mrs. L. A. Waterman, who keeps a boarding house at 241 West Forty-second Street, went to the West Side Court yesterday afternoon and said she believed Schlismann was a young man whom she employed three weeks under similar circumstances. Mrs. Waterman identified the man from a line of other prisoners, and told Magistrate Hogan that Schlismann had taken a serge sack coat valued at $10 belonging to one of her boarders, an overcoat valued at $15, a lady's gold watch valued at $75, and a pocketbook containing $3. The pocketbook was returned to her by mail the following morning.

"He was the nicest fellow I ever employed," said Mrs. Waterman; "a perfect gentleman, and always thoughtful. He was just lovely, and I am sorry for him."

Schlismann pleaded not guilty, but then broke down and wept and told Magistrate Hogan he would help Mrs. Waterman recover her property if she came to the prison and saw him privately to-day.

Schlismann pleaded not guilty, but then mann robbery on Saturday. He was held in $2,000 bail for trial on the original complaint, and yesterday he was held in $1,000 for examination to-morrow on Mrs. Waterman's charge.

TWO BOYS BREAK JAIL.

Locked Up in Jersey City on Friday, They Get Away Sunday Night.

Two small boys, prisoners in the Third Precinct Station in Jersey City, had no difficulty in escaping from that institution Sunday night. The names of the diminutive jail breakers are Andrew Turaki, eleven years old, and Matthew Barsile, ten years old. They were arrested last Friday for stealing a lot of brasswork from the Pennsylvania Railroad yards, and were locked up in a cell in the woman's prison, which is in the rear of the Third Precinct Station. Their cell was on the second floor. Yesterday morning one of the keepers discovered the door of the boys' cell open. An investigation showed that they had forced the lock off the door, and had gone through a corridor which leads out upon a platform landing, one flight from the ground.

From the platform there is a stairway to the roof. The boys had mounted to the roof and then dropped to the roof of an adjoining stable, thence dropped to Cook Street, and retired from the scene. This is the second time that Turaki has broken jail.

SIX MONTHS FOR POLICY MAN.

Judge Cowing, in Passing Sentence, Utters a Warning to His Kind.

Benjamin Endes of 565 Eleventh Avenue was yesterday sentenced to six months' imprisonment in the penitentiary by Judge Cowing in General Sessions, for running a policy game.

"The sooner you men learn that you will be deprived of your liberty," said the Judge, "for this kind of work, the better it will be for you and the community."

TRAIN GUARD FALLS FORTY FEET.

Michael Rothenberg Receives a Fractured Skull and May Die.

Michael Rothenberg, thirty-one years old, a guard on the Broadway Elevated Railroad, Brooklyn, while trying to board a moving train at the Lorimer Street station last night, lost his grip and dropped to the street, a distance of forty feet. His skull was fractured and he received internal injuries. An ambulance removed him to the Eastern District Hospital, where it was said last night that his condition was critical.

The accident was seen by many persons in the street, and several willing hands hurried to the man's assistance. He was carried into a drug store until the arrival of an ambulance. Rothenberg lives at 2,937 Atlantic Avenue.

FURNISHED A BOGUS BOND.

Lawyer and Two Other Men Adjudged in Contempt of Court.

Henry Gottlieb, a lawyer; Louis Aaron, and Herman Reiger were yesterday adjudged in contempt of court for furnishing a bogus bond by Justice Truax in the Supreme Court.

The undertaking was filed by Herman Reiger and a woman named Paula Dalber to cancel a mechanic's lien filed by Domenico Vitello, on Oct. 3, 1899, against property at 19 and 21 East Ninety-eighth Street. Judgment was obtained against the two sureties for $670.30, but could not be realized.

It was shown the woman was a seamstress who died at Bellevue two weeks ago. Reiger is a cigarmaker, who said his wages last week amounted to $6 and that he had no property. He swore he was employed by one Goodman, a brother-in-law of the defendant, Louis Aaron, who once told him he had taken title to property in his (Reiger's) name, and he was then called on to sign the bond. He never saw the property from which he had qualified and had no knowledge of its value.

It was shown further that Gottlieb was the lawyer employed in the transaction, and he was presumably the one who obtained the worthless sureties through Aaron and his agent in the proceedings.

Dinner to Charter Revisers.

A subscription dinner was tendered by the members of the Hamilton Club of Brooklyn last night to the members of the Charter Revision Commission at the clubhouse. Ex-Justice Frederic A. Ward presided, and remarks were made by George L. Rives, Henry W. Taft, and Edgar J. Levy. All of the speakers discussed the various features of the charter revision report.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

Some of the more rabid Audubonites and opponents of birds' feathers as trimmings for women's hats have gone so far as to claim that the shooting of gulls and terns to secure their feathers for trimmings has resulted in their practical extermination. There are a few score of men and women who can tell them to the contrary. These are they who make the wide cinder path about the upper reservoir at Central Park the place for their daily "constitutionals." Just at this time there is a partial covering of ice on the reservoir. It is well in the centre of the big sheet of water. On this surface there are almost daily conventions of the herring gulls that frequent the waters of the harbor. On any clear morning and during the warmer hours of the afternoon hundreds and possibly over a thousand of the gulls can be seen at a time sitting on the ice and apparently reveling in the delights of a sun bath. In fewer numbers they can be seen most any day taking a swim in the fresh waters. They are most numerous, however, on those days when there is ice for them to stand about on, and when the sun is bright and the weather perfect. The birds are too far from the walks to be disturbed by the promenaders, and seem educated up to the fact that there is here no danger from gunners who do occasionly take a shot at them when they swim about on the Hudson River. Where the gulls go for the night is a mystery that the strollers about the reservoir are always speculating about and never solving.

Instructors in languages find that the Paris Exposition gave an unexpected fillip to their business. Last Winter there was the expected increase in the number of students among those who intended going to Paris. They came to get a sufficient smattering of French and German to enable them to get about while in Europe. That was perfectly natural. It was natural, too, perhaps, that those same students, finding how very little they had been able to pick up should have continued their studies. But this number has been materially increased, and teachers of modern languages are at a loss to account for it. That there was a demand for instruction in Spanish from young men who had decided to go to Cuba, Porto Rico, or even to the Philippines in search of a fortune and business opportunity was expected. Society has decreed that one must be able to speak French fluently to be "in the swim." But it is not from this class that the students at the semi-public institutions are made up. One teacher thinks the presence here of Bernhardt and Coquelin, and the appearance of the opera company singing in three foreign languages, have had something to do with the increased number of students wishing to speak foreign tongues. But he also says there is a growing desire among young persons of the middle classes to be able to speak at least one tongue other than that which is native to them. This is to give them a reputation for culture and polish, and enable them to shine as linguists in the sets to which they belong. Young men and women who have to work for a living are among the most attentive and perseverings of the students at the night classes at Cooper Union, the schools of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, and at the public night schools. This is attributed to the belief that with even a smattering of one or two foreign languages they can do better for themselves as clerks in the big department stores where there is an increasing demand for help that can speak German, Italian, and French. Certain it is that among such there has been a marked increase this Winter in the number of those who have taken up languages as a study. One instructor believes the growth to be of a character that will, possibly within a couple of generations, result in Americans becoming as good linguists as the Russians now have the repute of being, and that in time no boy or girl will be considered as being properly educated who does not speak two or three of the European languages as well as his own.

"We are certainly becoming a button and badge wearing Nation," mused a jeweler as he pawed over his collection preparatory to furbishing up his depleted stock. "One reason for it I believe is that our people travel so much and are so fond of company that they wear the little lapel button so that they may be recognized and find friends among strangers who belong to the same organizations. I think it is that rather than the barbaric desire for personal adornment such as urchins show that accounts for the number of buttons of the sort I refer to. Knock about the hotels and you will notice that about one man in four, and the average may be greater, wears a button, badge, or pin of some sort. Less than a decade ago about the only thing of the lapel sort we had were the little bronze buttons of the Grand Army of the Republic, and an occasional colored button that told of membership in the Loyal Legion or the Order of the Cincinnati. Now there are similar badges for the Sons of the American Revolution, the Order of the Foreign Wars, Sons of Veterans, Order of the Colonial War, Royal Arcanum and a dozen other mutual benefit organizations, and fraternity and secret society pins and badges almost without number. It has come to be so that the man without a button or badge is looked upon as a sort of man without a country. Every jeweler has to carry a stock that is out of all proportion with the profits to be derived from the sale of the trinkets. The stick-pin craze among women is little more universal. There surely has been brought about a sort of comradeship among the wearers of the buttons that is perhaps a good thing for men of all sorts. It certainly is of benefit to the man who travels much and who likes to find companions in a strange city. It is harmless; perhaps it makes us a more companionable people, and it certainly helps the men who make a specialty of manufacturing and selling the buttons."

"There was a time not so very long ago when 'Family Entrance' over the side door of a saloon meant just exactly what it said," remarked one of the old-timers who was chatting of the changes in New York within the past generation. "Now it means most anything but that. When I lived down on the east side, in the vicinity of St. Mark's Church, that sign over the door meant that it was a private entrance for the owner of the saloon and his family. They generally lived in rooms over the saloon, and this was their only way of getting to their home. After a time women and children who went to the saloons to get a pitcher or a bucket of beer for home consumption got to using that door, as it was less conspicuous, and saved them from coming into contact with the general loungers about the place. There was nothing wrong in those days to see a woman going in at the 'family entrance,' for you expected she was going to call on the family of the proprietor. Even now there are many places in the German quarter where the sign has its old significance. But at the saloons in other places it is generally a blind for the entrance which may be used by shady women going into the places to have a drink with even shadier men. Generally speaking, it is now the very door that members of one's family would dodge."

Speaking of the old side-wheel steamer Continental, which has for years run between this city and New Haven, and which is now being dismantled for conversion into a coal barge, an old steamboat man said: "The Continental, which was built just after the close of the civil war, was considered in her day the finest boat on the Sound, and she never cost the New Haven Steamboat Company a cent. It was this way: The Government was hard pressed for transports at a time when the steamboat company was not making very much money with its other side-wheeler, the Elm City. So the company chartered her to the Government for something like $3,000 a day and all expenses and put the old Traveler on in her place. The Government took her South and used her in transporting troops down Hampton Roads way. She was there for several months, until her place could be filled with a Government-owned boat. Old Capt. Peck, who was a shrewd Yankee, pointed out to the managers of the company the need they would have of a new boat when the war was over and traffic came good again, and the money the Elm City earned was put aside on his advice and used for the building of the Continental. So you see, she did not cost her owners anything, for what the Elm City earned as a transport was so much clear and unexpected gain to them. She was a good boat in her day, but she had become so far out of date that when the New Haven road bought out the steamboat company, one of the first things it did was to condemn her. She has been for years a good property as an excursion boat running to the popular resorts all along the Sound."

ROYAL STABLE'S FUTURE

King Edward's Racing Establishment Likely to be Sold.

EXPECTED TO GIVE UP TURF

For Forty Years He Has Been a Patron of the Sport and Has Twice Won the Derby.

Following promptly on the accession of King Edward VII. to the English throne, the report has gone out that King Edward has already determined to retire from any active participation in racing affairs and that the royal breeding establishment, at Sandringham, which had only come into prominence within the last few years, soon gether with the royal racing stable, soon will be broken up, though whether at private sale or by public auction rumor is silent as yet.

In this connection it is stated as a fact that Lord Sheffield, who managed the racing interests of the Prince of Wales, has begun preparations for the dispersal of the now famous Sandringham Stud, which has been one of the most prominent in England since the Prince of Wales won the Derby and St. Leger with Persimmon, a horse of his own breeding.

England's present sovereign has been an ardent sportsman since his boyhood, and for forty years has taken a keen interest in horse racing, his connection with the turf actually having extended over that length of time, with a few short interruptions. His first racing ventures were in cross-country sport, and he kept and raced steeplechasers until about a dozen years ago, when through friends who acted for him he engaged in flat racing.

So keen a sportsman was the heir to the throne in his early manhood, that he actually rode in a steeplechase under an assumed name, when he first took up cross-country sport. This exploit was in 1861, at the military races, in Curragh, Ireland, then one of the most important racing points in Ireland. Wales then owned a fair steeplechaser in a six-year-old horse named Rupee, who, in the race in question, ran in the name of and was ridden by "Captain Melville," who was, in fact, the Prince of Wales himself. To avoid notoriety, the identity of the royal jockey was kept a secret at the time. Rupee won, and 'Captain Melville" was the recipient of many congratulations for the courage and coolness with which he took his mount over a stiff and rather dangerous course.

The colors then worn were all white, Wales then not having adopted the purple jacket, gold braid, scarlet sleeves, and black velvet cap with gold braid, which have become famous on the English turf since. For several years, Albert Edward raced as "Captain Melville, retaining the same colors. Then, with less cause for concealing his identity, he became a patron of steeplechasing under his own name.

THE PRINCE'S TURF ADVISERS.

His racing counselors at different times have been Sir Frederick Johnstone, Lord Arlington, Sir George Chetwynd, and a Mr. McKenzie, the latest being Lord Sheffield, who for several years has acted in the capacity of manager of the royal racing and breeding establishments. In his steeplechasing he depended largely upon Lord Marcus Beresford.

His open connection with flat racing began in 1868, when he had indifferent success, winning only few small races, and capturing the first of these under circumstances that caused much comment. This race was won by Counterpane, a son of Hermit, at Sandown Park, Counterpane startled a favorite at 7 to 4 on in a very ordinary field, and ridden by the celebrated Jockey Fred Archer, winning in a canter.

The betting on the contest was so listless and one-sided and the opposition to Counterpane so weak that gossip would have it that everything had been arranged beforehand, and that the field made no effort to beat the royal favorite; but this has always been denied vigorously by the gentlemen who were then associated with the Prince's racing stable.

Continuing an active patron of racing from that time until the end of last season, the Prince of Wales won races every year, but did not really have a conspicuous place on the turf, aside from the prestige that belonged to him by birth, until in 1895 he produced from his own stud the colt Persimmon, two years old, by St. Simon-Perdita.

Persimmon was a fair performer at two, and his owner had hope of him for the Epsom Derby the next year, 1896; but this was shared by few, as Leopold de Rothschild's St. Frusquin was a warm favorite. The Prince's hopes were realized, however, for Persimmon did win the Derby, beating St. Frusquin in a splendid finish, and this victory did much to increase the popularity of the owner, destined to become King of England.

Persimmon continued his victorious career and later won the St. Leger, taking a high place in the history of English racing and fully justifying, on the score of performance and breeding, the fee of 300 guineas ($1,500) which was fixed on his service when he went to the stud at Sandringham. Among other victories won that year by Persimmon was the fifty-thousand-dollar Jockey Club Stakes.

At four years Persimmon won the Gold Cup at Ascot and the Eclipse Stakes of £5,000 at Sandown Park. Other good horses owned by the Prince of Wales were Florizel and Courtier.

From his first venture in flat racing until the advent of Persimmon, the largest winning made by the Prince's stable was £3,499, in 1894. In 1895, with Persimmon and Florizel as his best horses, he won about £8,000, in 1896 £26,819, and in 1897 about £18,000.

Since then his stable's earnings were less than in the years of Persimmon, until the Prince repeated his Derby victory by winning that race again with Diamond Jubilee. The encouragement he received by the success of these great horses has caused him to breed on a larger scale, and his stud at Sandringham includes about as choice a collection of mares as can be found in the world.

The Prince of Wales was one of the patrons of "Tod" Sloan, the American jockey, Sloan having ridden a few horses for him, the first a filly called Little Dorrit. Sloan's riding so pleased Wales that last year a verbal agreement for the American jockey to ride for him this year was made, but later Sloan's conduct caused the agreement to be broken, and Sloan was released.

The present royal stable contains a number of promising horses, which are extremely well engaged, and had the owner wished to continue racing the King's stable probably would have been one of the most conspicuous of the year.

That King Edward VII. will retire from the turf is generally conceded to be due to kingly dignity in the present age. Other Kings of England have raced, but they lived when customs were very different from those of 1901.

Of the Kings of England who have been patrons of racing were Henry VIII., Charles II., William III., and George IV., while both Queen Elizabeth and Queen Anne took more than a passing interest in horseracing. Even in the days of the Protectorate racing flourished in England, and history has it that Cromwell himself bred and raced horses before he became Protector.

MOTOR CYCLISTS TO CONGRESS.

Efforts Being Made to Obtain Relief Legislation at Washington.

Secretary S. W. Merrihew of the Associated American Motor Cyclists has issued a circular letter to the members of the association in eighteen States, inclosing a copy of the bill now before Congress relating to the carriage of gasoline in the tanks of motor vehicles on passenger boats, and urging them to make every effort to secure the aid of the Congressmen of their respective States in support of the measure. The object of the bill is to rescind those sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States which prohibit the carriage of such inflammable substances on such boats in any form whatsoever. If the bill is passed in its present form, as amended, that prohibition will be withdrawn.

This bill was prepared by the Automobile Club of America and offered in the United States Senate by Senator Platt of New York, and it has already undergone several stages of advancement. So far there has been no opposition to the measure, but this is not in itself sufficient to insure its passage, so great is the number of bills presented to Congress, and, as the present session is a short one, ending March 4, the chances of its being sidetracked are very great.

National Cycling Association Meeting.

Chairman A. G. Batchelder announces that the annual meeting of the National Cycling Association will take place at the Astor House at 10:30 A. M. on Tuesday, Feb. 5.

College Athletes at K. A. C. Games.

The games of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, to be held at the Madison Square Garden on Feb. 4, will be remarkable for the array of college athletes, as Yale, Princeton, Columbia, Cornell, Georgetown, and New York Universities will each be represented by a large entry list. In the sixty-yard and 300-yard handicap there will be Andrew Walz, New York University; J. P. Watts of Yale, Heywood Shannon of Princeton, and J. Walz of Cornell. Perry of Princeton, winner of last year's half-mile intercollegiate championship, will essay the mile run for the first time, and Bellinger, Hastings, and Lundell of Cornell will start in the 880, 600, and 300 yard, respectively. John S. Spraker, the Yale high jumper, will try to break the indoor record for the running high jump, and will also start in the sixty-yard handicap, in which Arthur Duffy of Georgetown will also run.

CLOTHIER HELD FOR ARSON.

Gordman's Former Clerk Makes Serious Charges Against Him After Getting a Judgment.

Jacob Gordman, a clothing dealer of 279 Delancey Street, was held in $5,000 bail in the Morrisania Police Court yesterday afternoon for examination on a charge of arson. He was arrested in the Municipal Court at One Hundred and Fifty-eighth Street and Third Avenue on the complaint of T. Schweb, a salesman, who was employed by him when he kept a store in the building at 2,290 Third Avenue, which was destroyed by fire on Oct. 14. Schweb sued Gordman for money he claimed was due him and after he had got judgment in the municipal court yesterday had his former employer arrested on the arson charge.

Schweb says that on Oct. 13 Gordman locked up the store for the day, and the two men were walking away together when Gordman said he would go back, as he had forgotten something. At 3 o'clock on the following morning Gordman, he says, appeared at his home and told him there had been a fire at the store. Schweb says he told Gordman that he was not surprised at the news, and he declares Gordman laughed. They went to the store, and he says he told Gordman the fire was started in the wrong place; that it should have been in the basement. Then, according to Schweb, Gordman said:

"Oh, I considered the thing carefully, and figured out that it might be discovered there too quickly."

Schweb also says in his affidavit that Gordman always kept a can of benzine in the extension of the place, and that this can was frequently found uncorked. A few days before the fire he says he was almost suffocated by gas as he entered the store, and found that all the gas jets except one turned on.

Gordman says there is no truth in the affidavit.

CHOICE OF DEATH OR BEGGING.

Prisoner, Apparently a Deaf-Mute, Writes He Chose the Lesser Evil.

Among the prisoners arraigned in the Yorkville Police Court yesterday was Arthur Fern, twenty-four years old, who says that he came from Chicago. He is supposed to be deaf and dumb. He was arrested on Saturday at Forty-first Street and Lexington Avenue on a charge of begging. The Magistrate had an idea that the man was only pretending to be unable to hear or speak, and tried in many ways to trap him into exposing his pretense. The Magistrate finally told Fern that he would have to go to prison if he did not answer, and the man turned to go out.

Fern still pretended to be deaf and dumb and was led down stairs. Later he wrote the following note to the Magistrate:

Mr. Judge, Your Honor:

If asking those who are willing to give is a crime, what is suicide? I had my choice. I sought the easier evil. Is it possible men's hearts are made of marble? God be my witness.

The man's case is being investigated.

CONVENIENT, BUT UNJUST.

In his remarks at the meeting of the Clearing House Committee yesterday Mr. J. EDWARD SIMMONS pointed out that if Gov. ODELL'S bill for the taxation of bank shares becomes a law the banks of New York City will have to pay annual taxes amounting to about 3 per cent. of their capital and net profits. The Lewis bill imposes a tax to be paid by the shareholders of 1 per cent. of the capital, surplus, and undivided profits. The bank is then to be exempted from further taxation for State purposes, but would still be subject to local taxation. Last year the tax rate was 2.24, of which .23 was for State purposes. This leaves a little over 2 per cent. for local taxes and a bank tax for State and local purposes together of 3 per cent.

We should suppose that such a showing as that would cause the Governor to reexamine his bill. A tax of $3 in the hundred upon the resources of an individual or a corporation is manifestly excessive. It is not necessary, and it can not and will not be borne. The inevitable effect of such laws is to drive men and money out of the State where taxation is so exorbitant and oppressive.

If the Tax Assessor consulted nothing but his own convenience he would always levy upon the property of one man or one corporation the entire amount to be raised by taxation. That would be a cheap and easy way to get the money. Mr. ROCKEFELLER, for instance, or the New York Central Railroad would be called upon to pay the whole cost of the City Government and the city's share of the State Government expense. If thereupon Mr. ROCKEFELLER or the railroad, by raising the prices of the commodities or the service in which they deal, should be able to distribute the burden pretty evenly through the community the tax might not prove to be obnoxious either in theory or in practice. It is a sound principle to collect taxes from as few sources as possible, but it is the necessary corollary of that principle that these sources should be of such a nature that the distribution of the burden through the community would be effected easily, automatically, and with substantial uniformity in proportion to ability to pay. The tax on bank shares and trust companies has been planned solely from the point of view of the convenience of Albany and in total disregard of the principle of distribution. The holder of bank shares would pay his 1 per cent. to Albany, while the bank itself pays 2 per cent. to the New York City Tax Collector. Neither the shareholder nor the bank can pass on the burden or any part of it. As bankers they have nothing to sell but bank accommodation. If they attempt to recoup themselves by charging a higher rate of interest for that accommodation their business would be ruined in short order. Borrowers would go elsewhere, as we have already pointed out.

A great part of the personal tax is already paid by bank shares. In the City of Albany it once amounted to 58 per cent. of the total. Gov. ODELL intends to gather in some three millions of additional revenue from two classes of property, bank shares and trust company franchises. That is a convenient way, indeed, but it is not just or uniform taxation. It is outrageous taxation, an unprincipled levy upon property in sight.

The enactment of such a law would be an open confession that the lawmaking power was too ignorant to devise just tax laws or wholly indifferent to the principle of justice so long as it got the money.

THE PHILIPPINE FRIARS.

The report of the Taft commission recently sent to Congress by the President contains the first statement at all full and definite as to the problem of the friars in the Philippines. It is apparently a very candid statement of a complicated and difficult problem, as to which the commission submits only suggestions, not having arrived at a final opinion of the best course to be pursued.

In substance the situation is this: There were in the islands, almost entirely in the Province of Luzon, some 1,150 friars, of the Dominican, Augustinian, and Franciscan Orders, which orders have come into possession of some 400,000 acres of land, mostly agricultural, exempt, under Spanish rule, from taxation, and rented to natives. As these friars remained in their cures practically for life, as their orders and the Church had great influence with the Government of Spain, and as the average tenure of the Spanish officials, civil or military, in the islands was less than four years, the friars managed to secure almost complete control of all affairs in their respective parishes. The commission is convinced that in the exercise of this power the friars have incurred the rooted animosity of the great body of the Filipinos. This animosity is not toward the Catholic Church, for the Filipinos remain attached to that Church; it is in its nature political and personal, and is based on the extortionate policy of the friars, and to some extent on their individual misconduct.

In the insurrections of 1896 and 1898 the friars were dispossessed, some of them were killed, some taken prisoners, and some have left the islands. It is estimated by our commission that less than 500 remain, a large number of whom appear not to be exercising their functions. The United States is bound by the treaty of Paris to protect the property interests of the friars. For the most part these have been transferred to various persons and corporations, but the title remains in the friars. Two questions arise from this state of affairs. One relates to the return of the friars to their cures. Over that the Government of the United States can have no direction, it being a matter solely of the policy of the Church. The second relates to the disposition of the property. It seems to be the view of the commission that if the latter can be adjusted, the former will be treated satisfactorily by the Church. The suggestion is therefore made that the property of the friars be purchased by the Government and sold at fair prices on easy terms to the natives who are or would be tenants.

Unquestionably there are very grave difficulties in the way of the adoption of this suggested plan. The money would have to be advanced by the United States. It would be regarded by a considerable part of the people of the United States as a contribution to the Catholic Church, and would be resented. There is not now any definite authority in any branch of our Government to engage the National credit for such a purpose. All these matters should be carefully studied, and it is to be remembered that the commission does not commit itself wholly to the plan. But if it be feasible, it has certain essential and lasting advantages. It meets the obligation of the United States to deal honorably with the property rights of the Church. It leaves open to the Church the replacement of the obnoxious friars by priests better suited to their task. It will tend to create a class of self-supporting natives owing their prosperity to the policy of the American Government. It will probably associate the American Government intimately in the minds of the natives with all that is most helpful and desirable in their lives. It will promote a class closely bound to the land, needing and wishing order and good administration, and ready to work under American guidance for the establishment of efficient self-government. If it be found on due consideration that these results can be relied on, we do not believe that the American people will refuse approval and support to this policy.

THE SCANDAL IN CHINA.

Bishop POTTER'S remarks on Sunday to the effect that in the conflict of "Christendom" with China, China held the better moral position, would in any case command the concurrence of those who have followed the subject most closely. They have been in effect anticipated by the judgment of Sir ROBERT HART, who knows China as well as any European politician, and who has explained, in a very interesting way, how the Boxers were the product of foreign aggression. They were, in fact, almost a necessary expression in any country, in the circumstances of China, which had any patriotism left in it at all. China has judged Christianity by what she has seen of Christendom. She has seen traders, and she has seen missionaries. The mistakes of the missionaries have been those of zealous and devoted men, who did not know the force of the prejudices they were encountering, and therefore did not allow for them. But the effect upon Chinese sensibilities has been the same, in many cases, as if the violence done to those sensibilities had been intended and deliberate. As for our commercial representatives in the East, they have commonly acted upon a much lower theory of morals, not only than that supplied by the Christian religion, but than that not only professed, but acted upon, by the Chinamen themselves, with whom these recreant Christians came into commercial and social relations.

The Bishop's conclusion is quite justified that, in order to convert China we should begin by converting the representatives we send to China. And our behavior, meaning the behavior of "Christendom" in general, after the resident representatives of Christianity had done their perfect work by bringing about the Boxer uprising, has been of a complete savagery. An intelligent and responsible witness, Mr. THOMAS F. MILLARD, gives testimony, in the current number of Scribner's, to the character of the "punitive expeditions" undertaken either by the Russians on their own account, or by the allied forces under the command of Count VON WALDERSEE. The testimony shows that the expeditions have given themselves to the commission of high crimes. The punishment of China has been simply the perpetration of murder, arson, robbery, and rape on individual and promiscuous Chinamen and Chinawomen. The witness's conclusion is: "Events such as the months of September, October, and November brought to China have carried war back to the Dark Ages, and will leave a taint in the moral atmosphere of the world for a generation to come."

It will be much more than a generation before the Chinese will be as hospitably disposed toward Christianity as they were before the cruel and savage beasts under Count VON WALDERSEE'S command gave them this awful exhibition of applied Christianity. Every American ought to be thankful for the foresight of his Government, which has kept the American name free of any complicity in this great scandal.

NOT FOR THE GOOD OF THE SERVICE.

Gov. ODELL'S former relation to active politics must have given him a large knowledge of the tricks of patronage hunters that will be of use to him in protecting the public service against their forays. A bill to create party patronage would have to be most cunningly drawn, we should say, to elude his experienced eye.

When he comes to examine Senate Bill No. 255, for instance, he will easily detect its purpose. This bill was introduced by Senator BRACKETT. It provides for the continuance of the State Lunacy Commission, to consist of three members, and amends the present law by authorizing the Governor, Secretary of State, and Controller to fix the salaries of the Commissioners "at different amounts than those prescribed" by the law as it now stands. This in itself would put the Governor on his guard. But the moving purpose of the author of this bill is manifested, not in new matter, but in what it strikes out of the present law. It is provided that the President of the Lunacy Commission shall be, as is now required, a reputable physician of not less than ten years' experience in actual practice, but a further highly important requirement of the law as it now stands is abolished by striking out these words: "Who has had five years' actual experience in the care and treatment of the insane and who has had experience in the management of institutions for the insane."

If there was any lack of eligibles under this provision, if the Governor found himself hampered in his choice by the fact that physicians of ten years' practice who have also had qualifying experience in the treatment of the insane were hard to find, it might be contended that the Brackett bill was meant as an unselfish effort to broaden the field of the Executive choice in the interest of the public service. But there must be two hundred physicians in the State who have had the opportunity to acquire in institutions the special knowledge which the law now very properly demands of the President of the Lunacy Commission. Public considerations cannot be urged in justification of this change in the law. We are afraid the real considerations are exceedingly private, and perhaps personal. Some scheming Republican may have a friend who needs a salary but lacks the qualification.

It is consoling to feel that no such bill as this can get by Gov. ODELL without his knowing just what it means.

BRITISH TRADE.

A correspondent of The Sun sends that journal a full report of Lord ROSEBERY'S gloomy remarks at Wolverhampton upon the probable decline of British trade, and follows it up with some observations of his own, tending to confirm Lord ROSEBERY'S views. On the other hand, The Evening Post published yesterday from its London correspondent the report of a leading English man of business, who rather pooh-poohs these doleful vaticinations, and satirically remarks that one of the British staple productions, the output of which is not likely to fail, is "the statesman's speech on a subject of which he knows little." According to this observer, "The trade of the United Kingdom has attained a volume, both in quantity and value, never before reached and scarcely dreamed of." If the foreign trade of Germany and of the United States shows a greater ratio of increase, that is readily explained by the fact that, as manufacturing and trading countries, both these are younger than Great Britain, and are in fact, in this field, mere beginners compared with Great Britain. It does not in the least follow that the business of Great Britain is in danger because other nations are competing for it.

This is a very cheerful view for an Englishman to entertain in the presence in particular of American engineering competition and of German maritime competition. It seems to leave out of sight one or two relevant considerations. For two generations, at least, Great Britain has been in possession of a monopoly in a sphere in which there is now an active competition. That is one. A second is that both Germany and the United States can live without doing business outside their own borders. At least Germany can nearly do so, and we can quite do so. With Great Britain, with a nation that has not at any time more than six weeks' "visible supply" of food on hand, the case is different. As the engineering expert of The London Times said the other day, "We must make and sell, or starve." The competitors are not, in this respect, on equal terms. And that Briton is more to be envied as to his present emotions than as to his future emotions who does not see in the two new competitions that have sprung up to his monopoly any need for a searching of heart or for a rigorous putting of his house in order.

There is one rather curious consequence of the present commercial situation. For forty or fifty years Great Britain has been making "trade wars," wars of which the purpose was to extend the market for British goods. With two eager and active rivals she is not likely to make such wars any more. For that would be to stand the cost of opening markets for them. So we may expect a cessation of the small wars, barring a repeal of free trade, which has not yet by any means become a practical question.

The man arrested at the instance of Mr. HARDON for violation of the Health Board ordinance against spitting in public conveyances was yesterday fined $25 in the Court of Special Sessions, Justice JEROME presiding. The sentence was relatively mild, as was proper in the case of the first offender brought to trial. It was, however, ample to prove to the public that the law is definite and that a serious penalty may be surely expected by those who violate it. It will now depend largely on the transportation companies whether this revolting and dangerous nuisance shall be wholly abated or not. If notices are kept prominently in the cars, setting forth not only the ordinance of the Health Board but the penalty for disobeying it, and if the employés of the companies shall be instructed to ask the name and address of all offenders and of witnesses, the cars of New York will be as fit, in a short time, for decent men and women to ride in as the cars of Boston long have been.

The Filipino petition read by Senator FRYE in the Senate yesterday is extremely interesting, but it would have had greater immediate effect had it been, so to speak, authenticated. That is to say, it would be more satisfactory to know from Judge TAFT, or from Gen. MACARTHUR, who the signers of the petition are, what is their standing in the native community, how far they represent the Federal Party, in the name of which they speak, and the strength and influence of that party. What the petition asks—authority for the President to establish purely civil government, with usual powers—is what the President himself asked last week. It is most encouraging, indeed, if a party the main plank of which is American sovereignty is receiving "accessions by thousands in all parts of the archipelago," but the evidence would have been stronger had it been attested by our own authorities, and had it extended to somewhat more definite statements of fact. We are convinced, nevertheless, that the measure requested by the President and advocated by these petitioners ought to be granted. Whether it will be best to grant it at the heel of a short session, or to defer it to the extraordinary session that bids fair to be required by the Cuban question, is not so easy to decide. Postponement means delay, of course, but it also promises more light.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—New York City's postal facilities, never adequate for the city's needs, are now not far from a complete breakdown. The overworking of the employés, long a cause of just complaint on their part, no longer suffices for the prompt handling of the mountains of mail matter that daily accumulate here, and the congestion formerly characteristic of certain limited seasons of the year now extends over the whole of it. The result is that the delaying of third-class matter is constant, that of second-class matter frequent, and that of first-class matter not unusual. This is a condition of affairs the consequences of which are not limited to New York, but extend all over the country, and create both inconvenience and loss in every part of it. The publishers of the city find that the conduct of their business is seriously hampered, and as the chief sufferers they are especially eager for the adoption of measures of some kind that will provide immediate relief. They rejoice, of course, over the news that Congress has at last consented to give New York a new Post Office Building, but the erection of such a structure will take at least two years, and the continuance of their present difficulties for that length of time is not contemplated by them with composure. The material increase of working force which Postmaster VAN COTT has so often demanded, only to receive scanty and grudging concessions when he received any, is vehemently advocated by the publishers as the only possible means of present relief. At least one firm already contemplates the necessity of expressing its third-class matter to Philadelphia or elsewhere for mailing—a device to which it certainly should not be forced to resort. Mr. VAN COTT, replying to a publisher who wrote to him on this subject recently, admitted the justice of the complaints made, but said that he was doing all he could with the space and force at his command. "In the past," he wrote, "we had a little relief after the holiday rush, but this year, from Jan. 1 to the present day, shows an increase of 18 per cent. in the amount of mail handled in this office." In ten years the amount of second-class matter has increased 107 per cent., and other classes almost as much, but the Postmaster has no more working space than he had twenty-five years ago, and the number of his employés is but slightly increased.

—In nothing more than in the making of new laws does excellence of intention need to be accompanied by practical wisdom and the capacity for taking infinite pains if good results are to be achieved. Striking illustration of this truth is to be found in a bill which the County Medical Society has just had introduced at Albany. Its object—that of getting on the statute book a definition of medical practice broad enough to include, and so render easy the punishment of, all exponents of false and fraudulent systems of cure—is most excellent, but the wording of the measure is so careless, and its breadth of application is so enormous, that its passage is neither possible nor desirable. "Any person," it reads, "shall be regarded as practicing medicine within the meaning of this act who shall prescribe, direct, recommend, or advise, for the use of any other person any remedy or agent whatsoever, whether with or without the use of any medicine, drug, or instrument or other appliance, for the treatment, relief, or cure of any wound, fracture, or bodily injury, infirmity, physical or mental, or other defect or disease." A few exceptions follow, such as the administration of domestic remedies by one member of a family to another, and the treatment of their men by army and navy officers, but the bill as it stands would prevent one from advising a friend to invest in a box of cough drops, and would render it illegal for the manufacturers of proprietary medicines to advertise in the usual way, for an optician or trussmaker to serve customers not provided with a physician's prescription, or for a shoemaker to take into account a patron's corns in providing him with footwear. Some of these consequences might be defended by the doctors, who are naturally opposed to all amateur rivalry, but the general public would never submit to restrictions so drastic, and the bill should and will fail. Yet, as already stated, its object is admirable. The County Medical Society should try again, and accor something by not trying to accomplish so much.

—Queen VICTORIA'S death has inspired a vast amount of verse-making by people who are not poets, and just a little by people who, in their more fortunate moments, have some claim to membership in the sacred fraternity, but as yet, at least, it is the worst of the output, and not the best, that is the most notable. Attention fastens most firmly of all upon the production of an ambitious bard, who sings:

> The Queen is dead; long live the King!
> Through domains world encircling,
> The Victorian era's passed,
> Saxe-Coburg rules at last.
> Edward Seventh, hail!
> Victoria vale!

Just possibly the writer of those remarkable lines recognized their absurdity, but the indications are all in favor of the theory that his purpose was serious, and that he regarded his last rhyme as a good one to the ear, whatever it might be to the eye. His mistake is funny, even if it is also pathetic, and it is only by laughing at him that the would-be poet can be taught that one language is about as much as he can hope to handle successfully at his present stage of development. That lesson learned, he might escape falling into pits as deep as this one wherein he now languishes without even knowing that he has met with an accident.

—By admitting that negro labor is a failure in the manufacture of cotton cloth, the proprietors of the Vesta Mills, at Charleston, S. C., have supplied scores of the Southern papers with an opportunity to laud their own prophetic powers, and to remark with slightly derisive emphasis that hereafter Northern capitalists will be more cautious in attempting to teach the South the potentialities latent in the American negro. The experiment at Charleston was thoroughly tried, and the result seems to have been to prove that, though the negro could be a satisfactory employé in a cotton mill if he chose, he lacks the inclination to work steadily, and that, therefore, he is not really a rival of the white artisan in this or similar fields of industry. The Vesta Mills are to be removed to Gainesville, Ga., and there all or chief reliance will be placed on white labor. "The negro," says The Athens (Ga.) Banner, in commenting on the episode, "has been found to need a boss at every step. He has not advanced and expanded into that proud, self-reliant character who feels within himself the necessity of rising to the American standards around him, as was predicted by Northern philanthropists that he would do if left free and untrammeled. As the Vesta Mills owners were Northern men, it is well that they made the experiment. This experience will teach them that Southern views as to the negro are not based entirely on prejudice, and that the Southern people are really the negroes' best friends, because they tell them the truth and wish them to advance with a knowledge of it." The Banner expresses special gratification that the white workers of the South need no longer dread a forced choice between starvation wages and social degradation.

"AT HOMES" A SOCIAL SHAM.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If I may be allowed to make a prophecy, or, more correctly, a prediction, it is that a very few years more will bring an end to the present concentrated essence of inhospitality known as the afternoon tea, or "at homes."

When people are fully convinced that they are invited more to swell the number of visitors and make a crowd, and to see how much of a "swell" can be made, how many carriages are drawn up in the street, and how many special servants can be afforded for the occasion, they will begin to doubt very much whether there is any compliment in being invited. The following description illustrates the heartless, machine style of these functions as I find them:

Entering the parlor, the hostess greets you and expresses pleasure at seeing you there; then her eye wanders anxiously to the door to see who is coming next. If you do not take the hint, she says, "Alice is in the next room, she will be so glad to see you." You pass on. Alice says she is glad to see you, and immediately points to the refreshments and invites you to move on. In the refreshment room a lady is in charge whom you may not know. Her conversation is strictly business, and brings the waiter to you, if you desire to partake of anything by yourself, for if you do not happen to see some one with whom you are acquainted you are left to yourself; there are no introductions; there is no time to stop for such amenities. If you linger at the refreshments you feel that you are in the way, or may be suspected of not having enough to eat at home. You say good-bye to the hostess and leave. On the street again you note the time—six minutes since you entered the house. Others are arriving; others are leaving; the mill is grinding them through—120 an hour. If you meet other visitors with whom you are acquainted you can prolong your stay by conversing with them until you feel that you are remarked as a wall flower, but your intercourse with the hostess and family amounts to not more than two or three minutes under favorable circumstances.

What hollow mockery and counterfeit of hospitality! What useful purpose is served? People are brought together. Yes, but for what? Not to extend acquaintance among new people, for there are almost no introductions. Not to strengthen or renew old acquaintance, for there is no time. One must pass on; "step lively," as it were. Then what is there to the credit of these empty shows?—for that is all they seem to be. To show "how many people we know," and how much money we can spend to show ourselves to our friends for six minutes each.

I would like to hear the other side, and learn, if possible, why an afternoon tea, as given in New York, is anything more than a high-pressure social sham, and why, as a means of discharging social obligations, it is not far-reaching in detrimental effects.

VICTORIA AND THE TRENT AFFAIR.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It has been a matter of some surprise to those of us who lived through the troubous days of our civil war that until the appearance of your historically valuable article relating to the seizure of the British steamer Trent on the high seas by an American man-of-war, no special mention had been made of it by the city press in their voluminous articles upon the life and death of the Queen; for certainly her action in connection with that most momentous episode of our fratricidal conflict was fraught with the most tremendous consequence in its bearing upon the result of the struggle.

The present generation, however, does not seem to realize the great obligations that we are under to Queen Victoria for her decided and friendly attitude during the pendency of the tension produced by that extraordinary episode, more far-reaching, perhaps, in its results than any decision arrived at during her long and illustrious reign, inasmuch as it prevented the disintegration of the United States, which in its entirety during the past half-century has wielded so powerful an influence in international affairs. This decision was maintained in direct opposition to the opinions of her Privy Council, of which Lord John Russell and Lord Palmerston were the ruling spirits; also in opposition to those of her nobility and upper lords, spiritual and temporal, and last, but not least, against the policy of that great Liberal leader and anti-slavery champion, Gladstone, who for the nonce put his principles in his pocket and allowed his prejudice to overrule his cherished convictions. Thus, with Church and State arrayed against her, but feeling that the middle classes, the backbone of her realm, were with her, she fought the good fight and won.

Providentially Mr. Lincoln had for his adviser in international affairs at that juncture that astute statesman Mr. Seward as Secretary of State. Level-headed and not influenced by popular clamor, and notwithstanding that his colleagues in the Cabinet upheld the piratical act of Capt. Wilkes, and, stimulated by the Jingoes in Congress, voted him swords and things, Mr. Seward, knowing full well that the British Government would demand the fullest reparation for the outrage upon her flag, at once quietly made arrangements, in advance of the demand, to make the "amende honorable" by a proper apology and the return of the Confederate Commissioners in an American man-of-war. Fortunately there was at that time no cable, so that there was ample time for the Jingoes and hotspurs to realize the predicament in which Wilkes had placed us by his intemperate action, which was in direct contravention of international amity and of the issues established by our war of 1812.

Had the Queen listened to the advice of her Ministry, certain it is that terms so peremptory would have been formulated that no Government would have considered them and war would have ensued, the result of which must have been the disintegration of the United States, for with a million of Confederates on the South of us fully armed and equipped by England, with the powerful British army and navy, and the Canadian forces confronting us, the Federal Government must have been forced to an ignominious pesce, resulting probably in the organization of several minor republics in lieu of the great Republic now foremost among nations.

Hence let us pay due respect to the memory of the illustrious lady who came to our aid in the hour of our deepest National distress.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why do you say in your editorial to-day on "Loot and Indemnity in China" that "the Christian missionaries are understood to be the most implacable demanders of Chinese blood," referring by that to the dreadful slaughter of the Chinese during the last few months, and also that "the missionaries are as active in the looting of Chinese property as they have been in instigating the promiscuous taking of Chinese lives"? You must know that both these charges are utterly false. The only basis of the first is that the missionaries have demanded the death penalty on the leaders of the Boxer movement for politic reasons, and the only basis of the second is that the missionaries took food and clothing from the deserted houses after the siege to clothe and feed the native converts, who were utterly destitute.

I have read widely in both the English and American papers and magazines the accounts of the operations in China, and nowhere have I found evidence upon which you could justly base your charges. If you have such evidence you ought to publish it, and if you have not you have no right to say such things in your editorials. It is even inherently absurd to suppose that men and women who have left their home country and life behind them and have gone to China with the love of God in their hearts to work among the lowest classes of Chinese people should suddenly transform themselves into implacable demanders of the blood of those same Chinese people.

The greatest force in the world to-day to bring about that great ideal, the brotherhood of the whole human race, is the work of Christian missionaries, whose one great aim is to put into the hearts of men and women in all the lands of the earth the common love for Jesus Christ. In what other way can you bind the races together into a brotherhood than by putting into their hearts a common love for Jesus Christ? And that this is not only the aim but the practical result of missionary work I know to be true from personal acquaintance with native converts from heathen lands. And your attitude toward this great work, as shown in the baseless statements in your editorial, is not at all just nor wise.

Two things should be forever laid aside as settled by the recent events in China. One is that the missionaries are a set of weak and incompetent men of inferior grade, and the other is that the native converts are generally "rice Christians." The missionaries in North China have proved to the world their manhood, their intelligence, and their high-grade common sense. This reputation should be extended to their fellow-missionaries everywhere, for the North China missionaries are only specimens of the average missionary. And shame be to the man who talks again of "rice Christians," unless he specifies and proves his charges in detail! They might better be called "blood Christians," for they have sealed with their blood their fellowship with Jesus Christ!

INGRATITUDE OF SERVANTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An article in your paper of yesterday, headed "The Scarcity of Servants," seems so one-sided and unfair to the vast number of kind and patient housekeepers that I wish to say a few words in their behalf. Having been brought up to treat all domestics with consideration and courtesy, and having had many years of housekeeping, during which I have always endeavored to be a reasonable mistress, my long experience may be worthy of some regard. Let me say that my family has never been large, and with no children, and that I have always desired the contentment and welfare of those in my employ—tending them in illness, supplying them with books, &c., for their idle hours, and seldom refusing them any request for extra pleasures.

I have also with patient effort trained many an unskilled maid to be an excellent waitress, and with what result? Only that, when at last I was taking a little well-earned satisfaction in their competency, to have them leave me for "higher wages." I have never—with perhaps one or two exceptions—been repaid with the least gratitude or willingness to render an extra service. The very rich, who can afford to be careless and easy-going, have made for their poorer sisters a very difficult and perplexing state of things by giving wages out of all proportion to the work performed and raising false standards which it is hopeless to try to alter.

In the majority of homes in our city the problem of living with any degree of comfort or refinement is becoming more serious each year. With limited income, the wife and mother strives to make the home attractive and keep its wheels running smoothly, and oh, with what cost and self-denial only she can know! And why? Because servants are not willing to be servants these days. There is indeed a "scarcity," and soon I fear the article will be unknown and "lady helps" rule our households!

We have either got to yield and put up with waste and destruction and insolence or keep forever changing, and alas! we all know how the peace of the home goes with such a régime! How will it all end? Where are the old-time respectful and respected servants who found a home with our parents and performed faithfully their duties as part of the family for many years?

The cases are rare indeed where domestics of the present day need pity—they need to be put and kept in their places, and ruled with a firm but kind hand, and the "pity" go to the patient, overburdened mistresses.

BRYAN AS A BIBLICAL SCHOLAR.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Dr. Sheffield in to-day's TIMES has fallen into error. He evidently did not consult the Bible before writing his advice to Mr. Bryan. If he had he would have found that Mr. Bryan was right in saying: "In the same chapter in which Christ condensed man's duty to his fellows into the Commandment 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself'; in the same chapter in which he denounced those who devour widow's houses and for a pretense make long prayers, in this same chapter it is said of Him, 'The common people heard him gladly.'" Mr. Bryan evidently refers to Mark, xii., and did not intend to attribute the origin of the Commandment referred to to Christ.

Is not the doctor also in error in saying "the author of it is Moses"? If he will refer to Leviticus, xix., he will find that "the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel and say unto them, * * * Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself; I am the Lord."

The doctor should go to Lincoln and sit at the feet of Mr. Bryan and study the Bible.

TEACHERS' RETIREMENT FUND.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Assemblyman Bell, introducing a bill in Albany making provisions for a retirement fund for Greater New York teachers, should have more wisely thought out where a permanent fund could be created by the act.

He says, firstly, the fund is to be derived from all money withheld from teachers' salaries from any cause. Secondly, all money received from donations or legacies. Thirdly, all money acquired from such methods of increment as may be duly authorized.

It is well known that the amount of money deducted from teachers' salaries from any cause is a mere bagatelle, and as to legacies, only one thus far is known—of $5,000, from Mr. Thomas Harrison—which is the first and may be the last. As to donations, there is no record of any having been given. There is to the third point a very vague uncertainty as to other methods of increment.

By an act of the State Legislature a fund was created for the retirement, to be derived from the payment of 5 per cent. of the excise money. Why should there be any talk of repealing this act, which would adequately meet the need as it is at present? By the same act of the Legislature 10 per cent. of the excise is applied to a fund for retirement of police and firemen, but no action is taken to repeal this wise provision for them. Are the teachers not entitled to the same consideration and protection as other public servants?

I must believe that Assemblyman Bell has not given this matter the careful consideration to which this important measure is entitled. If our public school is the salvation and safeguard of this country and the bulwark of the Nation, then its teachers are entitled to the supreme consideration of our legislators.

AN OPERAGOER'S PROTEST.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The valuable criticisms and articles recently published in your paper on grand opera and the great artists whom it is our privilege to hear this Winter embolden me to beg you to enter a plea in your columns in behalf of those who, like myself, are regular subscribers to the opera and reverent listeners at many of the performances, and whose pleasure and instruction is well-nigh spoiled by the continuous chattering of ill-bred and thoughtless persons.

The dress circle was formerly considered sacred from such intrusions; unfortunately such is no longer the case. Even the beautiful music of "Tannhäuser" on Saturday last, as well as the performance of "Le Cid" the week before, failed to impress these people with the fact that "silence is golden," and they were continually whispering or applauding at a time when applause entirely spoiled the artistic continuity of the scene. With shame it may be said that it was not alone the typical "matinée girl" who was to blame for this offense, but those older and wiser, (?) who in this thoughtless way annoyed their neighbors and spoiled their pleasure.

With all the culture and intelligence of the New York public does it not seem strange that so many people attending the opera and theatre cannot be taught when to be silent and when to applaud?

THE CINCINNATI FIRE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I should like to say a word about the above. Such as I have to say is borne out by the city editor of The Enquirer. This gentleman, while commending the well-bred coolness of the audience, the nerve of Mr. Sothern, and the endeavors of Mr. Sothern's company and stage hands, agrees with me, that if it had been some one's duty at the first alarm to pour water on the flames, and if the water had been there, and if the fire apparatus was workable and capable of instantaneously throwing water, the fire might have at least been kept under. I have twice previously seen fires in a theatre, but I have never seen any one attempt to put them out.

Now, Sir, let me tell you what I have seen in Berlin, and I hope you will publish my letter, as it may be productive of some good. On the stage of the theatre where we were performing "Hamlet" with Mr. Forbes-Robertson, a fireman stood, like a sentinel on duty, axe at side and with a blanket round his body. In most of the theatres I have been to the fireman wanders about the theatre. I contend that two or three men stationed at hoses, and who could have poured water on the flames, could have saved the building. Since the fire, I am told, hose has been tried in a Cincinnati building and has been found worthless. I have seen hose in theatres so creased by long neglect that I fancy the water would have escaped from every part but the nozzle.

In the theatre I speak of I had occasion to use a cigar. Buckets of water were placed in the entrance and a man told off to watch me. It was amusing, but it was business. There should be in every theatre a man stationed by the fire apparatus; the hose should be easy to handle, and the water should be at the nozzle. We were next door to the fire engines, and it was ten minutes before any attempt was made to throw water on the flames. Firemen were splendid and prompt. Mr. Sothern acted with marvellous coolness, the audience behaved well, Mr. Sothern's company and stage hands did what they could, but the fact remains that water, the only thing needful, wasn't there.

Protests Against Ship Subsidy Bill.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with interest your articles on the Ship Subsidy bill, and want to say that I am utterly opposed to any bill of the kind, and am of the opinion that the general public is also, with the exception of the special few that derive benefit from it. I wish that somebody who had the time would circulate a petition to Congress and the Senate protesting against any such misuse of the public money. I would sign it gladly and think a great many of my friends and acquaintances would do the same. I would take it in hand myself if I could devote the time to it that would be necessary.

THE TROUBLE BORROWER.

From The Washington Star.

The man who borrows trouble—will he kindly step this way?
We read so much about him in the papers,
day by day,
That we'd kind of like to see him and to greet him with a smile,
For we're truly fascinated by his philanthropic style.
He is worried 'most to death for fear the people up in Mars
Are making vain endeavors to converse beyond the stars,
And he says the "yellow peril" may destroy our cultured plan
And put us all in serfdom to the sallow Chinaman.

He's going 'round in sackcloth, for he says
it hurts his pride
To hear the talk of a canal that isn't fortified.
He weeps and says that Caesar's ghost is stalking through the town,
And presently the President will wear an Emperor's crown.
And our financial system, he declares with dark dismay,
Will land the population in the poorhouse
some fine day.
And we'll get a standing army that delights to terrorize,
And they'll massacre civilians just for fun and exercise.

Oh, this man who borrows trouble—he is very, very kind,
To take so many mighty obligations on his mind,
And leave us to enjoy the passing season,
with its cheer,
And revel in prosperity; so long as it is here.
We'll let him take these burdens be so genially invites;
We will give him what he asks for every time he calls or writes.
We will lend him all our troubles, and his store shall know no lack,
And he'll be unwelcome only when he tries to pay them back.

CASTELLANES MUST LIVE ON $200,000 A YEAR

Income Fixed by Court Pending Wertheimer Suit Decision.

Whatever Action French Courts May Take Will Be Non-Effective Here, Counsel Contends.

Unless the Court of Appeals reverses the decision handed down yesterday by Justice Beach, in the Supreme Court, Anna, Countess de Castellane, and her husband, Count Boni de Castellane, will have to content themselves with an annual income of $200,000 a year instead of the $800,000 they have been accustomed to receive from the estate of Jay Gould. This reduction in income will last until the action of Anton J. Dittmar, as assignee of claims of Asher Wertheimer of London, is decided by a jury trial.

Mr. Wertheimer sold bric-à-brac to the Count and Countess and received acceptances from them to the amount of $377,000. These acceptances, in the form of drafts, were assigned by Mr. Wertheimer to Mr. Dittmar. He at once began proceedings in the Supreme Court here through his counsel, Samuel Untermyer, seeking to restrain George J. Gould, Edwin Gould, and Helen Gould, as trustees under the will of Jay Gould, from paying over to the Countess de Castellane more than $250,000 a year from her father's estate pending the trial of the action to recover the money claimed to be due on the drafts.

The temporary injunction was granted last November, and since then the Countess has only been receiving $250,000 a year. Later, when counsel for the trustees under the will sought to have the injunction set aside, counsel for Mr. Dittmar asked to have the allowance decreased to $100,000 a year. It was on the argument of these motions that the Justice continues the temporary injunction until after the trial and fixes the annual allowance at $200,000.

Counsel for Mr. Dittmar in the present action said yesterday that they had other claims against the Count and Countess, and that they might adopt the same methods as to those claims. They further took the ground that whatever action the French courts might take as to the numerous claims, it would have no influence on the courts here, as the source of income of the Count and Countess was here in New York. Justice Beach, in his decision, says:

> The motion at bar seeks the continuance pendente lite of a preliminary writ of injunction heretofore granted in this action, restraining payment of the income of a trust fund created by the last will and testament of Jay Gould to the beneficiary therein, Anna Gould, Countess de Castellane. The objections urged by counsel for the trustees rest upon an alleged lack of jurisdiction in the court, for the reason that the defendants Castellane are non-residents and no judgment has been entered against them in an action at law, and no execution issued thereon has been returned unsatisfied. Further and in addition, that by the terms of the last will and testament of Jay Gould, creating the trust, the income of the fund is beyond the reach of the beneficiary, the Countess de Castellane. Additional objections are urged of less importance on this motion.
> The objection to the jurisdiction of the court is not well taken. It was said by Chief Justice Marshall in Russell vs. Clark: "If a claim is to be satisfied out of a fund which is accessible only by the aid of a Court of Chancery, application may be made in the first instance to that court, which will not require that the claim should be first established in a court of law."
>
> The fifth clause in the third codicil to the will of Jay Gould provides that income from the trust fund shall not be "liable or chargeable in the hands of the executors and trustees for any debt or liability of such beneficiary."
>
> This declaration has no protective power in this State, although in some others it has been held effective.
>
> This case demands a rigid enforcement of these principles from the facts. For about six years last past the defendants Castellane have purchased from plaintiff's assignor valuable merchandise. The plaintiff holds numbers of their unpaid and oft-renewed bills of exchange. His assignor has failed to secure payment for his property, or even a return thereof after repeated demands. The Countess Castellane receives an income of $800,000 yearly from the trust estate. She resides in Paris, France, while the trustees are residents of this State, and the principal fund is within this jurisdiction. Therefore, unless the injunction and action are upheld, the plaintiff and his assignor, despoiled of their property, will be absolutely remediless, with nothing left but the broken promises and the commercial dishonor of their debtors.

Samuel Untermyer, who represents Mr. Dittmar, when seen yesterday said:

"The effect of the decision will be to tie up in the hands of George Gould and his associate trustees all the income belonging to the Countess since last November except to the extent of $200,000 per year. In our original papers we conceded $250,000 per year for the support of the Countess and her children. At that time we did not know of the extent to which her estate was involved. When this was learned we reduced our concession to $100,000 per year. The Court has now fixed the allowance at $200,000 per year, out of which the Countess will have to pay interest on the numerous mortgages on her various palaces throughout France."

"How about other creditors?" Mr. Untermyer was asked.

"The decision in this case will affect other creditors only indirectly. The accumulated income will go first to pay the claim of Asher Wertheimer, when that has been established. Any other creditors who may want to reach this income will have to begin independent actions. When they establish their claims in the courts here I assume that they will be paid in the order in which they bring their suits. The result of this decision, if sustained by the courts on appeal, as we believe it will be, will be to make absolutely ineffectual all proceedings by the creditors in France, for the reason that the fund will be held here and the creditors will get nothing there with which to pay themselves until after the creditors who sue here have been satisfied."

Mr. Untermyer added that he did not think any adjudication by the French courts would have any effect here.

Asked whether any other creditors were likely to begin suit here, Mr. Untermyer said that his firm represents some other creditors, who will now begin suit.

Charles A. Gardiner, ex-Judge John F. Dillon, and Col. E. C. James represented the trustees under the will of Jay Gould. They declined to comment on the decision and the possibility of an appeal.

RECEPTION ON THE VADERLAND.

Railroad and American Line Agents Visit the New Steamship.

About 200 local railroad agents and agents of the International Navigation Company from different parts of the country were entertained at a reception on the new American Line steamship Vaderland yesterday. The guests were received by James A. Wright, Second Vice President of the company, assisted by John M. Kirk, manager of the first cabin department; A. Lederer, who is in charge of the second cabin department, and several other officials of the line.

The Vaderland is a twin-screw ship, 580 feet long, of about 12,000 gross tons, driven by quadruple expansion engines. The vessel is fitted with every device for safety, one novel feature being a promenade for the firemen on the boat deck, where there are sheltered seats for them, in which to rest after their arduous tours of duty in the stokehold.

An elaborate luncheon was served in the main saloon, and upon leaving every guest was presented with a bound and illustrated volume descriptive of the company's service and particularly of the important part taken by its vessels St. Paul, St. Louis, New York, and Paris, in breaking the power of Spain during the last war.

A similar entertainment will be given this afternoon, when the guests will be steamship agents, and to-morrow the Vaderland sails for Southampton.

STOTT MEMORIAL TROPHY.

Bronze Statuette Presented to Twenty-second Regiment in Memory of the Captain.

When Capt. Frank I. Stott of the Twenty-second Regiment died two weeks ago his death was keenly felt by his associate officers, as well as by the rank and file. His associate officers determined to commemorate his zeal, energy, skill, and personal qualities by presenting a trophy to the regiment that would stimulate the work of recruiting, in which he was so signally successful. One of Tiffany's most beautiful and appropriate bronzes, entitled, "The Volunteer," was selected for the purpose. It was delivered last evening, and bears the following inscription:

> The Stott Memorial Prize for the Company Recruiting the Greatest Number During the Year.

The bronze was presented to the Twenty-second Armory at the annual review of the regiment by Col. John T. Camp last evening. It is a notable example of American sculpture by the well-known artist Fitzgerald Peploe.

NOVEL PICTURE EXHIBITION.

Beasts and Birds by American and Foreign Artists at the National Arts Club.

On Thursday night there closes in the galleries of the National Arts Club one of the most unusual and yet generally interesting exhibitions of the season, that of work by men who have studied animals in conditions of wild life.

George Catlin, who went to "the plains" during the fifties, lived with the prairie Indians, and painted hundreds of pictures, is seen in a crude but very effective oil painting as he crawls up to a herd of buffalo along with an Indian comrade. Both are covered with the skins of prairie wolves, of whom in daylight the bulls take very little notice. The Indian has his bow and arrows, but Catlin, whose features were somewhat Indian, with a clearer, sharper cast, is seen with album and pencil in hand under the wolfskin drawing the portraits of the shaggy monarchs of the plains. Audubon's big lithographs of American animals carry one back beyond Catlin.

The modern artists who picture beasts and birds are in curious contrast with these earlier men. Take Ringius, for example. He gives you a really capital landscape and paints a wapiti or mouse or antelope with the technique of a man who leaves nothing to chance. Indeed, on the walls are examples of the care with which he has studied the different parts of an antelope, so as to give him mastery of the creature when he comes to paint him in the proper environment. Catlin, whose technique is wretched, hits the dramatic point at the first blow. To persons who know little about the technical side of pictures, his rude but striking paintings are much the more attractive.

Ernest Seton, otherwise known as Seton-Thompson, is seen in black-and-whites which unite careful study with dramatic action, as in his quarreling otters and hounds retreating before a charge of bears. Then there is Charles R. Knight, whose animals and birds represent the most conscientious studies from life, as well as spirited reconstructions of extinct animals, as, for example, the water color of the mosasaurus pursuing dolphins through the prehistoric sea waves, and his modeled statuette of the Irish elk, incredibly big of horn, found in the peat bogs of the Emerald Isle. A lover of animals has ordered a bronze to be cast from this model. In birds Louis Agassiz Fuertes easily bears off the palm. His sharp-shinned hawk, horned owl, red-winged blackbird, Canada jay, and other familiar birds are painted with the most loving zeal. The head of a sitting rabbit, with his staring eye, is capitally hit off. The various bulls and cows in bronze and wood and plaster in the exhibition, some by Americans, others by foreigners, are in strange contract with the bulls in a series of etchings by Goya, the famous Spaniard, which show bullfighting among the Iberians, Moors, and Spaniards—Charles V. killing his bull, famous toreadors indulging in all kinds of playful antics, grisly accidents, and playful scenes from the bull-ring. Water colors by Ozawa of Tokio, with birds and fish, prove once more the mastery and charm of Japanese workmen, their exquisite sense for grouping and for combination of flowers and plants with birds.

Mr. Charles R. Lamb, who suggested this exhibition, is to be congratulated on the idea.

GEO. N. TYNER'S COLLECTION.

Foreign and American Paintings at the American Art Galleries.

Mr. George N. Tyner of Holyoke has experienced the vicissitudes of most collectors of pictures; while securing a number of good pieces, he has been loaded with not a few daubs, and in several cases has been victimized by the astute person of Paris who knows how to imitate a master in a way that interests experts. The seventy-five canvases vary so much in quality that any one who does not remember how a collector is apt to alter gradually his own taste through a rude awakening to errors of purchase might well marvel how a man could endure the good and the bad on his walls. There is always a closet full of dethroned favorites on the premises of an art dealer, and there are always upper rooms and garrets in a collector's house where the mistakes find lodgment. When it comes to a sale, everything goes to the hammer, and the auctioneer is often put to his trumps to find a good word for the lame ducks which represent the early phases of the collecting fever.

The open-air or "decomposed light" pictures are the best in the gallery. Notably the "Old Church at Vernon," by Claude Monet, carries a message of charm across the widest gallery. The old rule of standing off thrice the width of the canvas in order to see the picture at its best fails entirely with these "luminists." Six times or ten times is a better rule for them. The church of Vernon is seen through the soft haze of a European Springtide, which is not to be found in our climate, not even in our lazy Indian Summer. "Vetheuil," by the same master hand, is only second in beauty. Camille Pisarro is also shown in a capital example, a view of an orchard with buildings beyond the blossoming trees. Alfred Sisley's "Morning on the Banks of the Loing," from the same region on the fringe of Fontainebleau forest, has a finish unusual in his work. The trees suggest Corot. There is a fine "Evening," by Daubigny. Fritz von Uhde has a sorrowful group of women in "Good Friday Morning," but they bear no marks of the Orient, and the surroundings are not those of Palestine. He was intent on the impression of mourning as well through the grief-stricken faces and attitudes of the coarsely clad mourners as by the suggestion of a cemetery wall behind them.

"Les Gorges d'Apremont," by Diaz, is a Fontainebleau forest interior with a red-skirted peasant woman leaning forward in quest of something on the ground. It is not remarkable. The "Virgin and Child" looks like a copy from another hand. There are four copies of which the "Sand Dunes" has some quality. Very stiff and tiresome is Gérôme's "Louis XIV. and His Court in the Park of Versailles," fit only for a historical museum where the sedan chairs, costumes, and coiffures of the period might have documentary value. The impression of intense boredom and vacuity the picture makes may perhaps add to its historical truth, but does not aid it as a work of art. "The Capture of a British Flag at Waterloo," by Detaille, has much the same effect on the observer. The hard ground and the hard shadows under the horse of the successful trooper surprise one in a work by Detaille. It is dated 1889—which perhaps accounts for its lack of the finest quality. A very pleasing example of Charles Jacque is the scene of a shepherdess leaning her elbow on her staff as her flock drinks from a pool near a splendid old oak. The composition is finely distributed. The red and black shepherd dog on the left is alert and capitally given. There are haystacks on the right and a fine distance and sky. Something massive and classical breathes from this picture. Excellent in another way is the poultry yard by Jacque; it has a charming play of color and looks as if it had been painted long subsequent to the life of shepherd life. The "Marine" by Jules Dupré has suffered through time, but the exquisite dull blues and greens of his work during 1870 and 1871 make this picture one of the best in the gallery. Very different is the little landscape called "The Watering Place." May one attribute this to Dupré at all? The specimen of Corot called "Morning" is yet more suspicious looking. Certainly the foreground and middle distance are well painted, but when did Corot ever fall so utterly in painting a sky? It is to be feared that Mr. Tyner has more than once made an investment in a brick none too cleverly gilded.

The figure paintings proper may be said to have their crown in "The Amateur Artist," by L. Loustaunau, dated 1878, a painter who stands between Meissonier and Gérôme. His Cardinal with a taste for painting and the Cardinal's friend who pets hard to be critical as he lolls in front of the prelate's easel are neatly, pleasingly wrought. From Holland comes "Returning from the Boats," a specimen of Israels showing a Dutch fisher boy wading inshore with a baby on his back. "Returning Home," figure by Blommers, is nice in tones, but unduly pointy. Jacquet has an important group in "The Proposal," dated 1878, a cavalier and Roman contadina, very well painted indeed, but merely two models, placed side by side, after all. Ridgeway Knight's "Little Shepherdess" is painted in his well-known Bougereauian fashion. She, too, is posing for her portrait. More virile is the couple of French farmers on horseback by J. J. Veyrassat; they are dressed in their Sunday best, and are pushing their heavy farm horses toward the fair. "Lola" by Henner, looks better in illustration than in the original, because the color of the lips has been forced into a tone that only a cosmetic can give, while the hair suggests too much a wig. Tastes differ; but "Lola" is just a little too Hennery. An admirable disciple of Bougeureau is Cavé, whose head of a young girl, dated 1890, need not be disowned by his master; indeed, it is less "licked" and porcelainlike than Bougureau's head of a young girl in this collection.

Among the American contingent W. S. Macy marks well with a Winter landscape that indicates the soft fluffiness of newly fallen snow and an atmosphere damp with scattered flakes. William M. Chase has an attractive view from Prospect Park, Brooklyn, and Henry W. Ranger a good Autumnal landscape. There are specimens of Henry P. Smith, George McCord, William and James M. Hart, J. G. Brown, M. F. H. De Haas, R. W. Van Beskerck, J. H. Witt, and F. J. Murphy, T. W. Wood, T. J. Guy, and A. T. Bricher. The sale will not be held in the American Art Galleries, but in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria on the night of Friday, Feb. 1.

ARMOUR ESTATE, $15,000,000.

Chicago Packer's Son and Widow Are the Legatees—Will Contains No Bequeats to Charity.

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—The will of the millionaire pork packer and grain dealer P. D. Armour disposes of an estate valued at $15,000,000, according to statements made in an application for letters testamentary filed in the Probate Court here to-day by Malvina B. Armour, widow of deceased, and J. Ogden Armour, his son. Mrs. Armour and J. Ogden Armour are made executrix and executor and are named as legatees, each in charge of one-half of the estate.

Of the testator's wealth, $14,900,000 is in personal property and $100,000 in realty. P. D. Armour and Lester Armour, grandchildren of the testator by his son P. D. Armour, Jr., upon attaining the age of twenty-five, shall each receive $1,000,000, half of this from Malvina B. Armour, their grandmother, and half from J. Ogden Armour, their uncle. At thirty years each is to receive a similar amount from the grandmother and uncle. As a reason for not leaving his grandchildren more, the writer of the will explains that their father during his life had already received nearly all of his share in the estate. To this the children and their mother are heirs.

The executrix and the executor are given full power to manage the estate without bond. The instrument is dated Pasadena, Cal., Jan. 30, 1900.

Armour Institute, which Mr. Armour founded, is not mentioned in the will. L. C. Krauthoff, an attorney long in the service of Mr. Armour, declared that Mr. Armour had made provision for the institute before drawing his will at Pasadena. In reference to the fact that the will leaves nothing to charity, Mr. Krauthoff said:

"Mr. Armour gave to charity during his life, rather than to hold back the good it would do till after his death. A day never passed during his business career that he did not give liberally to some charity, and the aggregate of his gifts of this character would amount well up into the millions."

The fact that the estate was much below the popular estimate is explained by the assertion that when his health began to fail, following the Leiter wheat deal, Mr. Armour divided $30,000,000 between his sons, Philip D. and J. Ogden, thus relieving himself of considerable responsibility and saving the estate the payment of a large inheritance tax.

WILLIAM RICE'S ESTATE.

Millionaire's Nephew Moves for a Temporary Administrator of the Property.

Surrogate Fitzgerald, sitting in Chambers, will hear a motion to-day which may have an important effect on the disposal of the millions of the late William Marsh Rice. It is not generally known that so far the controversy over the estate of the dead millionaire has been such that the property he left is in somewhat of a chaotic condition. The stocks and bonds he left in safe deposit vaults in this city still remain, and the large holdings of real estate of Mr. Rice in Texas are in such a condition that the tenants are paying no rent.

This complication all grows out of the two wills left by the millionaire. One will, made in 1896, made certain disposal of the estate; the other will, made shortly before the testator's death, and known as the "Patrick will," makes entirely different bequests. Hornblower, Byrne, Miller & Potter represent the executors under the first will. Albert T. Patrick, the lawyer now confined in the Tombs on the charge of forging certain checks against the accounts of Mr. Rice, has counsel representing him in connection with the second will.

Davies, Stone & Auerbach have now come into the case as counsel for Charles W. Rice, a nephew of the testator, and it is the motion made by them which will be heard by the Surrogate this morning. Their application is for a temporary administrator. If his administrator is appointed it means that he will take charge of the entire estate pending the litigation over the two wills. As "possession is considered nine points of the law," there will be a lively fight over the appointment of the temporary administrator.

At the time the proceedings are on here, similar motions will be made in Texas, with the view of solving the muddle over the rents on real property there.

The Truth About Mr. Ottendorfer's Will

From The New Yorker Staatz-Zeitung.

The assertion has been made by different parties that Mr. Oswald Ottendorfer had excluded from his legacy of $50,000 given to the employes of the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung all those who are members of labor unions. These rumors are founded upon an arbitrary and forced explanation of a certain paragraph of the will. We deem it our duty to state that the wording of the legacy corresponds exactly with the one contained in Mrs. Ottendorfer's will, published some years ago.

Every employe of the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung who has workeu there uninterruptedly for one year before the death of Mr. Ottendorfer receives his share of the legacy, whatsoever his occupation may have been. No exceptions whatsoever will be made, and the membership in a labor union or other organizations of any kind does not change the mode of distribution of the legacy. The assertion that Mr. Ottendorfer was inimical to labor organizations is untrue, and could easily be disproved, and the present management of the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung follows the ideas of the deceased also in this matter. All rumors attempting to create the belief that members of labor unions would be treated differently from other employes of the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung are, as far as they are not made without knowledge of the existing conditions, malicious inventions.

APPOINTED TO THE BENCH.

Governor Names Chief Justice of New Jersey Supreme Court.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 28.—Gov. Voorhees sent to the Senate to-night the name of Judge Charles E. Hendrickson to succeed the late Justice Ludlow as a member of the Supreme Court. The Governor also sent to the Senate the name of Justice William F. Gummere, one of the present members of the Supreme Court to succeed Chief Justice Depue next November.

Judge Hendrickson is one of the special Judges of the Court of Errors and Appeals. In politics he is a Democrat. It is semi-officially announced that the Governor will nominate ex-Mayor G. D. W. Vroom to succeed Judge Hendrickson as a special Judge of the Court of Errors and Appeals. Mr. Vroom is also a Democrat.

It is generally believed that Gov. Voorhees will nominate Senator Mahlon Pitney of Warren County to succeed Justice Gummere when the latter becomes Chief Justice. Mr. Pitney has been an aspirant for the Republican nomination for Governor, and his accepting a place on the Supreme Court bench would leave an open field for Franklin Murphy.

Preparing for the Solar Eclipse.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 28.—One of the finest equipments ever made for the observation of a total solar eclipse was finished to-day by Prof. John A. Brasher of Allegheny for the Smithsonian Institution and the United States Naval Observatory. The instrument will be shipped to Washington to-morrow, and will be taken to the Island of Sumatra for use on May 17. Probably the most important instruments in the equipment will be four photographing telescopes of four inches diameter and eleven feet focal length, especially designed to assist the effort of Prof. Samuel P. Langley to locate intra-Mercurial planets. The lenses have been made to cover a tremendously large field, plates 24 by 30 inches being possible.

A Rival to The Commoner.

WOODBRIDGE, N. J., Jan. 28.—It was announced here to-day that Mrs. Grace White of 33 West Sixty-fifth Street, Manhattan, and Frederick Tyrell, the editor of the local newspaper, will shortly issue a new publication to be called The Reasoner. The announced object and purpose of the new publication as made by Mr. Tyrell are to offset and counteract the evil and harm liable to be done by William Jennings Bryan's Commoner.

PLANS OF CITIZENS' UNION

Committee, in Executive Session, Discusses the Next Campaign.

Convention Will Meet and Adopt a Platform in April—Has No Candidate for Mayor.

The City Committee of the Citizens' Union met last night in executive session, and for two hours discussed phases of the coming municipal campaign. Because of the incompleteness of the organization of the union in Brooklyn the selection of ten additional delegates at large was deferred.

A committee of three has been appointed in each of the twenty-one Assembly districts of Kings County, each committee comprising a Republican, a Democrat, and a Labor man. These are to organize a branch of the union in each district and in the coming contest the branches of the Citizens' Union in Kings, Queens, and Richmond will be integral parts of the Citizens' Union of New York. It is believed that Brooklyn will be pretty well organized before the fourth Monday of next month, when the union will meet in the new quarters, on the corner of Sixteenth Street and Fourth Avenue. The organization has been perfected in Richmond and is well under way in Queens.

At the February meeting arrangements will be made for a City Convention in April. Delegates will be elected from all the Assembly districts in Greater New York, the number of delegates being apportioned to the number of enrolled members. No ratio has yet been fixed.

The convention will first adopt a platform. That of 1897 may be modified or amplified, but the managers of the Union feel that the declaration of principles should be made as soon as possible, because many are disinclined to become members until they know just what the Union stands for. At the same time a Committee of Seventy will be appointed. Upon this body will devolve all the details and conferences with other anti-Tammany bodies with reference to the selection of candidates. This committee is expected to report at an adjourned convention to be held late in July or early in August.

After the meeting Secretary Thomas A. Fulton said: "The Union has no candidates for Mayor or any other office. There has been no discussion of that proposition. Any statement that the Union, as a body, favors the nomination of Bird S. Coler for Mayor is erroneous."

"Is there any sentiment for Mr. Coler among members of the Union?" Mr. Fulton was asked.

"That," he replied, "is a difficult question to answer. No poll has been made. Still if members were asked to announce their choice some might favor Controller Coler."

The Citizens' Union of the Eighth Assembly District held a rousing meeting last night at 168 Eldridge Street and elected the following officers for the year 1901: Chairman—Dr. Bernard Lazarus; First Vice President—George Van Dien; Second Vice President—Isaac Marks; Treasurer—Dr. Louis Druskin; Sergeant at Arms—Charles K. Lebeck; Chairman of Executive Board—Arthur A. Goldstein.

Dr. Lazarus says that the main object of the organization is to secure the election of honest and competent representatives for public office, irrespective of party affiliations, in local elections.

The City Committee of the Union repudiates the Lazarus organization in the Eighth District.

DUTCH PASSENGER SHIP SUNK.

Sixteen of Those on Board the Steamer Holland Drowned.

ROTTERDAM, Jan. 28.—The steamer Holland, from London, was sunk while entering Nieuwewaterweg (at the entrance of the River Maas) this morning. The vessel parted amidships.

The Captain and six men were saved, but sixteen members of the crew and passengers were drowned.

The vessel referred to in the dispatch from Rotterdam is probably the Dutch steamer Holland, of 521 tons net register, owned by the Nederlandsche Stoomboot Maatschappij of Rotterdam. She was built in 1874 at Fyenoord. She was 223 feet long, had 28 feet 2 inches beam, and was 14 feet 8 inches deep.

The recent movements of the Holland are not given in any of the shipping books available.

CATHOLIC CONVERTS' LEAGUE.

Constitution Adopted at a Meeting in the Catholic Club.

Archbishop Corrigan presided at a meeting of the newly-formed Catholic Converts' League of America, which was held at the Catholic Club last evening. The principal business of the meeting was the adoption of a constitution, which sets forth that one of the objects of the league is to propagate the Catholic faith in America by personal example and social intercourse with non-Catholics.

Dr. B. F. Da Costa, the President of the society, called the meeting to order. Archbishop Corrigan was the first speaker. He said that he approved of the work of the league, and believed that it would accomplish much good. Other speakers were the Rev. Talbot Smith, the Rev. John Hughes, and the Rev. F. Deshon, a graduate of West Point, and a former officer of the United States Army, who said that he had been in the Catholic Church for fifty years and was the oldest convert in America.

Among the converts present were A. R. L. Gunn, ex-rector of Epiphany Church, Brooklyn, and at one time Chaplain in the English Army; L. Stanton Floyd Jones, Stuart Coates, and Miss Elizabeth Miller.

CRAZY SNAKE AT HENRIETTA.

Lieut. Dixon Trying to Make Friends with the Prisoner.

HENRIETTA, Indian Territory, Jan. 28.—Chitto Harjo, or Crazy Snake, leader of the warring Creeks, who is a United States prisoner here, remained sullen to-day and refused to confer with Lieut. Dixon. It is believed, however, that the wily chief will soon show a friendly spirit and that the result will be a prompt ending of the insurrection.

When the chief, mounted and surrounded by four deputies, appeared at the tent of Lieut. Dixon, he was greeted considerately. Fifty soldiers, grouped about a camp fire, sang "The Blue and the Gray," while Lieut. Dixon made friendly overtures to the prisoner. The Indian sat, stoical and proud, in his saddle.

"Tell him that the officer wishes to shake his hand as a friend," said Lieut. Dixon to the interpreter.

Harjo grunted his response and slipped from his pony. In the meantime soldiers hurriedly prepared a tent for the chief, while others grouped themselves about him.

A reporter pressed the interpreter to get him to talk, but Crazy Snake shook his head and would only say: "Not to-night; maybe to-morrow."

The capture of Crazy Snake is believed here to be tha most important move since the outbreak. He haa been the agitator and the real leader of the dissatisfied Indians, and now that he is safely in the hands of the Government it is believed his followers will soon be brought to terms.

SOUTH McALESTER, Indian Territory, Jan. 28.—Daniel Bell, chief of the Choctaw Snakes, when interviewed to-day, stated that the Indians are not on the war path and will not molest white people or their property. Railroad property is safe. There is no danger of bridges being burned.

The Indians' organization, as perfected for mutual protection, will be kept up, but not as a menace to the white people. Chief Bell claims to have authority from the President to be governed by the treaty of 1820, and none other is recognized. The Choctaw Snakes want to hold lands in common and are opposed to allotment. No further trouble is expected.

City Magistrates Meet.

The Board of City Magistrates met last night in the West Fifty-fourth Street Court House, Magistrate Deuel presiding. With him were Magistrates Crane, Flammer, Olmsted, Brann, Mott, Hogan, and Zeller. It was arranged to meet at the same place Thursday night to receive for transmission to the Legislature the annual report of the board. Max Rechnitzer and Max Eckstein were selected to go before the municipal civil service examiners for examination to fill one vacancy for a court interpreter. A committee of three was appointed to revise the rules of the courts.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

One notable event and many minor affairs, such as receptions, teas, and at-homes, were characteristic of yesterday, and also will be of to-day. Yesterday it was the Gerry cotillion, and this evening it will be the Charity ball. Other hostesses have kindly put aside whatever arranged dates they might have had, so that the "coast is clear," to use a homely expression.

***

The wedding of Mrs. Henri Cutting and J. Lorimer Worden will take place to-day at Palm Beach. It will be a very quiet affair. Mrs. Cutting was to have been married in New York, but the illness of a child prevented her. Mr. and Mrs. Worden will make a trip to New York after their wedding, and then return to Florida late in the Spring.

***

August Belmont and party are due to-day at Palm Beach. William K. Vanderbilt, it is supposed, will be there eventually, but he had not arrived at that destination yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney will go abroad, and possibly Mr. and Mrs. Whitney will go on Mr. Vanderbilt's yacht, although this is not decided.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt are at the Chateau Frontenac, Quebec. They are due at Newport about the end of the week.

Robert W. Patterson of this city has purchased a large tract of land adjoining that of John Sloane. He will build a Summer residence, which is to be completed within a year.

***

The second of the four subscription dances arranged by a number of maids and matrons will take place at Delmonico's on Feb. 7. Among the patronesses are Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mrs. Dallas Bache Pratt, Mrs. Henry Hollins, Miss Josephine Drexel, and Mrs. Frederick Gallatin.

***

Among the minor events of last evening was the theatre party of the Sinsom Club, which went to the Criterion. The chaperons were Mrs. Oliver Livingston Jones, Mrs. J. Burling Lawrence, and Mrs. John W. Boothby.

***

The Knickerbocker Dancing class had its third meeting at Delmonico's last evening. This is the class arranged by Mrs. Henry Clarke Coe. Among the other patronesses are Mrs. Albert Effingham Lawrence, Mrs. James Russell, Mrs. Wendell C. Phillips, and Mrs. Edward Davis Jones.

***

Mrs. John Jay White gave a small musicale at her residence, 103 West Fifty-seventh Street, yesterday afternoon. This is the first of two entertainments, the second of which will take place on Monday, Feb. 4.

***

Mrs. Frederick Pearson of 3 West Fifty-seventh Street will give a bridge whist party to-day at which handsome prizes will be offered. There will be "at homes" by Mrs. Walter Roberts Gillette and Miss Gillette of 24 West Fortieth Street, Mrs. Louis J. Pooler of 17 East Sixty-fifth Street, Mrs. Charles Belmont de Saulles, and Miss de Saulles of 2 West Thirty-sixth Street, Mrs. W. Lanman Bull of 805 Fifth Avenue, besides many others.

***

This evening there will be many large and handsome dinners given, and from most of them the guests will go to the Charity Ball. Mrs. Pembroke Jones of 13 West Fifty-first Street will give a dinner of twenty covers; also Mrs. Richard Lounsbery of 12 East Thirty-fifth Street, Mrs. Robert Hoe of 11 East Thirty-sixth Street, Mrs. H. Mortimer Brooks of 1 East Forty-fifth Street, Mrs. H. Hobrooke Curtis of 118 Madison Avenue, Mrs. William Consuelo of 11 West Forty-eighth Street, and others will also give dinners. Mrs. Charles A. Childs (Miss Jennie P. Clark) of 28 East Forty-ninth Street, will take a party of eight or more to the theatre and entertain them afterward at supper.

Mrs. James H. Stebbins of 80 Madison Avenue has recalled her invitations for Thursday, Jan. 31, owing to her illness.

***

The dinner given by Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., on Sunday evening was a handsome affair. Mrs. Vanderbilt wore a gorgeous gown of scarlet panne velvet and diamonds. Her guests included Mrs. Arthur Paget, Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Ogden Goelet and Miss Goelet, Dr. and Mrs. W. Seward Webb, and Mr. and Mrs. M. Orme Wilson. The dinner was given in honor of Edouard and Jean de Reszke.

Mr. and Mrs. Heber R. Bishop have cards out for three dinners to be given on Friday, Feb. 8; Wednesday, Feb. 13, and Tuesday, Feb. 19. Mrs. F. S. Auchincloss has issued invitations for a theatre party of sixteen on Saturday, Feb. 4.

Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry (Miss Livingston) gave at their town house, 2 East Sixty-first Street, last night, a small dance for young people. The guests began arriving about 11 o'clock, and were received in the salon by Mrs. Gerry and the Misses Gerry. Supper was served after midnight at small tables placed in the dining room and hall by Mr. Gerry's own chef, and the flowers used for decorating were brought from the Gerry conservatories. The cotillion was danced in the picture gallery, and was led by Craig Wadsworth, assisted by Mr. Baldwin, the leaders dancing with the Misses Angelica and Mabel Gerry, respectively. There were about seventy couples in the cotillion, the favors for which were tulle hats in different shades, filled with flowers, basket fashion, and tied with long ribbons to match; opera glasses, cloisonné, and other trays for pins, ashes, &c., and cigarette cases, &c. The mistaken idea prevailed among many that this dance was the large ball that the Gerrys usually give annually, when, in fact, it was simply a cotillion for young people, and, instead of the 500 to 600 invitations sent out for the larger affairs, only between 200 and 300 were issued for last night's dance. These included a few of Mr. and Mrs. Gerry's older friends and many young married couples.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

Annual Charity Ball at the Arlington—Mr. Depew Entertains.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—Senator Depew entertained this evening at dinner. The guests of honor were the Speaker of the House and Mrs. Henderson. The company included the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Gage, the Postmaster General and Mrs. Smith, the Bishop of Washington and Mrs. Satterlee, Senator and Mrs. Fairbanks, Dr. and Mrs. Curry, Dr. and Mrs. McKim, Mr. and Mrs. A. Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. Merriam, Mr. and Mrs. McAuley, Mrs. Manning, Mrs. Postlethwaite, and Mr. Edie. The entire company went later to the Charity Ball.

The annual Charity Ball, which each season becomes more of a social feature in Washington, was held this evening at the Hotel Arlington. Fully 800 guests were in attendance. The Supreme Court, Cabinet, and Senatorial circles were well represented. The beneficiary of the ball was the Children's Hospital. Mrs. Philip H. Sheridan headed the Reception Committee, which included Mrs. Charles Davis, Mrs. John F. Leech, Mrs. William H. Hoeke, and Mrs. Postlethwaite. George Howard was floor manager. The patronesses, nearly all of whom were present, were:

Mrs. Root,	Mrs. Munn,
Mrs. Gage,	Mrs. Leiter,
Mrs. Hitchcock,	Mrs. Ward,
Duchess De Arcos,	Mrs. Townsend,
Mrs. Fuller,	Mrs. Henry May,
Mrs. Gray,	Miss Faulding,

Mrs. Roessle,	Mrs. Arnold Hague,
Miss Patton,	Mrs. Robert McCormick,
Mrs. Wilkins,	Mrs. Wallach.

The Marine Band furnished the music for dancing, and the cavalry band from Fort Myer played in the large salon, where there was a promenade concert.

SIR JOHN W. MACLURE DEAD.

He Was a Leading Manchester Business Man and Philanthropist.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—Sir John W. Maclure, Bart., Member of Parliament, died this morning, in the sixty-sixth year of his age.

Sir John William Maclure was born in Manchester on April 22, 1835, and was a leader of municipal reform in that city, as well as one of its best-known business men. He founded, with the late Canon Richson, the Manchester and Salford Sanitary Association, and labored in various other directions to improve the homes and sanitation of large and overcrowded towns. He was the founder of the well-known Cotton Famine Fund, and was its honorary Secretary from 1862 to 1866. With Lord Derby, who was Premier at that time, he distributed more than £1,500,000 among the unfortunate cotton operatives of the North of England.

It was to Sir John that Manchester chiefly owed the magnificent cathedral that the city now owns. As Churchwarden of Manchester he raised nearly £50,000 toward the restoration of the ancient parish church—a fine specimen of Gothic architecture—and later it became the cathedral of the Diocese of Manchester.

In 1898 a Baronetcy was conferred on Sir John. For twelve years previous to then he had been a member of Parliament, sitting as Conservative member for the Stretford Division of Lancashire. He was again returned for the same division at the election last November. Sir John was a leading Freemason.

The heir to the Baronetcy is Sir John's eldest son, Capt. J. E. S. Maclure, who married, in 1898, Miss Ruth McHardy.

SPORT ON THE SPEEDWAY

Forest Wilkes Won in Several Fast and Exciting Brushes.

COXEY IN GOOD CONDITION

Many Amateur Drivers Take Advantage of the Present Prime State of Harlem River Course.

There was some lively sport on the Harlem River Speedway yesterday afternoon, despite the biting north wind that blew, for the frequenters of the stretch seem anxious to take advantage of the present prime condition of the course while it lasts.

Forest Wilkes, (2:11¼,) driven by George Coleman, was the favorite of the afternoon, winning about every brush in which he was started. After several warming jogs that showed Forest Wilkes was unusually fast, he was turned with The Dude, (2:13¾,) driven by C. R. Jarvis. It was a nip-and-tuck race for a quarter, when The Dude gained a lead of a half length. This he held until close to the finish, when Forest Wilkes came upon him with a rush and won by almost a length. Mr. Jarvis at once challenged Mr. Coleman to a return brush, and, the latter accepting, logged his horse back to the start. After several false starts, the animals were finally got away, Forest Wilkes getting a slight advantage before 200 yards had been covered. A spurt placed The Dude on even terms, and then began an exciting contest for a heat. Nearing the finish the animals were nose and nose, and it looked very much like a dead heat until The Dude made a desperate spurt that landed him a winner by a narrow margin. A trial heat was, of course, necessary to settle matters, and in this the handsome trotting pacer Vic Pa, (2:20,) driven by David Lamar lined. The start was a good one, as the first quarter was covered with all on even terms. Ada P. showed in front several times, but was in turn headed by Forest Wilkes and The Dude. Just as the head of the latter was reached both The Dude and Ada P. broke. It was a handy break, however, and both animals caught instantly and were after their opponent like a shot. But Forest Wilkes was not to be caught so easily, for he made excellent use of the opportunity afforded him, and crossed the line a winner by a length. Ada P. took second place, being an open length ahead of The Dude, who in turn was two lengths in front of Mr. Coxey, who, at an airline end, finished 4. Until he was not going to keep the animal, he was finally induced to try to go with Percy, (2:17) driven by C. Alcorn. For more than half a mile down the track Percy held a good lead, but it was evident Mr. Meyer did not know Coxey's finishing qualities, for when he brought in hand the brush well in hand, Coxey, by being touched with the whip, showed a burst of speed that placed him a half length in front of his opponent, and before Percy could even make an effort to close the gap the line was crossed.

A Dicks Mac on the road behind a handsome gelding known as Billy Dodge. The animal has no mark, but covered several quarters in time that would make some of the Speedway favorites work to beat it. P. S. Russell had Sprightly and May Thorn to the pole, and David Lamar worked Teto (2:11) out several times, and found he was not in condition and sent him back to the sheds.

Among others on the road were Melville C. Boynton, driving Dufore, (2:13½); John Timmins, driving Sandy Boy, (2:12½); Louis Kunz, driving George Wallace, (2:17½); A. C. Norton, driving a team of pacers, and Charles Thornton, driving Estelle and Daisy to the pole.

HARNESS MATCH RACE IS OFF.

Owners Failed to Agree on Terms for Alice Barnes-The Monk Contest.

The match race proposed between the two famous Speedway trotters, Frederick Gerken's The Monk, (2:08½,) and E. E. Smathers's Alice Barnes, 2:11¾, after having been talked of for nearly two weeks, finally fell through last night, after a meeting of the owners at the Rossmore Hotel, Broadway and Forty-second Street. Messrs. Gerken and Smathers failing to agree on terms. The first challenge came from Mr. Smathers, for a race for $10,000 a side, and a meeting was arranged for, to be held last Wednesday, but Mr. Gerken's absence at that time gave the impression that he did not wish to make the race. Later, Mr. Gerken, stirred to action by the statement that he had long back, issued a return challenge, and last Friday night posted with Mr. Putney, proprietor of the Rossmore, $1,000 as a forfeit to bind a match for $5,000 a side, mile heats, three in five, to be trotted at the Grand Circuit meeting in Cleveland next Summer. He then appointed a meeting, to be held last night, at the Rossmore, when it was expected an agreement would be reached.

Both horse owners were present, and about twenty-five prominent men interested in harness racing were also in attendance. Mr. Gerken repeated his proposition, made on June 8, put up the forfeit, and Mr. Smathers answered that he was willing to make the race, but insisted on more positive terms, his proposition being for each owner to post $2,500, play or pay, for a race on a fixed date, the stakes to be increased on the day of the race to $5,000 a side. To this Mr. Gerken would not agree, as he said his horse, The Monk, was more or less a cripple, and he could not be sure that he would be in race on any designated day. Mr. Smathers, on the other hand, he said, had a sound horse, and could be reasonably certain of racing at any time, which would give him an unfair advantage in a play or pay match, arranged on the terms proposed. Mr. Gerken held to his original proposition, though he agreed to increase the stakes to $10,000 a side if Mr. Smathers wished it, and stated further that when the time came for the race, he would submit his horse to a veterinary surgeon's examination, and if the horse was found fit to race, he would race or forfeit the money already posted. The discussion lasted long, but as neither owner would recede from the position he had taken, the match was declared off, and Mr. Putney returned to Mr. Gerken the $1,000 that had been deposited with him. The meeting effectually disposed of the chance for a contest between the horses, which horsemen had eagerly looked forward to.

Saratoga Association's New Officials.

The Board of Directors of the reorganized Saratoga Racing Association held a business meeting yesterday afternoon in the rooms of The Jockey Club, Twenty-second Street and Broadway, and made a number of changes in the list of officials governing the affairs of the association. There were present William C. Whitney, Harry K. Knapp, F. R. Hitchcock, Andrew Miller, and Richard T. Wilson, Jr. By resolution the Board of Directors, which originally consisted of five members, was increased to thirteen by the election of Perry Belmont, J. H. Alexander, Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., John G. Follansbee, W. W. Worden, Philip J. Dwyer, J. H. Bradford, and John G. Heckscher. Andrew Miller, who originally was elected as Secretary and Treasurer, offered his resignation as Secretary, while agreeing to continue filling the office as Treasurer, and the meeting elected Harry K. Knapp to the vacant Secretaryship. William C. Whitney, F. R. Hitchcock, H. K. Knapp, Andrew Miller, and R. T. Wilson, Jr., were elected to serve as an Executive Committee. No announcement has been made yet as to the stake programme for the coming Summer races, though a member of the Board of Governors said that all the well-known stakes, except those that were of a purely advertising character, would be renewed.

Lord Beresford's Trotters Sold.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—The American trotters which belonged to the late Lord William Beresford were sold at auction to-day. Pilgteer brought 577 guineas, Harry 440 guineas, and Dupree 105 guineas.

CURLING FOR GORDON MEDAL.

Van Cortlandt Beats Jersey City for the Ring Championship.

Van Cortlandt's strong rink of curlers captured their second important trophy yesterday in the National Curling Clubs' series of games. They defeated the well-known Edwards family rink at Van Cortlandt Lake in the final match for the Gordon medal, emblematic of the rink championship, by 22 points to 9. One week ago they won the important Mitchell medal for the National Club championship. The Thistle Club rink held the Gordon medal last year, but they were put out on Saturday by Jersey City in the first round. Thomas Watt, the strong skip of the Thistle team last year, has been unable to play this season, so the former triumphant team was considerably weakened.

The final match yesterday attracted a number of enthusiasts of the sport, but the one-sided nature of the score was a decided surprise. The opposing players were:

Isaiah Frazier,	C. S. Edwards,
A. Pratt, skip 22	W. D. Edwards, skip. 9

Pratt, who is one of the best skips in the local curling world, contributed materially to the victory of the Van Cortlandt rink. He shot his irons true to the mark with scarcely an exception, and in the opinion of many old timers he never played a stronger or more brilliant game. His opponent, ex-State Senator Edwards of New Jersey, was not up to his usual mark, and failed to bring the big round curling irons within the limits on several occasions. The ice was admirable.

An interesting feature in respect to the players was the fact that not one of the curlers was a native-born Scotchman. Pratt is an American for many generations back, and the Edwards family come from Welsh ancestors. Ogden is an American, William Fraser comes from Nova Scotia, while Isaiah Frazier came nearest toward exemplifying the ancient traditions of the game, as his father, George Frazier, is a native of bonnie Scotland. All were of the moderately younger set of curlers.

A three-rink competition has been arranged for to-morrow between the Van Cortlandt and St. Andrew's Clubs. The opponents are great rivals, and some lively sport is looked for.

President James F. Conley and Secretary David Foulis of the National Curling Club acted as referees in the Gordon medal contest.

AMERICAN LEAGUE MEETING.

Franchises Granted and Circuit Completed with Clubs in Eight Cities.

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 28.—The meeting of the owners of the baseball clubs of the American League opened at noon to-day, and, with the exception of a short recess in the evening, it continued until midnight.

Those present at the meeting were S. S. Frank, H. Goldman, J. J. McGraw, C. W. Sams, S. Miles Brinkley, from Baltimore; James Burns, Detroit; James Franklin, Buffalo; C. Mack, Philadelphia; James Manning, Washington; J. F. Killfoyle and C. W. Somers of Cleveland; Matt Killilea, Milwaukee; B. B. Johnson and Charles Comiskey of Chicago.

A new circuit was arranged in accordance with the report of the Circuit Committee. Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Boston were admitted and Indianapolis, Buffalo, and Minneapolis were dropped.

The new franchises were granted as follows: Baltimore to the new corporation, of which Sidney Franks is President; Philadelphia, Cornelius Mack; Boston, Charles Somers.

The discussion over the new constitution took most of the time during the afternoon and early evening. It was arranged so as to cover the ten-year agreement, and provides for placing the practical control of each club in the hands of the league. Each club agreed to deposit with the President of the league, in trust, the leases of all of its plants, and 51 per cent. of its capital stock and uniform figures on the plant and franchise, which gives the league the right to buy any franchise should a club desire to sell out, and the prospective purchasers be considered undesirable to the other members of the league.

It was voted that the championship schedule shall include 140 games, the same as last year. No date was fixed for the opening of the season, but will probably open one week later and close one week later than last year.

A resolution was passed limiting the number of players of each club to fourteen.

Louisville Baseball Franchise.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 28.—Col. J. F. Whitesides of Louisville, after a long conference with temporary President W. H. Watkins, of the American Baseball Association, has formally signed the agreement binding the clubs' owners and accepted the Louisville franchise in the association. This gives the club satisfactory financial backing.

President Watkins announces the situation in Baltimore and Boston as cleared up. Washington is ready, as is Philadelphia. He expects to hear satisfactory news from A. H. Koch to-day concerning Detroit. This is the only city in which the association has not a park.

Baseball Players for Rochester.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 28.—The following named are players who have signed contracts with the Rochester Baseball Club: William L. Lush, New Haven, Conn.; Joseph Bean, Cambridgeport, Mass.; George Smith, Allegheny, Penn.; Harry O'Hagan, Newark, N. J.; Edward Greminger, Canton, Ohio; Edward Dixon, Grand Rapids, Mich.; George Barclay, Philadelphia; Frank Bonner, Worcester, Mass.; Thomas Walker, Philadelphia; Frank McPartlin, New York; Edward Murphy, Auburn; "Cy" Bowen, Kingston, Ind.; Edward Phelps, Albany; E. A. Mattern, Rush, Penn.; Charles Morse, Auburn, Me.; Isaac Francis, Homestead, Penn.; John McGraw, Baldwinsville; Al Wagner, Carnegie, Penn.; William Clancy, Marlborough, Mass.; Charles Frisbie, Alden, Iowa, and Edward Householder, Buffalo.

Doings of College Athletes.

The sophomores and freshmen of the University of Chicago will hold a gymnastic meet in February. The first impetus to the coming contest was given last week, when the sophomores defeated the freshmen in a one-mile relay race.

The University of Chicago baseball candidates have had their first taste of outdoor practice and Manager Hitchens is the men out on a pleasant day. Two or three of the new men are showing up in fine form, among them being Kirkpatrick, who was formerly catcher for a Missouri college team.

Walter Tewksbury, the sprinter of the University of Pennsylvania, has been a sufferer from the grippe recently and for several days was an inmate of the university hospital. He will probably be unable to go to Boston with the team for the indoor games there on Feb. 16 under the auspices of the Boston Athletic Association.

Pennsylvania's baseball candidates are doing regular gymnasium work for their Spring schedule of games. It has been decided that the annual Southern trip will be taken in April and a New England trip will be taken later in the season. A freshman nine will be organized this year and games are being arranged with Harvard, Cornell, and Columbia.

The Lacrosse Association of New York, composed chiefly of Harvard graduates, has offered cups to the Harvard team winning the class championship this year. The regular Harvard lacrosse team will play a series of games next month with Pennsylvania, Cornell, and Lehigh. H. McConaghy, a member of the Crescent Athletic Club and a Canadian player, has been engaged to coach the Harvard team. All of last year's members are back this year.

The seventh annual intercollegiate and interscholastic relay meet will be held on April 27 on Franklin Field in Philadelphia, under the auspices of the University of Pennsylvania. The one, two, and four-mile championships will be run as usual, and in addition there will be a number of smaller track events. Invitations have been sent to 70 colleges and to 100 schools to send entries, and of these it is practically certain that the leading Eastern colleges will be represented. Silk banners will be given to the winning teams as college trophies.

From the Georgetown University comes the news that sufficient entries have already been secured for the big indoor meet to insure its complete success. The meet will be held in Convention Hall, under the auspices of the university, on March 9. Long, McGirr, W. E. Edwards, one of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club's fast runners; "Dave" Hall, Captain of Brown University's track team; Charles Kiely, and "Jerry" Moynihan are some of the more prominent athletes who have signified their intention to compete. Duffy and Holland are the two strongest Georgetown runners who will be opposed to these outside competitors.

ON LOCAL BOWLING ALLEYS.

Knickerbocker Athletic Club Team Wins Two Games in New York Inter-Club Series.

In the tournament of the New York Inter-Club Bowling League last night the Knickerbocker Athletic Club five won two of their three games with the Harlem Republican Club team on the alleys of the latter club and lost the third. The scores:

THIRD GAME.—Lenox Council—Carter, 179; Bell, 138; Howland, 170; G. Young, 214; Clute, 145. Total, 846.

Colonial Council—Davis, 145; Schuck, 148; Brooker, 145; Darrell, 180; Haus, 156. Total, 774.

Only one game was rolled in the Carruthers National tournament on the Elephant Club alleys, Brooklyn, last night, the Empire bowlers defeating the Adelphi five. The games with the T. D. K. team are postponed. The scores:

FIRST GAME.—Empire Bowling Club—Schaefer, 156; Guffin, 190; Williamson, 199; Linden, 159; Shiman, 182. Total, 880.

Adelphi Bowling Club—Kimball, 164; Schroeder, 153; Kruse, 168; Anderson, 173; Williams, 195. Total, 853.

On account of the death on Saturday of Charles J. Maguire, Chairman of the Athletic Committee of the Crescent Athletic Club, the games of the Interclub Bowling League of Brooklyn scheduled for last night were postponed. The matches between the Brooklyn Bicycle Club and the Columbian Club and the Aurora Grata Club and the Carleton Club will be rolled on Friday evening, and that between the Crescent Athletic Club and the Knickerbocker Field Club will be decided on Feb. 9.

The final games of the Columbia League tournament will be rolled this evening, tomorrow evening, and Saturday evening on the Columbia alleys, and on Saturday evening the prizes will be awarded.

At a meeting of the American National Bowling tournament, held at the Germania alleys last night, it was decided that the games forfeited by the Rosedale Bowling Club to the Metropolitan and Germania teams during the absence of the former team at Chicago should be rerolled, and the following schedule of postponed games, which will conclude the tournament, was arranged:

Feb. 7—Corinthian, Bank Clerks', and American Owl Bowling Club; Feb. 8—Central, Bank Clerks, and Metropolitan Bowling Club; Feb. 11—Rosedale, Metropolitan, and Germania Bowling Clubs; Feb. 14—Monarch, Columbia, and Bleecker Bowling Clubs; Feb. 18—Manhattan, Rosedale, and Columbia Bowling Clubs.

CHALLENGE NEW YORK BOWLERS.

Inter-State Club of Erie, Penn., Proposes a Match on Its Alleys.

Capt. Daniel Koster of the Inter-State Bowling Club of Erie, Penn., which obtained third place in the recent National championship bowling tournament at Chicago, is inclined to resent the criticisms made by the New York bowlers of the management of the tournament, and has issued the following challenge to them:

"The New York bowlers say that they were handicapped in the bowling tournament held at Chicago Jan. 7 to 12, 1901, by the tournament not being properly managed, and that the New York bowlers were forced to bowl on No. 1 and 2 alleys. I wish to state that the Erie players failed to find any difference in the alleys. Two of Erie's men bowled on No. 1 and 2 alleys and made just as good a showing as they did on No. 3 and 4 alleys. Erie thinks New York's stand is not well taken, and when they say that Chicago and New York bowlers are better bowlers than Erie players, we beg to differ. Erie is always ready and will post a forfeit to bowl any team of five men that bowled as a five-man team in the Chicago tournament aforesaid. Erie to limit itself to Erie bowlers. We will post from $200 to $500 to bowl any of those teams mentioned at Erie, guaranteeing the visiting team perfectly level alleys, fifteen-foot runway, free and open, alleys with no handicaps in any way, shape, or manner. Alleys of B. B. and C. Co.'s latest, of pine and maple. Now if the Erie players are such inferior bowlers, come and get your money.

DAN KOSTER, Captain,
Erie Inter-State Bowling Club.

Charles K. Starr of the Metropolitan Bowling Club, who, with Voorhels of the same club obtained first place in the two-men team competition at Chicago, said last night when questioned regarding the challenge of the Erie bowlers: "Of course we will not go to Erie to roll those fellows a single match on their alleys. If they will make it a home-and-home match, we will accept for $500 or more. I have been to Erie, and I know what kind of alleys they have there, and it is no wonder they could not tell the difference between good and bad alleys at Chicago. They could roll on the roof or any old place."

Parkway Reinsmen at the Traps.

The members of the Parkway Driving Club participated in the first of a series of trap-shooting tournaments on the grounds of the organization at Parkville L. I., yesterday, and many well-known reinsmen were on hand to witness the fun. James J. Shevlin, the Brooklyn politician, and John Schliemann tied in the main event, the club shoot, at ten live birds per man, each getting eight birds and dividing first money. Frank D. Creamer was the second man, or runner up, with a bird less, and in the subsequent sweepstake races Schliemann, Shevlin, and Creamer divided most of the money. Summary:

Club handicap, ten live birds per man, even distances—James J. Shevlin, (30 yards,) 8; John Schliemann, (30 yards,) 8; Frank D. Creamer, (30 yards,) 7; John H. Dinghee, (30 yards,) 6; Frederick G. Lemmermann, (30 yards,) 6.

Sweepstakes, same conditions—Dinghee, 5; Creamer, 8; Shevlin, 7; Schliemann, 7.

Renewal, same conditions—Shevlin, 8; Creamer, 8; Schliemann, 7; Dinghee, 6; Lemmermann, 5.

Work on the Cup Defender.

BRISTOL, R. I., Jan. 28.—Capt. Nat Herreshoff in deciding about the stiffening for the new Belmont boat, now undergoing the timbering outprocess, elected to have bilge stringers with dimensions considerably less than were arranged for those used on the Columbia's construction. Fitters in the south shop are at present finishing off two sets of bilge stringers of nickel steel bulbed angles 2¾ by 1¼ inches, to be rivited to the turn of the bilges inside the boat. It is the opinion that the Columbia was stiffer in form at the bulges than was needed. To preclude the possibility of any bad effect in reducing the size of the bulbed angle stringers, the flanges of every alternate plate of sheating is an eighth of an inch wider than it was in the Columbia's flanged plates.

Date of Skating Championships.

MONTREAL, Jan. 28.—The United States and Canadian combined skating championships, which were postponed out of respect for the late Queen, will be held on Saturday, Feb. 16.

GOVERNOR OPPOSES THE FIGHT.

Ohio's Chief Executive Declares Against Jeffries-Ruhlin Contest.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 28.—Action was taken by Gov. Nash to-day to prevent the Jeffries-Ruhlin fight at Cincinnati on Feb. 15. In a letter to Attorney General Sheets the Governor declares the fight "would be a disgrace to the State of Ohio, as well as a violation of law," and concludes:

"I hereby authorize and request you to take such steps and commence such actions at law, civil or criminal, as may be necessary to prevent this occurrence, and in so doing to use the name of the State."

CINCINNATI, Jan. 28.—The attorneys who were in consultation with Gov. Nash and Attorney General Sheets at the State Capitol to-day returned here to-night, but too late to file the petition for an injunction. The suit in the name of the State will be brought in one of the local courts to-morrow, but the attorneys and others who are opposing the Jeffries-Ruhlin contest here Feb. 15 will not indicate in what court they will ask for the restraining order. One of the local Judges recently instructed the Grand Jury to bring indictments against the members of the Saengerfest Athletic Association, and the promoters of the fight feel to-night that much depends upon the Judge before whom the petition for an injunction shall be heard.

GOLF NOTES OF INTEREST.

The Newark Athletic Club, which opened its new eighteen-hole course last Fall, has been planning still further improvements, and the course is now being lengthened, so that it will have a playing distance of 6,000 yards when reopened in the Spring. The longest hole will be 550 yards from the tee.

J. Stewart Gillespie, who has been one of the prominent players for three seasons of the Fairfield County Golf Club, Greenwich, has recently joined the Fox Hills Golf Club, on Staten Island, where his home will be hereafter. A team match between Fox Hills and the Yountakah Country Club of Nutley will be played next month on the latter's course. Louis Livingston, Jr., R. C. Watson, Jr., E. S. Knapp, John M. Wood, and M. M. Singer will play for Fox Hills.

The South Orange Field Club has recently completed arrangements whereby it will devote more attention to golf this season than in the past. An attempt at golf was made two or three years ago, but the course provided at that time did not meet with much favor. Now an additional golf fee of $10 has been ordered, payable only by those who use the links, and suffcient land has been obtained for a good nine-hole course, which will be ready for play in the Spring.

Knowlton L. Ames, better known during his Princeton football days as "Snake" Ames, has taken to golf with his customary enthusiasm in Chicago, and is numbered among the crack players on the Glenview Golf Club. He has just been appointed Captain of the club team for the coming year, and is Chairman of the Handicap Committee. The members are well pleased at his appointment, and predict a stronger team this season than ever before.

The Chicago Golf Club held its annual meeting last week, and elected Robert S. McCormick President, to succeed Charles B. Macdonald, the prime founder of the club, but who came to New York last Spring to reside permanently here. The club also abolished its original share-holding plan, and adopted an initiation fee. The share-holding plan was not successful from a financial basis to the club, and under the new system it is figured that the club will gain about $3,000 a year. Twenty-seven new members were added last year.

The Western collegians are anxious to emulate the example of the Eastern college golfers and form an intercollegiate golf association of their own. As a starter toward this broader view of student golf the University of Wisconsin Golf Club has sent a challenge to the golfers of the University of Chicago for a tournament in the Spring, either at Chicago or Madison, Wis. Each university has a number of good players. The Wisconsin students have also suggested that a conference be held in the near future for the purpose of forming a college association of the leading Western universities, and plans are already being made for such a meeting.

Thomas S. Fauntleroy, the former President of the Onwentsia Club, near Chicago, has been asked to accept the Secretaryship of the Committee on Sports and Pastimes for the coming year. Mr. Fauntleroy has done much to build the club up to its present successful standpoint, for the Onwentsia Club is one of the most typical country clubs in the West, possessing an excellent eighteen-hole links, a fine polo field, besides tennis courts, and croquet lawns. Mr. Fauntleroy believes that every member of a country club should take an interest in its sports, for he recently said on that subject: "I believe that every member of the club should take a direct interest in what is going on in golfing as well as other lines, and instead of having the members satisfied with playing desultory matches, I would want more of a competitive spirit among them. Each player should know how the other is progressing, and the playing record of every man and woman in the club should be kept."

Disappointing Outlook at Yale.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 28.—The Yale crew and track-team season opened today, and was in many respects a disappointment. There were hardly fifty crew candidates at the gymnasium to meet Capt. Blagden, and the track-team candidates numbered less than forty. The season opens with less enthusiasm than in years, and the managers are scouring the college for more men. Mike Murphy is not at all satisfied with the outlook.

Another disappointment came to-night in the announcement that Coach Fred Allen will not come to Yale to take up his work with the crew before the middle of May instead of at Easter, as had been expected. Allen has taken a business position in the West, and his loss during the first part of the season here will be keenly felt.

IN THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS, NO. 1, of Philadelphia County, Pa.—June Term, 1900.—No. 40.—ANNA E. ZACKEL vs. PAUL ZACKEL.

To Paul Zackel, the above-named respondent:

Take notice that an application for divorce has been made by Anna E. Zackel in the above case, upon the application that you have wilfully and maliciously deserted her, in the County of Philadelphia aforesaid, and have, without any just or reasonable cause, absented yourself from her habitation for and during the term of two years and more—to wit, from the 15th day of July, 1896, and still do persist in such desertion. By reason of your default in not entering an appearance the case has been referred to me as Master. I have appointed Wednesday, the 20th day of February, 1901, at two o'clock P. M., as the time, and my office, No. 1,003 Betz Building, Philadelphia, as the place of taking testimony in the cause, when and where you may attend, either in person or by attorney, and make defense, if any you have.

IN THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS, NO. 1, of Philadelphia County, Pa.—June Term, 1900.—No. 40.—ANNA E. ZACKEL vs. PAUL ZACKEL.

To Paul Zackel, the above-named respondent:

Take notice that an application for divorce has been made by Anna E. Zackel in the above case, upon the application that you have wilfully and maliciously deserted her, in the County of Philadelphia aforesaid, and have, without any just or reasonable cause, absented yourself from her habitation for and during the term of two years and more—to wit, from the 15th day of July, 1896, and still do persist in such desertion. By reason of your default in not entering an appearance the case has been referred to me as Master. I have appointed Wednesday, the 20th day of February, 1901, at two o'clock P. M., as the time, and my office, No. 1,003 Betz Building, Philadelphia, as the place of taking testimony in the cause, when and where you may attend, either in person or by attorney, and make defense, if any you have.

National Salt Company Trust Certificates.

Issued by the American Trust Company of Cleveland, Ohio, incident to the purchase of the United Salt Company.
Total issue $2,500,000, divided equally in Preferred and Common Stocks.
Dividends guaranteed for three and one-half years at the rate of seven per cent. per annum on the Preferred and ten per cent. per annum on the Common Stock.
The Common Stock Trust Certificates given as a bonus to purchasers of the Preferred Trust Certificates, making the return equivalent to seventeen per cent. per annum.

The National Salt Company of New Jersey acquired the United Salt Company of Ohio in the Fall of 1899; and in payment deposited with the American Trust Company of Cleveland, Ohio, its own stock to the amount of $2,500,000, half of the amount in Preferred Stock and half in Common Stock.
The Stock of the United Salt Company was endorsed in blank, and also deposited with the American Trust Company at the same time.
The American Trust Company issued its Certificates representing the Preferred and Common Stocks of the National Salt Company held by it.
To each trust certificate representing 100 shares of the Preferred Stock is attached a certificate of indebtedness of the National Salt Co. for $2,450.00, and to each Trust Certificate representing 100 shares of the Common Stock is attached a certificate of indebtedness of the National Salt Company for $3,500.00. These Certificates of indebtedness are payable semi-annually so as to provide half yearly dividends on the Preferred Stock Certificates of three and one-half per cent., and on the Common Stock Certificates of five per cent. The dividends are payable in January and July of each year until 1904, when the Trust Certificates are redeemable in the regular Preferred and Common Stocks of the National Salt Co.
The purpose of the agreement was to insure the payment of dividends on the stock in question during the formative period of the Company. The Company is already paying dividends on both classes of its stock, and there is every reason to believe that it will continue to do so indefinitely.
The stock of the United Salt Company was deposited as security for the Certificates of indebtedness. In case of default in any semi-annual payment of the certificates of indebtedness the remaining indebtedness becomes due at once, and the Trust Company is empowered to sell the stock of the United Salt Company to provide funds to meet the payment of all such certificates in full.
The United Salt Company is one of the most valuable items in the Assets of the National Salt Company. There are no bonds or other liens upon the property of the National Salt Company.

We offer a limited amount of the above described Preferred Trust Certificates at 115, and to each purchaser will be given as a bonus an equal amount in the Common Stock Trust Certificates.

MARKET MOVEMENT.

The movement of prices on the stock market yesterday developed considerable irregularity. In the early trading following the advance in St. Paul stock and the persistent reports that the deal with Great Northern and Northern Pacific was near to completion, quotations advanced quite generally throughout the list and the undertone gave evidence of substantial strength. On the advance, however, considerable realizing appeared, causing recessions, in some cases rather material, from the high figures. Coincident with the decline came a number of disquieting reports, emanating from bear sources—one declaring that the outcome of the meeting of the Steel and Wire Directors would prove a distinct disappointment to the Street. But a short time later the reports became more encouraging. With the more hopeful view came a change in prices for the better, only again to incline lower when another batch of doleful rumors appeared. In the last fifteen minutes of trading, however, a general rally set in, and rather definite suggestions were then heard that within the next twenty-four hours developments of a favorable nature would appear. It was said that an official statement announcing the completion of the St. Paul deal is likely to be made.

Further evidences of the continued prosperity of the railroads of the country were presented during the day in the publication of a number of statements of railway earnings, each of which showed a substantial increase. They included such diverse systems as St. Paul, Atchison, Southern Railway, and St. Louis and San Francisco. In respect to the last-named security there is now semi-official assurance of an increased dividend on the second preferred stock.

Money continues easy, the rate yesterday for call dropping as low as 1¾ per cent.

The St. Paul deal was "on" again yesterday morning, when, following the advance on Saturday of six points, the stock shot up more than three points higher, to within a fraction of 159. It was "off" again—according to the Street's notion—when in the later trading the issue declined to below 154, largely on profit taking. As a matter of fact, the best information is that the deal is merely as it has been for some time—developing, and that the active interests at work in it have now practically perfected their plans. It is said, indeed, that the syndicate to float the collateral trust bonds to be exchanged for St. Paul stock has been formed.
The preferred stock sold up during the day to the highest price on record.
In well-informed quarters it is generally understood that an official statement telling of the actual closing of the deal will be made probably within the next twenty-four hours.

St. Louis and San Francisco shares were strong, being favorably affected by the increased earnings which the system continues to show. For December the net earnings totaled $402,540, an increase of $123,460, while for the six months ended Dec. 31 a surplus of $1,041,570 is reported after all charges, and the payment of the dividend on the first preferred—an increase of $522,500. This, in effect, shows 4 per cent. earned on the common stock. It is now semi-officially admitted that the reports of an increased dividend on the second preferred are likely to be realized, and on the strength of this there is large buying of the common stock in the belief that soon it will be put on a dividend basis.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit was the weakest of the local railway stocks, not sharing in the early morning advance and in the afternoon selling off easily. There has been steady liquidation in the stock since the meeting last week, when, contrary to promises and expectations, neither Metropolitan nor Pennsylvania interests were elected to the Board of Directors.

Rumors that fresh negotiations were under way for a Manhattan lease by Metropolitan were again heard, but little attention was given them.

Traders and speculators alike were not disposed to deal actively in the steel stocks, pending the result of the meeting of the Directors of Steel and Wire. Generally, sentiment seemed bearish, and there was selling of the Steel and Wire stock in the belief that the dividend action would be disappointing, though in the late trading the stock was run up sharply. In Federal Steel there was selling on the statement that the bond issue of the company will be made in a day or two.

The advance in Pacific Mail was on buying by several houses which were credited with having received private advices from Washington that the chances for the passage of the Ship Subsidy bill were growing better. On the theory that whatever benefited Pacific Mail would also benefit Southern Pacific, which controls Pacific Mail, there was heavy buying of the Southern Pacific stock, in which a new pool is said to be operating.

The strength of the Grangers was apparently in sympathy with the rise in St. Paul, though in Rock Island there was independent buying by houses close to the controlling interests in the property. The argument is that, compared with the other Grangers, Rock Island is selling too low.

With the renewed activity in Leather Trust shares came many fanciful tales, chiefly dealing with the Rockefeller interest in the property. One story has it that young Mr. Rockefeller is to be put at the head of the property. No corroboration of the report can be had.

Some of the interests which recently were heavy buyers of Wabash securities say that it is beyond question that the Lackawanna Railroad is after the property. Lackawanna officials themselves say they have no knowledge of any such desire on their part.

The strength of Norfolk and Western common stock was on the report that a 4 per cent. dividend is to be declared on the stock at the Directors' meeting this week. The report is altogether lacking of official confirmation.

Western houses were reported to be the largest buyers of Atchison, and in this connection the old talk of dividend action on the common stock in the near future was heard. For December the company reports an increase of $269,790 in net income, after the payment of taxes and rentals.

London was not much of a factor in the market, though the irregular prices sent over here at the opening had the effect of checking bullish sentiment somewhat and of preventing the "wild opening" that in some quarters had been predicted. All told London sold on balance during the day about 15,000 shares.

A further avance in sterling exchange yesterday led to renewed discussion as to the probability of gold exports not only to Paris, but to London. General opinion is that about $5,000,000 in gold will go out to Paris this week, and that exchange will so shape itself that within a couple of weeks' time exports to London direct will be made.

Time was when Sugar Trust was regarded as the most variable stock on the list, its movements and fluctuations being decidedly erratic. Now brokers are declaring that St. Paul is easily the market leader in respect of irregularity. Yesterday, after its initial rise above 158, it sold down to 155, then up to 156½, then down to 153½, then up to 156, then down to 152½, then up to 154¼—and so on until the close of the market. From the trading standpoint it offered excellent opportunity, but many innocent lambs suffered in the attempt to catch the movements.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—Money was firm and wanted to-day, and discounts were steady. A possible reduction of the bank rate was freely discussed.
Apart from the rise in Americans, the transactions on the Stock Exchange were featureless, operators being busy with the carry-over. Rates generally were stiffer. Telegraphic delays in the provinces, Scotland, and the Continent, owing to the prevailing gale, hampered business. Home rails were mostly fractionally lower.
Americans opened quiet, at parity, and were firm throughout the day, St. Paul leading. Kafirs were firm. Rhodesians rallied smartly.
It is stated that serious difficulties in connection with the settlement have been surmounted, and that no disastrous failures are likely to occur. Owing to threats of lack of carrying-over facilities, many weak bull operators in West Africans were cleared out during the account.
Consols for money, 96⅝; consols for the account, 96⅝; Atchison, 47½; Canadian, 90⅜; St. Paul, 161; Illinois Central, 135; Louisville, 92⅝; Union Pacific preferred, 85½; New York Central, 145¼; Erie, 29⅝; Pennsylvania, 75; Reading, 16⅝; Erie first preferred, 66½; Northern Pacific preferred, 89⅝; Grand Trunk, 6⅞; Anaconda, 8¾; Rand mines, 36⅞.

All the London Exchanges will be closed Feb. 2.
Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Buenos Ayres, 131.20; Madrid, 35.30; Lisbon, 43.25; Rome, 5.92½.

The Paris Bourse.

PARIS, Jan. 28.—Prices on the Bourse to-day were irregular, and business was inanimate. Later, internationals and Kafirs were firmer. Tramways and tractions were freely offered, and were lower.
Three per cent. rentes 101 francs 92½ centimes for the account. Exchange on London, 25 francs 13½ centimes for checks.

BANK TAX LEGISLATION

Clearing House Committee Discusses Pending Bills.

Appoints Delegates to Go to Albany to Oppose Them — J. Edward Simmons's Argument.

At a meeting of the Clearing House Committee yesterday afternoon, the various phases of bank and trust company legislation now before the Legislature in Albany were discussed, and as a result a committee, consisting of Messrs. Tappen, Baker, and Simmons, with Manager Sherer as Secretary, was appointed

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

From the opening to the closing of the outside market yesterday trading was carried on on a very small scale and few issues were sufficiently active to attract any attention. Prices showed more irregularity than they did on the closing days of last week, and final quotations showed a number of declines as well as of advances. The falling off in transactions from the totals recorded on Friday and Saturday was marked, and seemed to indicate how limited public interest in the outside market is at present.

ELECTRIC BOAT was among the stocks that showed considerable strength. The common stock showed no net gain, but the preferred, on the purchase of about 500 shares, sold up 2 points, to 55, and closed at 54½ bid. It is said that in some directions very satisfactory progress has recently been made in the business of the company, but nothing of a very definite or official character has been made known.

***

DISTILLING OF AMERICA showed further improvement. The common was fairly active at 6 and the preferred at 30. Fractional net gains were made in both issues.

***

HAVANA COMMERCIAL preferred sold up to 54½, and then the bid dropped back to 52. The common stock was also weaker, and at the close was offered at 11, showing a net loss of 1 point.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS bonds were in good demand. In addition to the smaller transactions there was a sale of $100,000 of the bonds at 109. They closed at 109 bid.

UNION COPPER, with some of the other copper stocks, showed a little improvement. It sold to the extent of about 500 shares at 4½.

BRITISH COLUMBIA COPPER sold at 21, and closed unchanged at 20½ bid. Sales amounted to 500 shares.

WORCESTER TRACTION.—A plan is being considered for the liquidation of the Worcester Traction Company of New Jersey, which owns the Worcester Consolidated Street Railway Company of Massachusetts. Owing to the difficulties of managing the property through a foreign corporation, it is proposed to revert to the older and local charter, doing away entirely with the New Jersey corporation. The consent of the stockholders to the plan is now being sought, and it is expected that announcement of the details of the plan will be made before long. The Worcester Traction Company is capitalized at $5,000,000, represented by $3,000,000 of common stock and $2,000,000 of cumulative 6 per cent. preferred stock, which is subject to retirement at 105. Recently these stocks have shown considerable strength.

UNITED RAILWAYS OF ST. LOUIS securities were relatively dull, but continued to show strength. The preferred stock closed at 74½ bid, a net gain of nearly a point.

GENERAL CARRIAGE was fairly active and weaker. It closed with a fractional net loss, at 37½ bid.

COMPRESSED AIR was traded in to the extent of about 500 shares, between 33½ and 34. It closed at 34 bid.

***

STANDARD CHAIN common remained offered at 50. No bid for the stock was reported.

Closing quotations yesterday, compared with those of Saturday, were as follows:

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Large Adjoining Plots on Central Park West Sold.

Other Vacant-Property Deals—Sales of Fine Dwellings—The Day's Business in the Auction Room.

As the result of two deals, entirely independent of each other, the entire block front on Central Park West, between Sixty-fifth and Sixty-sixth Streets, will change hands in the near future. Hall J. Flow & Co. have sold for Joseph H. Godwin to the Leopold Kahn Company the plot at the northwest corner of Central Park West and Sixty-fifth Street, 100 feet on the avenue by 125 feet on the street. It is also learned on excellent authority that David H. McAlpin has sold to Joseph Hamershlag the plot of the same size at the southwest corner of Central Park West and Sixty-sixth Street.

Herbert A. Sherman has sold for Gustavus L. Lawrence the plot 51.8 by 100, on the south side of Eighty-seventh Street, 100 feet east of Fifth Avenue. The buyer will erect high-class residences thereon. This is the second time that these lots have been sold through Broker Sherman within thirty days.

A. L. Mordecai & Son have sold for the Equitable Life Assurance Society to a builder, six lots on the north side of One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Street, 100 feet west of Seventh Avenue.

The Hardy estate has sold to Joseph Hamershlag the plot, 100 by 102.2, on the south side of Seventy-second Street, 425 feet west of West End Avenue and directly opposite the entrance to Riverside Drive.

Blake & Dowling have sold, through Slawson & Hobbs, to James Bradley, the lot on the south side of One Hundred and Second Street, 175 feet east of Broadway, 20 by 100 by 54, on the rear line.

Collins & Collins have sold, in conjunction with E. P. Willard, for Robert C. Ogden, the five-story American basement dwelling at 2 West Fifty-fifth Street, 25 by 100.5.

S. Osgood Pell & Co. have sold for Mrs. Allen J. Clark to ex-Justice Henry W. Bookstaver the four-story dwelling 14 East Eighty-second Street, 22 by 102.2.

Mrs. Edward Harriman has sold the three-story dwelling 38 West Forty-fifth Street, 18.9 by 100.5, to W. L. Suthlin, who has resold the property, through Pease & Elliman, for improvement.

Charles E. Schuyler & Co. have sold for William Rankin to Edmund Dwight, Jr., the five-story flat at the northwest corner of West End Avenue and One Hundred and Sixth Street, 25.11 by 100.

McVickar & Co. have sold for the Stokes estate the five-story tenement 417 West Thirty-third Street, for $98,000.

Louis Lesse has bought from the Lalor estate three lots on the south side of One Hundred and Tenth Street, 200 feet east of Second Avenue, 75 by 100.11.

William A. White & Sons have sold for Benjamin B. Johnston the old three-story building 114 Thompson Street, 19 by 75.

Frank A. Haussner sold for G. Peetz to H. Berg the two five-story tenements 413 and 415 West Fifty-third Street, 50 by 100.5.

Friedman & Feinberg have sold to A. Prentice the five six-story tenements 355 to 365 East Tenth Street, 125 by 98.9, taking Staten Island property in part payment.

Henry Russell has sold for Solomon Marx to Michael Naughton, for about $75,000, the four unfinished five-story flats on the north side of Ninety-eighth Street, 200 feet east of Madison Avenue, on a plot 100 by 100.11.

Folsom Brothers, who negotiated the twenty-one-year lease of the building 440 Broadway for George C. Boldt to the Childs' Unique Dairy Company, report that the aggregate rental is about $275,000. Mr. Boldt took title to the property yesterday.

Clarence O. Bigelow, who recently purchased 105 and 108 Sixth Avenue, will erect on the site a seven-story building when existing leases expire, on May 1, 1902. The store and part of the loft space will be occupied by the owner for his retail and jobbing drug business.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS.

In the following list "mtg" stands for mortgage and "R S" for revenue stamps. The war revenue law provides that stamps shall be placed on all conveyances at the rate of 50 cents for each $500 of consideration. This "consideration" has been held to mean only the equity above the mortgage, except in the rare cases where the purchaser assumes payment of the mortgage. The amount of the mortgage plus 1,000 times the value of the revenue stamps on the conveyances should therefore show the true consideration:

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

New York City.

KOSTER, BIAL & CO.—Judgment for $10,330 was entered yesterday against Koster, Bial & Co. corporation, formerly on West Thirty-fourth Street, near Broadway, in favor of Fritz and Bertha Kuenneke for money loaned to the corporation on July 16, 1897, amounting to $9,000.

HECK & WAHLIG.—Judge Dugro yesterday granted an order dissolving the firm of Heck & Wahlig, manufacturers of steam heating apparatus at One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Street and Rider Avenue, and appointed Louis B. Hasbrouck receiver of the assets in a suit brought by Herman G. Wahlig against Charles Heck and Charles Wahlig against Charles Heck and Charles Hasbrouck was appointed temporary receiver in June last.

NICHOLAS F. CLEARY AND HUGH MCDONNELL.—Nicholas F. Cleary and Hugh McDonnell have confessed judgment for $6,020 in favor of Kate P. Mathews, as administratrix of the estate of James F. Mathews, on their note, dated May 30, 1898, for $5,000, payable at their office, 29 Broadway, ninety days after date to Mr. Mathews for a loan of money, and they agreed to give him a portion of the profits from the sale of a mine which was under negotiation at the time, his share being $1,000, no part of which was paid to him.

GEORGE A. MONCUR.—An attachment has been obtained against George A. Moncur, stockbroker of 32 Broadway, for $1,082 in favor of Adam H. Straub for balance due for money put up in stock transactions in November and December. It was stated that efforts to find Mr. Moncur at his office or at his residence, 2,010 Albemarle Road, Brooklyn, were fruitless, and on Jan. 12 it was learned that the office was vacated and the furniture removed. Mr. Straub saw the broker's advertisement in the papers, and on Nov. 16, it was alleged, he received a letter from Mr. Moncur to the effect that the broker had received inside information in regard to a certain stock which would double the amount of money placed in the broker's hands. Mr. Straub sent him $300, and followed this with $1,000 more up to Dec. 20. As an inducement the broker stated in the letter that he would insure the account against loss of any kind. The dealings were closed on Dec. 27, and $218 was returned to Mr. Straub, who demanded the balance, but did not get it.

Out of Town.

PHENIX IRON FOUNDRY.—Marinus W. Gardner was yesterday appointed receiver for the Phenix Iron Foundry of Providence, R. I. The receivership is underatood to be the culmination of a period of financial stress. The appointment of a receiver was made on application of Susan T. Earle, one of the stockholders, for a dissolution of the corporation, and a winding up of its affairs. The debts of the concern aggregate about $80,000, and it is thought that its assets are in excess of this sum. There is a possibility that the matter may be arranged for a continuance of the business.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

FRANK W. KEARNEY.—Frank W. Kearney, merchant, at 27 Coenties Slip, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $1,158 and no assets.

ROBERT F. WILHELM.—Robert F. Wilhelm of 171 West Eighty-third Street has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $2,480 and no assets. He was formerly of Wilhelm & Manthey, who dissolved in 1900.

CHARLES GRUBER.—Charles Gruber, cabinetmaker, of 167 East One Hundred and Third Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $2,231 and no assets. He was formerly of Gruber & Fiedler, in 1899.

NATHAN POLLOCK.—Nathan Pollock, residing at 355 West One Hundred and Twenty-third Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $32,225 and no assets. He was formerly a manufacturer of clothing at 530 Broadway and made an assignment on Dec. 4, 1899.

JULIUS A. SACHS.—Julius A. Sachs, druggist, at One Hundred and Eightieth Street and Bathgate Avenue, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $12,876 and assets of $2,775, consisting of outstanding accounts, $2,269; stock, $500, and cash, $6. He has been in the drug business eight years, and opened the above store in August last.

HUGGINS BOOT & SHOE CO.—A petition in involuntary bankruptcy has been filed against the Huggins Boot & Shoe Company, jobbers in shoes at 114 Duane Street, by the following creditors: Bowers & Shaw, Peabody, Mass., $687;

PRISONER FAINTS IN COURT

Post Office Clerk, Accused of Robbing the Mails, Breaks Down.

Had Foreseen His Arrest in a Warning Dream—Seventeen Inspectors Working on Case Baffled for Months.

What is declared by Chief Post Office Inspector John O. King to be one of the most important arrests made in the department for a long time took place on Sunday evening when William J. Timmerman, who for ten years has been a clerk in Branch A in Greene Street, was taken into custody at his office after a corps of inspectors had been hunting for him for nearly a year. The prisoner, who is 35 years old and lives with his wife and three children at 30 West Eighth Street, is accused of systematically robbing the mails for nearly a year, and is said to have realized a very large sum of money, the exact amount of which has not yet been computed.

Timmerman was arraigned yesterday before United States Commissioner Shields, and when the charge was read to him broke down completely and fell in a swoon on the Commissioner's desk.

Ten months ago J. Lynn, of the firm of J. Lynn & Co., dealers in novelties at 48 Bond Street, complained to the department that his mail was being stolen persistently, and that the losses were assuming large proportions. He declared that in the two months preceding he had had to apply to the Post Office for 825 duplicate money orders.

Chief King took personal charge of the case, and with two of his best detectives has been at work on it ever since. During this period every clerk at Branch A, through which Lynn & Co. received their mail, has been shadowed for weeks at a time. All the inspectors in the New York Division were finally put on the case, which became so difficult that inspectors from other cities had to be called here. There were in all seventeen inspectors engaged in the hunt, but the thief baffled all their efforts.

Timmerman was the last clerk to be shadowed. He had been in the office so long and had such an excellent reputation that everybody was loath to suspect him. He reported for duty at 7:30 o'clock yesterday morning and was kept under surveillance all day. When he left the station in the evening he was arrested by Chief King. He was indignant, and declined his arrest an outrage. The story ended all knowledge of any thefts of mail. The Inspectors searched him and found $11 in cash and $36.85 in postage stamps. There was also an unopened letter addressed to J. Lynn & Co.

Timmerman was locked up in the Ludlow Street Jail for the night, and yesterday morning was taken to Chief King's office where he broke down and is said to have confessed that the money and postage stamps found on him were taken from letters addressed to Lynn & Co. He said that his stealings covered a period of one year, but that at first he stole only in a small way. He told the Inspectors that a few days ago he dreamed that he was under arrest for stealing and when he awoke he made up his mind to stop stealing forever. The temptation was too great, however, and he kept at it until his arrest.

When Commissioner Shields held him in $2,500 bail for examination on Feb. 5 he fainted dead away. He was revived and taken back to Ludlow Street Jail.

McDONNELL HIS OWN COUNSEL.

Courtney, Whom He Shot, Appears Against Him—Prima Facie Case of Felonious Assault Established.

Magistrate Zeller, in the Harlem Police Court, yesterday decided that the prosecution had made out a prima facie case of felonious assault against Miles McDonnell, the gambler who shot four men in an affray in the Onawa Café, in East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, four weeks ago, killing George Price and wounding Edward Courtney in the spine, partyzing him in the lower limbs. McDonnell is out on $5,000 bail, set by the Coroner for the killing of Price, and on $2,000 for the shooting of Courtney. Yesterday's examination bore entirely upon the assault charge based on the shooting of Courtney.

Considerable public interest centred in the hearing from the fact that Courtney was to appear in court for the first time, and furthermore McDonnell was to conduct his own case. Courtney was brought in a carriage and carried into the courthouse by friends and attendants and placed in a chair on a pillow. He was the first witness to take the stand.

He testified in a weak voice that he went into the Onawa Café at 11 o'clock and found McDonnell there. He also saw Tom Kennedy there, but did not speak to Kennedy. The witness went over to the bar to have a drink, and while standing there heard five or six shots fired.

"I started to go out of the place," said the witness, "when McDonnell shot me, the bullet striking me in the side. He snapped the revolver at me again, but this time it did not go off. I had no weapon of any kind with me at the time, nor did I have a quarrel of any kind with any one in the place."

Sylvester S. Freeland, the next witness, said that he was on his way home on the night of the shooting, and stopped in the Onawa Café. While standing at the bar he heard a shot, and, turning, saw a pistol in McDonnell's hand. It was pointed at Kennedy. "I said to him," said the witness, "'Mac, what are you doing?' Just then some one called out that the police were coming, and I ran out. I came back after the shooting and found Courtney lying on the floor. I asked him who shot him, and he said McDonnell did it."

McDonnell here took up the cross-examination. He asked the witness whether he had seen him at the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Police Station. Freeland said he did.

"Do you remember what you said to me then?" asked McDonnell.

"I can't just remember."

"When you came into my cell, didn't you say, 'I dropped into the Onawa and saw Courtney,' then didn't you say, 'I examined him myself and spoke to the police and ambulance surgeons, and they answered questions, saying that Courtney was not seriously injured; 'don't you worry, Mac, Courtney is all right.' Didn't you say that?"

"Well, I believe I did say some words to that effect," answered Freeland.

Several witnesses described the affray, and McDonnell then told the Magistrate that he had not expected the examination to take place that day, and had thirty witnesses he wanted to examine.

The Magistrate said he thought the prosecution had made out a prima facie case, and further testimony was not necessary. The case was then continued until to-day, when McDonnell will have to furnish $5,000 bail.

Deaf-Mute Sent to Jail.

Joseph Tierney, twenty-nine years old, a deaf-and-dumb person, was found early yesterday morning in the vestibule of an apartment house at 62 Heyward Street, Brooklyn, acting suspiciously, and was taken custody. When searched at the Clymer Street Police Station, a list of the names and addresses of New York millionaires was found in his possession. Among them were the Havemeyers, Whitneys, Goulds, Vanderbilts, and other well-known persons. When arraigned in the Lee Avenue Police Court, Magistrate Kramer sent him to jail for twenty-nine days.

Arrangements were completed to hold the annual dinner at the Hotel Savoy on Saturday, April 27.

CAPT. HERLIHY'S TRIAL.

Inspector Crosa Tells How He Tried Reform Methods—Policemen Who Saw Nothing.

The fifth week of the trial of Police Captain Herlihy was opened yesterday, with a session lasting from shortly after 11 o'clock to 4 in the afternoon. Inspector Cross was the most important witness called. He described the drafting of 120 policemen from other precincts to the "red light" district, in batches of forty, for the special purpose of locating the disorderly houses that had been complained of and closing them. One of these 120 policemen, who were sarcastically described by Prosecutor Olcott as the "innocents," took the stand and admitted that he had not arrested a single woman for disorderly conduct. When the trial opened President York was the only one of the Police Commissioners present. A little later Commissioner Sexton came in, and Commissioner Hess put in an appearance early in the afternoon.

Patrolman George B. Grimshaw was the first witness of the day. He told how Magistrates had discharged women he had arrested because the evidence against them was not sufficient, and how Capt. Herlihy had urged him "to continue fearlessly in the performance of his duty."

Inspector Cross, who took the stand next, said that he had frequently given Capt. Herlihy instructions as to the performance of his duties, and then told of the requisition made upon other precincts for men. He said that early in 1900, owing to repeated complaints as to the condition of Capt. Herlihy's precinct, he had held a consultation with Chief Devery, Deputy Chief Cortwright, and Capt. Herlihy, and had decided upon measures for reforming the district.

"Capt. Herlihy reported to me frequently," he said, "both verbally and in writing, and, so far as I know, performed his duties to the best of his ability. We instructed carefully all the men detailed to his precinct. If you will permit me, I will read a memorandum of what was said to the men in the presence of Capt. Herlihy."

Inspector Cross then read the instructions, urging the policemen to be thoroughly in earnest in the performance of their duties.

"I personally visited two houses that Mr. Paddock had mentioned to me, and I found that one of them was vacant, while the other had only one tenant," he said. "The men assigned to duty in front of 63 Stanton Street, a locality of which Mr. Paddock complained, were told to be especially vigilant. They were told that they would be backed up by the Chief in any arrests they made. The place at 63 Stanton Street was complained of by Mr. Paddock on Jan. 11. It was closed on Jan. 22, and has never been opened since."

Policeman Joseph D. Burke of the MacDougal Street Station testified that he was one of the forty men specially detailed to Capt. Herlihy's Precinct in January, 1900. Under cross-examination he admitted that he had made no arrests during his term of duty in the precinct.

"I made no arrests because I saw no violations of the law," he said. "I have seen things that I thought suspicious, but I saw nothing that would furnish me with any positive evidence."

After this witness had concluded, Mr. Grant said that he had 119 other policemen under subpoena.

"It will save time," he said, "if Mr. Olcott is willing to admit that their testimony will be the same as that of Burke's."

There was a buzz of surprise in the courtroom, and Mr. Olcott immediately jumped up and said that he would be only too glad to shorten the trial in the way indicated by Mr. Grant.

The other witnesses called yesterday were residents of the "red light" district. They testified that no violations of the law had come to their notice.

MORE VICE EVIDENCE.

January Grand Jury Will Not Be Called Upon, However, to Consider That from the Tammany Committee.

No evidence against police officials submitted to the District Attorney by the Tammany Committee of Five will be given to the January Grand Jury by Mr. Philbin. The Grand Jury will end its sittings Thursday and the February Grand Jury will not be sworn in until Monday, the 4th.

The Committee of Five's evidence will not be placed before the present Grand Jury because it is not in sufficient strength to warrant indictments against any person being asked for. The original mass of affidavits submitted was supplemented yesterday by more evidence showing the result of the Five's investigations. M. Warley Platzek had a quite lengthy conference with Assistant District Attorney Schurman, during which the evidence was gone over by both gentlemen.

Regarding the original evidence submitted, the District Attorney says that while he believes Mr. Nixon is entirely sincere in his endeavors to accomplish definite results, much matter not legally strong was accepted by him and given a much higher value than it really deserves. It is the public prosecutor's intention to have the evidence in such shape and so surely in conformity with the statutes bearing upon it that the Grand Jury will be able to dispose of it in a few hours, with the result that those persons mentioned in the evidence will be indicted.

The January Grand Jury has held two sessions daily nearly every day of the week. An unusually large number of routine prison and bail cases was disposed of, and, contrary to the usual custom of Grand Juries to put off for the consideration of their successors excise cases, quite a number of these complaints have been disposed of. The District Attorney commends the jury's work highly, and a photograph of this, the first Grand Jury under Mr. Philbin, will be taken this week and a copy placed in his private office.

Mr. Philbin deprecates the publication of alleged interviews with him reflecting on the Committee of Five and its evidence, and of those statements tending to show that he has already prejudged such matters submitted. He still adheres strictly to his determination not to be quoted upon matters relating to his office.

COMMITTEE OF FIVE SILENT.

In Session for an Hour, but Had Nothing to Say.

All the members of the Tammany Hall Investigating Committee attended its meeting in the Germania Bank Building yesterday, and were in executive session for an hour. At adjournment Chairman Nixon said that the committee had no statement to make, and he would not discuss any of the stories current in regard to the committee.

"I, as the legal member of the committee," said M. Warley Platzek, "and Assistant District Attorney Schurman, as the representative of Mr. Philbin, have been and are in constant communication in regard to evidence of vicious conditions. Of this evidence neither he nor I will talk. I will have nothing to say about stories of what I have or have not done."

The police situation, as it concerns Chief Devery, had not last evening changed one whit from what it was two months ago.

CHARTER AND POLICE MATRONS.

Anna M. Jackson Refutes a Statement Regarding Their Employment.

The following statement was made yesterday by Anna M. Jackson, Chairman of the Woman's Prison Reform Committee, New York Monthly Meeting of Friends, relative to police matrons in connection with the revised charter:

A printed statement that the changes concerning police matrons, made in the Revised Charter, will result in greatly diminishing the number employed in this city, is being circulated among voters in support of a petition to the Legislature against the adoption of that part of the revision.

The statement is incorrect. The Revised Charter does not limit the appointment of matrons. It would make no change in the existing number, and as the revision seems to embody much that experience has taught New Yorkers will be of benefit, we believe it will be for teh public good to have the Charter adopted as it stands and needed amendments presented after the adoption.

All women interested in the work of the police matrons rejoiced when the law of 1899 made them members of the uniformed force and partakers of the benefits of the Pension Fund, and it is puzzling to suspected that the Charter Revision should change these two provisions of law, but we ask that the signing and presentation of the petition referred to be delayed until after the adoption of the Charter, when we shall be ready to join in its request.

MURRAY H. HALL A "LADY"

The Coroner's Jury So Decide After Hearing Evidence.

Adopted Daughter Refuses on Witness Stand to Refer to Her Benefactor as She—Dr. Gallagher Testifies.

"Murray H. Hall came to his death from natural causes. He was a lady."

The foregoing is a verdict rendered by a jury in Coroner Zucca's court yesterday. It was rendered only after testimony had been heard bearing upon the strange career of the woman, Murray Hamilton Hall, who for nearly thirty years posed as a man and associated with Tammany politicians without the secret of her sex becoming known.

Coroner Zucca began the inquest by confessing that the case was not one which should ordinarily come before him. He referred to the fact, however, that an estate was involved, and its legal disposition necessitated an authoritative establishment of the sex of Murray Hall.

It took the jury just seven minutes to settle the question of Murray Hall's sex for all time.

Imelda Hall, the adopted daughter of the mysterious woman who hoodwinked everybody so long, was a witness. She proved to be a slender brunette who evidenced considerable spirit. She showed that she had a mind of her own. Miss Hall answered the preliminary questions in a clear, matter-of-fact way. She said that she had lived with her "foster-father" since 1885.

"And during all those years you never thought he was a woman?" inquired Coroner Zucca.

"No, Sir."

"Didn't you have a servant?"

"No, Sir."

"You knew he was ill, didn't you—knew that he suffered from cancer?"

"Yes, Sir."

"How long had he—she, I mean—suffered from the disease?"

"For six years."

"Did you ever hear him say that he had been drugged and sandbagged by a man by the name of William Reno, and do you think that the sandbagging made his disease worse?"

"Yes, I knew that he had been sandbagged," she replied, "but I never heard him say that the sandbagging made him worse."

"Wouldn't it be better for you to say she?" the Coroner suggested, politely.

"No; I would rather say he," she said; "he was always a man to me, and I shall never think of him as a woman."

"Did Murray Hall have a doctor?" Coroner Zucca went on.

"Yes."

"Who was he?"

"Dr. Gallagher."

The Dr. Gallagher referred to is the William C. Gallagher who has been frequently mentioned in connection with the case. He said on the stand yesterday that he had attended Hall during her last illness at intervals of a year previous to her death, and that she suffered from cancer of the breast.

"When you examined him—her—did you discover her to have cancer of the breast?" the doctor was asked.

"Yes, Sir."

"Didn't you find out that she was a woman?"

"That's a question I don't care to answer. A man can have cancer of the breast."

"When you filed a certificate of death, was she dead or alive?"

"She was dead."

The Coroner further asked Dr. Gallagher if he considered that the sandbagging might have hastened along Murray Hall's death, to which Dr. Gallagher replied that it might have been an "exciting cause," that it might have accelerated the end.

"Dr. Gallagher, will you tell the jury whether the deceased was a female or a man?" the Coroner asked.

"She was a female—a woman," Dr. Gallagher replied.

The jury then wrestled with its sex problem, and the foregoing verdict was finally read.

Afterward the verdict was altered so as to read grammatically, and it was so adopted by the jury.

During the inquest Deputy Assistant District Attorney Karr read the letter which Hall wrote to District Attorney Unger, and in which he related the circumstances of the sandbagging referred to during the inquest.

BOY FALLS FROM BED AND DIES.

While participating in a pillow fight yesterday morning at his home, 6 East Fifty-eighth Street, Robert A. Page, the eight-year-old son of Arthur A. Page, a stock broker, fell from the bed and died two hours later from a fracture of the skull.

The Pages live in the Mason apartment house. The three children slept in the same room, and after being called by the nurse yesterday morning, they began to romp around on the bed, assaulting each other with pillows. The nurse left the room for a few moments, but was recalled by hearing a thud on the floor and a sharp cry from the children. Rushing into the room, she found little Robert lying on the floor unconscious.

Dr. Ward and Dr. Johnson were called in, but in vain. The boy died shortly after 9 o'clock.

Joseph Halk Discharged.

Joseph Halk, a Consolidated Stock Exchange broker, who was arrested two months ago on the floor of the Exchange by Treasury Agent Frank G. Thompson on a charge of violating the internal revenue law in not affixing stamps to memorandas for the sales of stock, was discharged yesterday by United States Commissioner Shields. It is understood that Halk has paid the Government the amount which he is said to have been short.

A MAN FINED FOR SPITTING.

Judge Compliments Henry W. Hardon, Complaining Witness.

Henry C. Nierman, an employe of the Adams Express Company, was fined $25 by Justice Jerome in Special Sessions yesterday for insistent expectorating in a Ninth Avenue Elevated train in violation of the ordinance of the Health Board prohibiting such practices. This is the first conviction under this ordinance, which, although the fact is not well known, makes spitting in street cars and ferryboats a misdemeanor. The notices of the Health Board posted in surface and elevated cars, heretofore, have merely prohibited spitting in the aisles, without mentioning the penalty which may be inflicted. These placards have been superseded by new ones stating specifically that spitting in cars is a misdemeanor and will be punished to the full extent of the law.

Henry W. Hardon, a lawyer, of 313 West Seventy-first Street, who was formerly an instructor at Columbia University, was the complainant against Nierman. Upon the stand yesterday Mr. Hardon stated that he had taken a seat beside Nierman in an elevated train last Saturday and that Nierman had spat repeatedly on the car floor. Mr. Hardon called Nierman's attention to the sign prohibiting spitting, and was told to mind his own business, and that the ordinance was a dead letter anyway.

The guard's request that the expectorating cease was also insolently disregarded. Nierman's arrest followed. Nierman pleaded guilty in court yesterday and his counsel asked that leniency be shown his client. Justice Jerome, imposing sentence, said:

"The public should be grateful to you, Mr. Hardon, for your action in this matter. Expectorating in cars and on the streets is the cause of many tubercular diseases, and many subsequent deaths. I wish to emphasize this offense, and it is well for the public to know that this health ordinance will be rigorously enforced. This spitting practice in cars and public buildings is entirely too prevalent, and must be stopped. The ordinance is a wise and salutary one."

Nierman's explanation was that he had catarrh and was compelled to expectorate freely. He paid the fine.

LEGAL NOTES.

PRIVILEGE OF NON-RESIDENT WITNESS.—The Hampton and Branchville Railroad and Lumber Company, a foreign corporation, had a suit in the City Court, in this city, against Robert R. Sizer, and a Mr. Mouldin, the company's President and Treasurer, a non-resident of this State, came here on Friday, Oct. 19, to testify as a witness in the case. The testimony was concluded on that day, shortly before 4 o'clock, and the case was adjourned for the summing up and the charge to the jury, until Monday. Mouldin was not present on Monday until after the argument by the counsel for his corporation was closed, and he left before the charge. The Appellate Division, on Mouldin's appeal, has affirmed an order denying his application to set aside service of summons upon him at that time. Justice Rumsey, giving the opinion of the court, held that, as Mouldin came solely as a witness and did not have the management of the suit, there was no occasion for him to remain after the testimony was closed, and he lost his privilege by thus remaining. The Court holds that a non-resident who comes voluntarily into this State as a witness in an action in our courts is entitled to the privilege of not having a summons served upon him while he is in attendance at the trial, and for a reasonable time thereafter, to enable him to go home.

DECREE UNPROVED.—After Gilmore Clarke and others, as executors, had paid something over $17,000 to legatees under the will of David Clarke, and had left in their hands less than $7,000 for distribution, Albert W. Seaman, on July 7, 1898, filed a claim, as trustee of Eliza Engle, for $17,872.17, with interest from June 20, 1880, claimed to arise out of six judgments of deficiency, which had been docketed against Clarke in his lifetime. On a supplemental citation then issued, the Surrogate, without any evidence being offered to establish the judgments, made a decree, in November, 1899, disallowing the payments to the legatees and directing payment to Seaman of $23,499.99, the amount of the judgments being established by the decree at $38,782.60. The Appellate Division, by Justice Rumsey, has ordered a reversal of the decree, holding that the Surrogate erred in establishing the judgments in favor of Seaman without any proof having been made by him of the existence of these judgments. When the claim was rejected, as appeared in this case, there was then put upon the claimant the duty of establishing in the ordinary way the existence of the claim and the amount due upon it, and until that was done it was error for the Surrogate to find that it existed.

SECURITY FOR COSTS NOT REQUIRED.—Terence S. Reilly, who was appointed trustee in bankruptcy in the case of Rosenberg & Krause, brought a suit against them and three other persons to have declared void various assignments and transfers of goods and various instruments for the payment of money, which were made before the adjudication in bankruptcy and alleged to be fraudulent and made as the result of a conspiracy to defraud the creditors of the bankrupts. An ex-parte order was obtained by the defendant, Jacob Krause, one of the bankrupts, and Louis Friedenberg, one of the alleged transferrees, requiring the plaintiffs to give security for costs, and staying the proceedings until that order was complied with, except to review or vacate it. The order on application was vacated, and that decision has now been upheld by the Appellate Division, Justice Patterson giving the opinion. The mandatory requirement of Section 3,268 of the Code is held to apply only to a case in which the cause of action sought to be enforced by the defendant arose prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy. Before such adjudication, the right to avoid the fraudulent transfer and recover property fraudulently transferred was certainly in the banksrupts. The cause of action set out did not inhere in anybody until after the adjudication, and Section 3,268 did not apply.

FIREMAN KILLED IN CELLAR

Another, Rescued by Chief Binns, in a Precarious Condition.

Several Have a Narrow Escape from Suffocation by Smoke and Gas in West Side Tenement.

During a fire which started yesterday morning in the cellar of the five-story tenement house at 424 West Forty-seventh Street, between Ninth and Tenth Avenues, one fireman, Frank Featherston, of Engine Company 54, lost his life, and several of his companions barely escaped death by suffocation.

Engine Company 54 was the first to arrive on the scene, and the men at once attacked the blaze, which was sending suffocating clouds of smoke through the rooms and hallways. Capt. Burns, Featheraton, Frank Mauser, Thomas W. Smith, and Clarence E. McNellie dragged a hose through the front hall and down into the cellar, where the smoke was thickest.

Work had been going on for about fifteen minutes, when the cry went up that a man had fallen. Chief Binns, who was directing the operations, ran back into the hallway, where he was met by Capt. Burns, Mauser, and McNellie staggering up from the cellar. They were speechless from smoke and exhaustion, and groped their way with difficulty into the street, while Chief Binns felt his way down the steps through an absolutely opaque wall of smoke. Besides this, the place was filled with illuminating gas, which was escaping from a pipe, the lead connection of which had been melted by the heat.

Half way down the stairs Binns stepped upon the prostrate body of Smith, who had fallen overcome at his post of duty. Binns, already sickening from the smoke and gas, picked Smith up, and with difficulty found his way out to the fresh air with him, where he fell from sheer weakness. A moment later the chief was on his feet again, however, and, thinking that all the firemen were out of the building, ordered the men of Engine Company 2 and Hook and Ladder Company 21 to take a hose through the hall and into the cellar.

When the firemen got into the cellar they stumbled upon Featherston lying on his face dead from suffocation. One of the men staggered to the street with the body, while the others remained below and conquered the flames. Mauser, McNellie, and Capt. Burns had recovered after coming into the fresh air, and once more they dived into the cellar and staid until the fire was out. Smith was so exhausted on coming out of the cellar that he was taken to Roosevelt Hospital, where he is now said to be in a very precarious condition. The body of the dead fireman was taken to the engine house. Featherston lived at 542 West Fifty-first Street with his wife and three children. He had been in the department thirteen years, and his name is on the roll of merit.

Chief Binns laid the accident to the cheap method of putting in lead gas pipes in houses of this sort, and said that he thought a law should be passed requiring a different sort of work. "We have lost a good fireman in Featherston," he said. "He was worth more than all the lead pipe in New York."

B. F. ROSENHEIMER KILLED.

Secretary of the London Needle Company Fell Under a Train He Was Trying to Board.

Benjamin F. Rosenheimer, Secretary of the London Needle Company, was instantly killed last evening while attempting to board a local train of the New York Central Railroad at the station at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Park Avenue. He had been in the habit of taking the train which leaves the station at 6:25 P. M. for his home on the King's Bridge Road, Mount Vernon.

Last evening he was belated a little, and was informed when he reached the bottom of the stairs which lead to the passenger platform, that his train had just pulled in. In the hope of catching it he ran up the stairs, and reached the top when the train had already begun to move.

George Rooney, one of the men employed about the station, saw him coming, and warned him not to try to get on.

"Don't jump! don't jump!" he warned Rosenheimer.

The latter hesitated a moment, and then tried to board the rear platform of the car next to the last. While swinging himself aboard he came in contact with the railing of the stairway he had ascended, and was thrown under the wheels.

The body was taken to the police station on East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street, where it was afterward identified by Julius T. Rosenheimer, the father of the dead man.

LONG SENTENCE FOR NOBLETT.

Recorder Goff Tells the Prisoner His Record Is a Fearful One.

Edwin Arden Noblett, convicted in General Sessions of swindling Edward H. and Walter S. Watson, two young Kentuckians, out of $10,000, was yesterday sentenced by Recorder Goff to eight and one-half years' imprisonment. In pronouncing sentence the Recorder said:

"You have been indicted in this court three times, and escaped punishment. You were tried and convicted, but upon an affidavit of a man named Green you were granted a new trial. Green has since been indicted for bribing a juror. Your record is a fearful one. I can scarcely conceive how such a man as you can have gone so long unwhipped of punishment."

Clubhouse Burned at Throgg's Neck.

The clubhouse of the Century Club at Throgg's Neck was burned to the ground yesterday afternoon. The building was a one-story frame structure. The attendant, James Smith, discovered the blaze. He immediately notified the Westchester police, but by the time the firemen arrived the building had been destroyed. The total loss is estimated at $10,000. A large quantity of apparatus used in golf was destroyed.

TO GUARD ROYAL MOURNERS

Most Elaborate Precautions Being Taken in London.

Entire Detective Machinery of the United Kingdom and the Continent Set in Motion.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—The entire detective machinery of the United Kingdom and the Continent has been set in motion to protect the royal personages and other notable people now gathering in London. Unwieldy as the Continental secret services often appear to be, every effort is being made to unify them, in order that no injury may befall any royal personage attending the obsequies of Queen Victoria.

Sir Edward Bradford, the energetic unearmed Commissioner of Police of the metropolis, has devised elaborate plans to deal with the crush expected on Saturday, but to protect the kingly and princely guests precautions have been taken which are illustrated by the fact that each royal residence is surrounded night and day by constables in plain clothing and detectives, and that no person is allowed to approach until his card has been passed in. These precautions are also applied in the case of the principal officers of the Crown.

Scotland Yard maintains the most intimate and secret affiliations with every detective agency in the world, and its devices for tracing Continental suspects are now being operated under Chief Inspector Frank Froest, who is reputed to have a wider acquaintance with the rogues of the world than any other Police Chief in Europe.

Malatesta and other Anarchists residing in London assert that there is not the slightest probability of violence, because England is "an asylum for the persecuted of the Continent."

At Cowes detectives are stationed in large numbers on both sides of the Medina River, inquiring as to the purposes of strangers and watching all who approach the royal personages.

Nothing definite is feared, but the Government desires that the utmost diligence should be exercised, especially with a view to keeping Emperor William from harm.

Crown Prince Frederick of Denmark is expected here to-day.

Prince Henry of Prussia sailed from Kiel on Monday on board the German battleship Baden, accompanied by the coast-defense ship Hagen.

Prince George of Saxony is prevented by influenza from coming to the funeral. Prince John George will take his place.

Duke Albrecht will represent the King of Wurtemberg.

Crown Prince Ferdinand of Roumania is expected here to-morrow night.

The Orléans family will be represented by the Duc de Chartres, younger brother of the late Comte de Paris; the Duc d'Alençon, and the Comte d'Eu, sons of the late Duc de Nemours, between whom and the late Queen King Louis Philippe, in 1838, tried hard to arrange a marriage.

The Duke and Duchess d'Aosta (the former a cousin of the King of Italy and the latter a daughter of the late Comte de Paris) will arrive here on Jan. 31.

BERLIN, Jan. 29.—Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern left Sigmaringen this evening for London to attend the funeral of Queen Victoria.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 29.—Grand Duke Michael and the Grand Duke of Hesse have started for London to attend the funeral of Queen Victoria.

THE FUNERAL ARRANGEMENTS.

Sixty Royalties to Take Part in the Procession in London—Naval Pageant Will Be a Splendid One.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The Earl Marshal, the Duke of Norfolk, was unable to see King Edward yesterday in order to obtain his Majesty's final sanction for the arrangements for the funeral of Queen Victoria. Nothing, therefore, has been definitely settled except the programme for Friday, although the entire programme has been practically arranged.

"Queen Victoria's explicit directions as to her funeral were written in 1862," says Truth, "and have not been altered in any material respect. It was her wish that the ceremonial should copy that of Prince Albert's burial so far as possible. The Queen will be the first English sovereign who will not be buried at night and by torchlight."

It is understood that the funeral procession in London will be, approximately, as follows:

A sovereign's escort of 100 Life Guards, the massed bands of three regiments of Foot Guards, Field Marshal Earl Roberts and the Headquarters Staff, an army gun carriage with the body, the King, supported by the German Emperor, the King of Portugal, and the other reigning sovereigns in the order of precedence; the Duke of Connaught, the Equerries and Aides-de-Camp in attendance on royal personages; Queen Alexandra, the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, and other royal Princesses, in four carriages, and, in the rear of the procession, another sovereign's escort of 100 Life Guards.

INVITATION TO COLONIAL TROOPS.

It is estimated that sixty royal Princes will participate in the procession. The War Office has invited colonial officers and soldiers in England to march in it.

As the funeral will be of a military character, there will probably be no pall bearers, although, perhaps, certain Generals will act in this capacity while the coffin is being carried up the nave of St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

Yesterday there was a rehearsal along the route of the funeral procession. The eight Hanoverian horses which will draw the gun carriage took a heavily laden brake, estimated to be of the weight of the gun carriage and coffin, over the route. Numerous carriages followed, with a number of mounted men representing the foreign Princes and others who will ride in the procession.

Active preparations are being made all along the line of march. Houses are being draped, and seating accommodation is being provided. A committee of women has obtained permission to hang wreaths of evergreen along the line, one to be affixed to each lamppost, and all being three feet in diameter and of uniform pattern. The King's order that the draperies of buildings be purple has created some consternation, as many edifices here and elsewhere have already been hung with black.

The expense of making the alterations will be heavy. The supply of purple material is even now running short.

THE NAVAL DISPLAY.

Of all the ceremonies, no doubt the naval will be the finest pageant. The Alberta, carrying the body, will slowly steam along a line of battleships extending eight miles. Facing these giants of the British Navy will be smaller vessels and numerous foreign battleships. Whatever the weather may be, the spectacle of the body of Queen Victoria traversing a lane of warships—the guns of all booming—will be unique.

Minute guns will be fired from all ships in the Solent and at Cowes, commencing when the Alberta leaves Trinity Pier. Each ship will cease fire immediately the end of the procession passes her. After the procession has passed the battleship Majestic, the forts, and ships in Portsmouth harbor will in turn begin firing minute guns, and will continue to do so until the Alberta is alongside.

No standards will be displayed. Ensigns and Union Jacks will be half-masted. Admirals' flags will be fully hoisted.

As the procession passes each ship its crew will present arms and then rest on reversed arms until the procession has gone, the band meanwhile playing funeral marches.

THE FOREIGN WARSHIPS.

The following is the order of the foreign warships at the pageant: The Baden, Prince Henry of Prussia's flagship; the Hagen, the Victoria Luise, and the Nymphe, German; the Dupuy de Lome, French; the Hatsuse Japanese, and the Dom Carlos I., Portuguese.
